Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement I have prepared in explanation of House bill 6000; and, immediately following it, in the body of the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed a communication I have received from the president of the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies; a telegram from the vice chairman of the Iowa Employment Security Commission; a telegram from the secretary of labor and industry of Pennsylvania; a telegram from Mr. Ben T. Huiet, commissioner of labor of the State of Georgia; a copy of a telegram addressed to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] from Governor Aandahl, of North Dakota; a telegram from W. O. Hake, former administrator of the unemployment-compensation program for Tennessee; a letter from the chairman of the Industrial Commission of Wisconsin; a telegram from the chairman of the Maine Employment Security Commission; telegrams addressed to the two Senators from Mississippi by Mr. C. B. Cameron, executive director of the Mississippi Employment Security Commission; telegrams addressed to the Senators from Wyoming by the executive director of the Wyoming Employment Security Commission; a letter from Mr. Frank J. Collopy, administrator of the State of Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, together with telegrams addressed to the Senators from Ohio: a letter from Mr. Donald P. Miller, commissioner of labor of the State of Nebraska, together with a copy of a letter he has written to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]; a copy of a letter from the Department of Economic Security of the State of Kentucky, together with telegrams and letters sent to the Senators from the State of Kentucky; and a letter and copies of telegrams addressed to the Senators from West Virginia by the director of the West Virginia Department of Employment Security. I ask unanimous consent that all of them be made a part of my remarks in the body of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement, letters, and telegrams are as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KNOWLAND

SCOPE AND PURPOSE OF UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION AMENDMENT TO H. R. 6000 SUBMITTED BY SENATOR KNOWLAND

The scope of this amendment is very limited, and the changes it makes in existing law are more of a clarifying and procedural than of a substantive nature.

The unemployment-compensation provisions of the Social Security Act were deliberately designed to insure State, not Federal, unemployment-compensation systems. So as to encourage the enactment of State laws to this end, the Social Security Act provided—

First, that States having approved State laws would be entitled to grants of Federal funds for the administration of those laws; and Second, that employers in States having approved State laws would be entitled to a credit against a Federal unemployment-compensation tax of 90 percent of that tax.

The Federal law required only that the State law contain a series of specified provisions. The provisions required for tax credit are set out in note (1) at the end of this statement, and those required for administrative grants are set out in note (2) at the end of this statement. States that enacted laws containing these provisions had to be approved by the Federal agency having jurisdiction. This function of approval of State laws is in no way affected by the proposed amendment.

In addition to the function of initially approving State laws as containing the federally-required provisions, there is an additional function specified in the Federal law (sec. 1603 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code) which is to be exercised annually. This additional function is the function of annually certifying to the Secretary of the Treasury (for the purposes of the employer credit against the Federal tax) States whose laws have been previously approved provided they currently meet two standards—

First, the State must not have changed its law so that it no longer contains the federally required provisions.

Second, the State must not have failed to comply substantially with any such federally required provision.

Both the initial function of approving State laws, and the annual function of certifying State laws for the purpose of the credit against the Federal tax, are now vested in the Secretary of Labor. For the purposes of State eligibility for administrative grants, the Secretary of Labor also has the function of determining from time to time whether the State has denied unemployment compensation in a substantial number of cases to persons entitled thereto under the State law (sec. 303 (b) of the Social Security Act).

The effects of the proposed amendment on these various provisions can be simply stated.

The amendment first would make the phrase "changed its law" appearing in section 1603 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code read "amended its law." This change would clarify the meaning of the phrase and reaffirm the intention of Congress that only State legislative action shall be deemed to change the State law. This amendment is important in view of the fact that the Secretary of Labor has recently expressed the viewpoint that a mere administrative determination that can be appealed under the State law is a change in State law.

In performing his annual function of determining whether the State is "complying substantially" with the Federally-required provisions of the State law, the Secretary has likewise made plain that he now intends to hold that mere administrative actions that can be appealed under the State law may constitute a substantial failure on the part of the State to comply with a Federally-required provision, even though the final authority of the State has not spoken, nor even been given by the Secretary an opportunity to speak. Thus the Secretary now proposes, before the State as such has finally spoken, to make a day-to-day review of mere administrative determinations and to use a Federal club as a substitute for the normal, orderly review under the State law of administrative actions of State administrative officials.

The appealable State administrative actions which can involve a Federally-required provision of State law are for all practical purposes limited to claims actions within the scope of the provision set out in paragraph (5) of section 1603 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code. In order to preserve the integrity of the State administrative processes in this regard by requiring that there be an exhaustion of the State remedies, the proposed amendment contains the following provision:

"No finding of a failure to comply substantially with the provision in State law specified in paragraph (5) of subsection (a) shall be based on an application or interpretation of State law with respect to which further administrative or judicial review is provided for under the laws of the State."

This language applies solely to paragraph (5) of section 1603 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code and does not extend to the other five paragraphs in subsection (a), since those paragraphs can seldom if ever give rise to appealable claims. Furthermore, even as to paragraph (5), the Secretary retains all his present authority to review State actions which have gone through the review process provided in State law. The effect of this part of the amendment is merely to insure that the Secretary will not charge the State itself with a failure to comply with the Federally-required provisions in the State law because of an administrative interpretation or application of such provisions by State administrative officials unless and until the correctness or incorrectness of the administrative action has been decided by the highest State court having jurisdiction.

The amendment also proposes to insert a similar proviso in section 303 (b) of the Social Security Act (relating to State eligibility for administrative grants), since clause (1) of that section relates to appealable claims actions and involves the same principle as that involved in paragraph (5) of section 1603 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code. The amendment to section 303 (b) provides:

"Provided, That there shall be no finding under clause (1) until the question of entitlement shall have been decided by the highest judicial authority given jurisdiction under such State law: Provided further, That any costs may be paid with respect to any claimant by a State and included as costs of administration of its law."

It will be noted that this amendment includes the specific authority for the State to pay appeals costs of claimants and charge these as administrative expenses. This would relieve the contestant of any costs incident to pursuing a doubtful claim. This provision is more generous than is normally found in labor laws such as workmen's compensation, but I believe it to be desirable.

These changes do not deprive the Secretary of his authority to hold a State out of conformity with Federal requirements. They merely insure that the State appeal procedure will be completed and the State as such through its final authority would have spoken before the Secretary acts. Without these changes, a State, under the Secretary's interpretation of his existing authority, can be deprived of administrative grants and employers in the State be penalized by millions of dollars of additional Federal taxes, merely because of administrative mistakes. Such mistakes can and should, under State law, be reviewed by the State courts and remedied in the States themselves. The Secretary would merely be required to permit such State court review before he holds a hearing and penalizes the State and State employers.

Under the amendment the Secretary could not charge the State with failure to conform by virtue of actions which may be reversed on appeal, except where such appeal is taken and the State court thus afforded an opportunity to perform its statutory duty to correct the initial action.

The only other provision of the amendment is a proposed change in section 1603 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code so as to give a State 90 days to correct its law or its interpretation of its law after the Secretary of Labor holds the State out of conformity with the Federal requirements.

Subsection (c) of section 1603 of the Code, with this proposed change in black brackets would read as follows:

"(c) Certification: On December 31 of each taxable year the Administrator shall certify to the Secretary each State whose law he has previously approved, except that he shall not certify any State which, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, the Administrator finds has [amended] its law so that it no longer contains the provisions specified in subsection (a) or has with respect to such taxable year failed to comply substantially with any such provision [and such finding has become effective. Such finding shall become effective on the 90th day after the governor of the State has been notified thereof unless the State has before such 90th day so amended its law that it will comply substantially with the Secretary's interpretation of the provision of subsection (a), in which event such finding shall not become effective.] No finding of a failure to comply substantially with the provision in State law specified in paragraph (5) of subsection (a) shall be based on an application or interpretation of State law with respect to which further administrative or judicial review is provided for under the laws of the State."

Under existing law, if the Secretary holds a hearing and takes action near the December 31 deadline, it is impossible for the State to assemble its legislature and amend its law in time to escape the penalty imposed on it and the employers in the State for the State's being out of conformity. The amendment insures that a State will have 90 days in which to do this.

NOTE 1.—Provisions required by section 1603 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code to be in the State unemployment compensation laws for the 90 percent tax credit to be given against the Federal unemployment compensation tax to employers covered by the State system:

"SEC. 1603. Approval of State laws.

"(a) Requirements: The Administrator shall approve any State law submitted to him, within 30 days of such submission, which he finds provides that—

"(1) All compensation is to be paid through public employment offices or such other agencies as the Administrator may approve;

"(2) No compensation shall be payable with respect to any day of unemployment occurring within 2 years after the first day of the first period with respect to which contributions are required;

"(3) All money received in the unemployment fund shall (except for refunds of sums erroneously paid into such fund and except for refunds paid in accordance with the provisions of section 1606 (b)) immediately upon such receipt be paid over to the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of the Unemployment Trust Fund established by section 904 of the Social Security Act;

"(4) All money withdrawn from the unemployment fund of the State shall be used solely in the payment of unemployment compensation, exclusive of expenses of administration, and for refunds of sums erroneously paid into such fund and refunds paid in accordance with the provisions of section 1606 (b): Provided, That an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration;

"(5) Compensation shall not be denied in such State to any otherwise eligible individual for refusing to accept new work under any of the following conditions: (A) If the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (B) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; (C) if as a condition of being employed the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization;

"(6) All the rights, privileges, or immunities conferred by such law or by acts done pursuant thereto shall exist subject to the power of the legislature to amend or repeal such law at any time."

NOTE 2.—Provisions required by section 303 (a) of the Social Security Act to be in the State unemployment compensation laws for the State to receive Federal grants covering administrative expenses:

"'SEC. 303. (a) The Administrator shall make no certification for payment to any State unless he finds that the law of such State, approved by him under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, includes provision for—

"(1) Such methods of administration (including after January 1, 1940, methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Administrator shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compansation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are found by the Administrator to be reasonably calculated to insure full payment of unemployment compensation when due; and

"(2) Payment of unemployment compensation solely through public employment offices or such other agencies as the Administrator may approve; and

"(3) Opportunity for a fair hearing, before an impartial tribunal, for all individuals whose claims for unemployment compensation are denied; and

"(4) The payment of all money received in the unemployment fund of such State

(except for refunds of sums erroneously paid into such fund and except for refunds paid in accordance with the provisions of section 1606 (b) of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act), immediately upon such receipt, to the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of the Unemployment Trust Fund established by section 904; and

"(5) Expenditure of all money withdrawn from an unemployment fund of such State, in the payment of unemployment compensation, exclusive of expenses of administration, and for refunds of sums erroneously paid into such fund and refunds paid in accordance with the provisions of section 1606 (b) of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act: Provided, That an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration; and

"(6) The making of such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Administrator may from time to time require, and compliance with such provisions as the Administrator may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such report; and

"(7) Making available upon request to any agency of the United States charged with the administration of public works, or assistance through public employment, the name, address, ordinary occupation and employment status of each recipient of unemployment compensation, and a statement of such recipient's rights to further compensation under such law; and

"(8) Effective July 1, 1941, the expenditure of all moneys received pursuant to section 302 of this title solely for the purposes and in the amounts found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of such State law; and

"(9) Effective July 1, 1941, the replacement, within a reasonable time, of any moneys received pursuant to section 302 of this title, which, because of any action or contingency, have been lost or have been expended for purposes other than, or in amounts in excess of, those found necessary by the Administrator for the proper administration of such State law."

INTERSTATE CONFERENCE OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY AGENCIES,
Denver, Colo., June 13, 1950.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senator from California,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I have asked Mr. John Q. Rhodes, Jr., who is chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies to hand you this letter in reference to our proposed amendment to H. R. 6000 which you have so kindly consented to sponsor.

This matter was high lighted by the action of the Secretary of Labor in relation to the States of California and Washington in December 1949. Disregarding the merits of the contentions that administrative authorities in the two States had or had not given a correct interpretation to provisions in the State laws required by Federal statutes, State unemployment compensation administrators are of the opinion that the Secretary's action imposes a serious threat to the orderly administration of State laws. State officials do not believe that a question of conformance of State laws to Federal standards can properly be raised in circumstances in which judicial review of administrative determinations are afforded by State laws until the ultimate judicial authorities of the States have given their interpretation of State laws.

May I say that basically your amendment is designed to give the States only those privileges and rights they considered they were privileged to enjoy prior to the transfer of the Bureau of Employment Security to the Department of Labor. Prior to this transfer there was no instance in which a question of conformity with Federal standards was raised until after the State courts had given an interpretation of State laws—in those instances in which judicial review was provided by State laws. Likewise under circumstances where Federal-State relations did not involve interpretations by State courts the practice prior to the transfer had been to secure a ruling by State attorneys general as to the significance of provisions of State laws before any intercession by Federal officials. We believe this procedure to have been eminently reasonable, and your amendment simply seeks to give congressional confirmation to this orderly procedure.

On behalf of the Interstate Conference and myself personally may I extend deep appreciation for your interest and your efforts to protect the integrity of State unemployment compensation systems, and for the cooperation you have given our Mr. Rhodes.

With high esteem, I remain,
Sincerely yours,

BERNARD E. TEETS.

DES MOINES, IOWA, June 16, 1950.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

With reference to your amendment to H. R. 6000, we believe that a ruling of the Secretary of Labor that a State is out of conformity should be subject to review by Federal courts.

IOWA EMPLOYMENT SECURITY COMMISSION,
CARL B. STIGER,
Vice Chairman.

HARRISBURG, PA., June 16, 1950.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Post Office, Washington, D. C.:

Urge your support of amendment to H. R. 6000, introduced by Senator W. F. KNOWLAND, of California, which provides, in effect, that the Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed item.

WILLIAM H. CHESTNUT,
State Secretary of Labor and Industry.

ATLANTA, GA., June 16, 1950.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building:

Amendment of H. R. 6000, providing no State job insurance law shall be held out of conformity by virtue of an appealable action until the State court has passed on disputed items. State administrators consider this not only desirable but most just and proper.

BEN T. HUIET,
Commission of Labor of Georgia.

JUNE 16, 1950.

Senator MILTON R. YOUNG,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Information at hand indicates Knowland amendment to H. R. 6000 desirable. Most effective administration of unemployment compensation comes with a maximum of local control.

FRED G. AANDAHL,
Governor of North Dakota.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 18, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

As former administrator of the unemployment-compensation program for Tennessee and vitally interested in preserving the present State programs, I urge you to support the present State programs, I urge you to support the George loan fund as contained in H. R. 6000 rather than the reinsurance provision of H. R. 8059; also strongly urge support of Senator KNOWLAND'S amendment to H. R. 6000, which would prevent unwarranted interference by Secretary of Labor in State administrative and judicial procedures.

W. O. HAKE.

THE STATE OF WISCONSIN,
INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION,
Madison, June 16, 1950.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: We understand that you are submitting an amendment to H. R. 6000 designed to assure due process before any Federal official can hold a State unemployment compensation law to be out of conformity with Federal requirements.

We strongly favor the enactment of the safeguards you propose.

Finding a State law out of conformity is mighty serious business.

It usually involves many thousands of employers, by denying them millions in Federal tax credits. It could also suspend benefit payments to thousands of jobless workers, by cutting off the funds needed to operate the State unemployment law.

Such a serious step should not be taken lightly. It should be adequately safeguarded, in line with our American tradition of due process of law.

We therefore hope that your amendment will be enacted.

Sincerely,
INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF WISCONSIN,
VOYTA WRABETZ, Chairman.

JUNE 16, 1950.

Senator OWEN BREWSTER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

This agency is in accord with amendment to H. R. 6000 by Senator KNOWLAND and will appreciate your voting for same.

MAINE EMPLOYMENT SECURITY COMMISSION,
L. C. FORTIER, Chairman.

JACKSON, MISS., June 16, 1950.

Senator JAMES O. EASTLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Am informed that Senator W. F. KNOWLAND, of California, will introduce amendment to H. R. 6000 providing in effect that Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity under Social Security and Wagner-Peyser Acts until State courts have passed on disputed items. Respectfully urge that you support Senator KNOWLAND'S amendment.

C. B. CAMERON,
Executive Director, Mississippi Employment Security Commission.

JUNE 16, 1950.

Hon. LESTER C. HUNT,
Senator, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I have been informed that Senator KNOWLAND, of California, will introduce an amendment to H. R. 6000 providing in effect that the Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding a State out of conformity with the Federal act until the State courts have passed on the disputed items. The employment security commission approved a resolution on this subject at a recent meeting and we urge you to support this amendment.

CHESTER P. SORENSEN,
Executive Director, Employment Security Commission of Wyoming.

STATE OF OHIO,
BUREAU OF UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION,
Columbus, Ohio, June 16, 1950.

The Honorable W. F. KNOWLAND,
Member, United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: Enclosed are copies of telegrams which I sent today to Senators TAFT and BRICKER, of Ohio, in regard to the amendment you are introducing in connection with H. R. 6000.

I hope the Senate concurs in your amendment.

With every good wish, I am
Sincerely yours,

FRANK J. COLLOPY,
Administrator.

JUNE 16, 1950.

The Honorable ROBERT A. TAFT,
Member, United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND, of California, will introduce amendment to House Resolution 6000 providing in effect that Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed items. Urge your support for this amendment.

FRANK J. COLLOPY,
Administrator, Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
DIVISION OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY,
Lincoln, June 16, 1950.

Hon. W. F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I am enclosing a copy of a letter I have written to Senator BUTLER and Senator WHERRY.

I appreciate very much the fact that you have introduced the amendment. It would have been wise if such a law had been passed years ago.

Very truly yours,

DONALD P. MILLER,
Commissioner of Labor.

JUNE 16, 1950.

Senator KENNETH S. WHERRY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WHERRY: When the Secretary of Labor finds that a State unemployment insurance law is being interpreted or administered in such a manner that he feels that it does not conform to Federal standards he can, in effect, virtually suspend the operation of the State law until his objections are met.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND has introduced an amendment to H. R. 6000 providing in effect that the Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity in the interpretation or administration of their unemployment insurance laws until the State courts have passed on the disputed items.

In case a State is found to be out of conformity, benefits might be suspended and the employers' tax would be greatly increased. The possible penalties for nonconformity are so great that I think it wise that our court should pass on these matters.

I understand that the Knowland amendment will be voted upon next Tuesday, June 20. Your support of this amendment will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

DONALD P. MILLER,
Commissioner of Labor.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC SECURITY,
Frankfort, June 16, 1950.

Hon. W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I am enclosing a copy of the telegram I sent to both of Kentucky's Senators, together with a copy of the letter that followed.

A carbon copy of the letter was sent to each of Kentucky's Members of Congress with the hope that they may be able to contribute, in some way, to the passage of this much-needed legislation.

Very truly yours,

V. E. BARNES,
Commissioner.

FRANKFORT, June 16, 1950.

Senator VIRGIL CHAPMAN,
Senator GARRETT WITHERS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND, of California, will introduce amendment to H. R. 6000 providing in effect that Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed items. Urge that you support this amendment. Letter follows.

V. E. BARNES,
Commissioner, Department of Economic Security.

JUNE 16, 1950.

Hon. GARRETT L. WITHERS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR GARRETT: In order to protect State administrative and judicial processes in the unemployment-insurance program, I want to urge your support of the Knowland amendment to H. R. 6000. Senator KNOWLAND will present his amendment from the floor, and in brief it is designed to do the following:

Make clear that—

1. A change in a State law can be accomplished only by legislative action;

2. That a State's failure to comply with its law (as interpreted by the Secretary of Labor) or its action in substantially denying benefits when due under the law of a State can be the concern of the Secretary only after affected parties have pursued the full remedies (administrative and judicial) provided in the law of the State; and

3. That a State be given a reasonable opportunity (90 days) to conform its law or interpretations relating thereto to the Secretary's ruling after he had ruled its law or interpretations out of conformity with Federal standards.

I want to also urge reenactment of the so-called George loan fund as recommended by the Senate Finance Committee, and defeat of any effort to substitute in lieu thereof the Federal reinsurance provision in H. R. 8059. Other features of H. R. 8059 will prove detrimental to a sound program of unemployment insurance.

I know that it is not necessary for me to enter into a lengthy explanation of the importance of the State's protection in the administration of a program so vital to our economic stability, and I feel certain that you will unhesitatingly give your support to the Knowland amendment and the reenactment of the George loan fund.

With kindest personal regards, I am,
Sincerely yours.

V. E. BARNES,
Commissioner.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY,
Charleston, W. Va., June 16, 1950.

Hon. W. F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: We take the liberty of enclosing herewith copies of telegrams which we have today sent to Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY and Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE, United States Senate, relative to amendment to H. R. 6000 which we are advised you will introduce in the Senate, providing in effect that the Secretary of Labor be precluded from holding States out of conformity with the Social Securit Act until the courts have passed on propriety of such action.

Yours very truly,

C. S. DAVIS,
Director.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., June 16, 1950.

Hon. MATTHEW M. NEELY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Am advised that amendment will be introduced by Senator W. F. KNOWLAND, California, to H. R. 6000, providing in effect that Secretary of Labor be precluded from holding States out of conformity with Social Security Act until courts have passed on propriety of such action. Am fully in sympathy with purpose of proposed amendment and urge your active support thereof in fairness to State employment security agencies.

C. S. DAVIS,
Director, Department of Employment Security.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to consider some aspects of the pending bill, H. R. 6000, which has been so ably discussed during the past few days. The Senate Finance Committee and its staff deserve great praise for the thorough and intelligent manner with which they have dealt with the complex problems involved in overcoming the deficiencies of our present social-security program. I should like to pay especial tribute to the able and distinguished Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], whose explanatory statements of the revisions recommended by the committee have made such a significant contribution to our understanding of this problem. I agree with them that we should continue the study and investigation of social security problems, and I give my fullest support to Senate Resolution No. 300, which they have submitted for that purpose.

The amendments recommended by the committee are, in my judgment, generally sound and clearly directed to the three major faults in the social-security program. Benefits are materially increased, eligibility requirements are liberalized, and coverage is considerably widened. While there may be points on which I would take issue with the committee's recommendation, on the whole I feel that the committee has dealt with a most difficult problem in a most convincing manner. It is my purpose to support the legislation recommended, subject to one or two variations which I shall cover in my remarks.

Mr. President, in light of the very full and convincing manner in which this whole matter has been presented and the months of study that have gone into the development of the committee's recommendations, I would hesitate even to attempt to make comments on my own account, especially when I feel so much less qualified to speak than those who have spoken before me. But, Mr. President, the philosophy on which our social-security program is based goes to the very heart of one of the most significant issues facing us today. How can we make sure that programs designed primarily to protect the security of our people will also give adequate attention to the traditional freedoms and individual incentives that have been such a vital and essential part of our national heritage? It is because I feel that this is an issue of such tremendous importance that I desire to comment briefly on the over-all objectives of a sound social-security program. Let me state at the beginning that what I fear most would be a tendency to take the line of least resistance and to slide almost unconsciously into a pay-as-you-go, flat rate, universal pension plan.

Unfortunately, but inevitably, our social-security problems have become complex and highly specialized. It is most difficult for one who cannot give concentrated and continuing study to these problems to wade through the maze of formulae, conversion tables, eligibility requirements, and actuarial estimates, and at the same time to keep clearly in mind the basic objectives of the legislation. In an understandable search for an easier, simpler approach to the problem, a system of universal, flat pensions appears as an attractive alternative.

Mr. President, this might indeed appear to be a better solution on the surface, but I am convinced that it is a dangerous solution—one that would violate the basic and truly American principles upon which our social-security program must rest.

In trying to appraise my thinking on social-security problems, I have attempted to get the advice of those who have specialized in this field. I have found especially helpful the reports of the advisory councils appointed by the Senate Finance Committee in 1937 and 1947. I have been impressed with the objective manner in which these councils have approached the subject and with the varied background and superlative qualifications of the members of the councils, which were stressed by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] last Tuesday. I think it would be well to take especial note of the fact that representatives of organized labor, together with representatives of management and the public, played an important role in these councils. We should encourage the constructive participation of our great labor unions in our quest for solutions to our social and economic problems. I have the privilege of a personal acquaintance with many of the members of the 1947 council.

I am especially indebted, Mr. President, to J. Douglas Brown, dean of the faculty and director of the industrial relations section of Princeton University. Dean Brown has been a close friend of mine for many years, and I have discussed our social-security program with him on many occasions. I have the greatest respect for his opinions on this subject, both because he has given it concentrated study for a number of years and because I know that his conclusions are based on a deep conviction that a sound social-security program must rest on fundamental American principles. He served with distinction as a member of the Committee on Economic Security in 1934 and 1935, as chairman of the first advisory council on social Security in 1937 and 1938, and as a public member of the most recent advisory council in 1947 and 1948.

Mr. President, on December 9, 1949, in New York City, at the fiftieth anniversary dinner of the National Consumers League, Dean Brown made an outstanding address on the underlying principles of a sound social-security program entitled "Cooperation Versus Paternalism." In this address the speaker brought out so clearly the main point I am now insisting on that I ask unanimous consent that the address in question be published in full in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. Let me quote in full the past paragraph of that important address which highlights the choice that is facing the American people in the pending legislation:

> The critical question is: Will the American people take the right road in the choice between the cooperative as opposed to the paternalistic welfare state? Will they through ignorance or a softening of our moral fibers take the primrose path to state paternalism? A decade or a century from now men may look back and say that the decision was made in the year 1950. The America of that time will be a vastly different Nation according to the decision we make in the months immediately ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the address referred to by the Senator from New Jersey will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, we are faced today with the necessity of devising a social-security program that will lead to the cooperative rather than to the paternalistic welfare state. What kind of social-security measures, we must ask ourselves, best fit the American way of life? Dean Brown describes in a most succinct and constructive fashion the foundation stones upon which our social-security system should rest. He says:

> Accumulating experience indicates that the survival of democratic capitalism depends upon the genius of man in combining three essential ingredients:
>
> 1. Individual incentive.
> 2. Mutual responsibility.
> 3. An effective framework against the corroding fear of insecurity.

Mr. President, I am not an economist a statistician, or an actuary. I do not pretend to be an expert on all the details of the legislation we are now considering. But because I think it is essential that we base our thinking on the type of objectives suggested by Dean Brown, I would like to analyze the major principles of our social-security legislation and the proposed amendments in the light of these objectives. Are we designing our social-security program so as to combine the three "essential ingredients" of "individual incentive, mutual responsibility and an effective framework against the corroding fear of insecurity?" Let me take up these ingredients in order.

1. INDIVIDUAL INCENTIVE

Mr. President, in the presentations on the floor of the Senate since this debate began, I have, perhaps erroneously, gotten the impression that some of us are thinking along the lines of least resistance because of the complexity of this problem. There seem to be suggestions that we should change our admittedly complicated system into a pay-as-you-go, flat rate, universal pension plan for everybody over age 65.

We have heard much in recent years about so-called free pensions of the Townsendite variety. Of course they are not free in the sense that social security can be achieved by some magic formula without cost. Any program that provides benefits for our aged must be paid for by the taxes of those who are working and producing, and its economic soundness is and must be dependent upon the economic soundness of the country.

However, one of the distinguishing and dangerous characteristics of all of the flat-rate, paternalistic pension plans is their failure to relate the pension benefits in any way to the past productivity of the beneficiary—measured, for instance, in terms of previous earnings. In such arrangements it is clear that the essential ingredient of individual incentive plays no part. Fifty or a hundred—or perhaps even two hundred—dollars a month for everyone over 65. It sounds enticing. It can be political dynamite to the American way of life. It would definitely mean a long step toward the paternalistic welfare state which Dean Brown and others warn us against.

How does our present social-security program differ in this respect from these flat-rate pension plans? Stated very simply, it does so primarily by relating benefits to past earnings and thus to the contribution the beneficiary has made to the economic system that must pay for his benefits. We pay a price, to be sure, for this characteristic, just as we pay a price for the essential freedoms of a democracy. We must keep detailed records of earnings; we must devise complicated administrative systems to handle these records and to determine eligibility; in the early years of the system we must make practical compromises in this principle to assure adequate protection to older workers who are newly covered. But I believe this price is well worth paying and that a truly American social-security program must retain the basic principle of relating benefits in some fashion to past earnings.

In this connection, I am concerned about the failure of our Finance Committee to recommend an increase in the wage base from $3,000. An overwhelming majority of the Advisory Council recommended an increase to $4,200 to maintain reasonable differentials in benefits in light of the greatly increased wage level. I understand that under the proposal of the committee almost half of the regularly employed male workers would receive practically the same dollar benefit. Although a wage base of $4,200 would not allow large differentials, I believe it would give sufficient recognition to the higher paid worker to prevent the ultimate destruction of the principle of maintaining a minimum relationship between the contribution the beneficiary has made to the society of which he is a part and the benefit he receives. I feel that relationship is vital for us to preserve.

Let me emphasize at this point, Mr. President, that we are attempting here to strike a practical balance between essential and, to some extent, superficially conflicting principles. We want to provide a minimum security base without destroying the individual's incentive. If we move in the direction of flat benefits I fear we may also be inevitably faced with a powerful demand in future years for a level of benefits far above this minimum base.

I now come to Dean Brown's second essential ingredient:

2. MUTUAL RESPONSIBILITY

One of our greatest strengths in this country has been our determination that each of us must bear a major part of the burden of taking care of ourselves and our families while, at the same time, we are willing to cooperate with others so that we can lighten the total burden where practical. Thus, American citizens recognize that their responsibility extends beyond their own narrow, short-term self-interest, and encompasses the welfare of all citizens.

Our social-security program embodies this doctrine of mutual responsibility in at least two ways. In the first place, the benefit formula is weighted to allow a larger return for the lower-income worker in relation to his contribution to the whole system. In the second place, social-security costs are shared by the individual by means of significant and direct contributions made by him on the basis of a recognized percentage pay-roll deduction.

Here again we find the free paternalistic pension plans are in fundamental conflict with an American social-security system. Paternalistic pension plans could actually be set up and made to depend on an unidentified and indirect levy on the taxpayers, and allow the country to be bled white before their true cost was appreciated. Under such conditions the contributory principle would be completely thrown out of the window, and there would be no immediate and tangible charge on the income of the participants to sustain the program.

The contributory principle, which I consider essential to a sound, American social-security program, is probably the most difficult one to apply successfully on a national basis. The reason for this is that we have not yet found a way to preserve this principle and to put the plan immediately on a reasonably pay-as-you-go basis, which, of course, I should like to see happen. I believe we must move toward a pay-as-you-go basis, but I would not want to lose the contributory system.

According to the "intermediate" estimates of the committee, under the amendments they propose, the so-called trust fund would increase to about $72,000,000,000 by 1990 and then would start down. I am hopeful that the commission proposed in Senate Resolution 300, introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], will discover a practical way to approach a more nearly pay-as-you-go plan than is contemplated in the committee amendments. It would appear to me that some modification in the tax schedule proposed by the committee will help to achieve this result. I am frank to admit, however, that I have not thought of a satisfactory solution to this perplexing problem.

That is another indication of why the plan which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] have suggested should be followed through on this subject.

Let me now turn to Dean Brown's third "essential ingredient":

3. EFFECTIVE FRAMEWORK AGAINST FEAR OF INSECURITY

In a real sense, of course, our over-all social-security program, by its very name, indicates that its major objective is to provide minimum safeguards for the security of individuals in a complex and highly interdependent economy. I have pointed out previously that this objective must be balanced against other objectives which are fundamental to our American way of life.

The question I should like to raise at this point, then, is whether or not a worker who is totally and permanently disabled should be included within the framework of our contributory program. I do not think that there is any doubt about the need for protection against this major economic hazard. The only question is whether it should be handled through a decentralized State-administered program or as an integral part of our Federal contributory program.

Mr. President, in the limited time available to me to analyze this problem, I have reached the tentative conclusion that the evidence supporting the inclusion of permanent and total disability protection in our contributory program is not yet sufficient to overbalance the tremendous administrative and political problems that such inclusion would raise. Let me stress, Mr. President, that this is only a tentative conclusion, and that I think the commission proposed in Senate Resolution 300 should give a high priority to the consideration of the question of whether at some future time we should include total disability in our contributory plan.

I am aware of the fact that a majority of the Advisory Council recommended that the time has come to take this step. I find the memorandum of dissent by two members of the Council most convincing, however.

I am especially concerned about the difficulty of evaluating permanent and total disability and about the possibility of political pressure tending to weaken the safeguards that have been proposed to prevent the abuse of the plan. My concern should not be interpreted necessarily as indicating a lack of faith in the honesty and conscientiousness of those who would administer the program or in the power of our elected officials to resist unjustified political pressure. I am simply attempting to be realistic and to face squarely the probability that there would be many border-line cases that would inevitably be subject to conflicting opinions.

There are, to be sure, serious social disadvantages in the administration of aid to disabled persons on an assistance basis. I have always favored the replacement of the public assistance portions of our social-security program where practical with systematic protection based on the contributory principle. It is true, moreover, that the forced retirement of the permanently and totally disabled individual is closely related to retirement due to old age. In fact, the economic impact of income loss due to disability is far more serious than is normally the case with regular retirement. In spite of these points, I think that the arguments for meeting the problem at the State level are more compelling.

I feel very strongly that before we embark on a program of Federal contributory disability protection, every effort should be made to encourage the States to establish an effective decentralized system for disability assistance. Only if such efforts are actively pursued, and if future experience proves that State programs are not doing an effective job in this area, would the conclusion be justified that the Federal Government should step in as has been proposed.

Mr. President, I have purposely avoided the use of the words "social insurance" in this discussion. I have done so because I think these words tend to cause confusion and misinterpretation. A national social-security system cannot operate on the same basis as a private insurance program. The contributions of today's workers cannot be successfully held in reserve to be used in paying benefits to these same workers in future years. But it is possible, I believe, for the contributions of today's workers to be directly identified with a system of old-age benefits in such a way that this identification will serve as a constant reminder that contributions and benefits are interdependent. Furthermore, by maintaining the essential relationship between previous earnings and ultimate benefits, we can avoid the enticing but dangerous alternative of a universal equalization of benefits and preserve the truly American character of our social-security system. We can, Mr. President, avoid the paternalistic welfare state and, instead, work for a cooperative welfare state that is consistent with democratic capitalism.

It is not an easy task to find solutions to our social-security problems, and, as I said above, I am far from qualified to discuss the detailed factual questions that are raised by those who have studied and specialized in this field. But as I have analyzed the basic objectives that an American social-security program must have, I have become convinced that we must steer away from a universal, noncontributory pension system in which the benefits bear no relation to the past contribution made by the beneficiaries to the society.

It is usually true that the safest and wisest course is the least convenient and the most challenging. I hope that the complexity of our social and economic problems will never hide from us the fundamental American principles on which their solution must be based. In our search for sound social security we must devise a system worthy of a free and responsible people.

EXHIBIT A

COOPERATION VERSUS PATERNALISM—ADDRESS DELIVERED DECEMBER 9, 1949, BY J. DOUGLAS BROWN, DEAN OF FACULTY, PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

I would like to take my text tonight from the political bible of the United States of America, the first verse.

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

It is interesting to note the words in the text which are capitalized in the quaint old manner of 1787. They are Union, Justice, Tranquility, Welfare and Liberty. It appears, therefore, that the concept that our national state should, among other endeavors, concern itself in the welfare of its citizens, was deep in the minds and hearts of its founders.

In recent months, the designation "welfare state" has come to be used with a note of censure. There has been an attempt to put the term across the tracks. But the critics of the welfare state have not been exact in their indictment. Do they mean (a) that the general welfare is not a goal in democratic government? I don't think so. (b) Do they mean that welfare for some has been assured through the impairment of justice to others? Perhaps. Or (c), do they mean that welfare has been promoted at the price of liberty? Perhaps.

The criticism of the so-called welfare state is then not properly aimed at the purpose of welfare. It is and should be aimed at the manner in which welfare is attained and assured.

The criticism against the welfare state is leveled most often by people who have not taken the trouble to study and support the ways under democratic capitalism by which welfare can be assured the great majority—without the impairment of justice to others or the loss of liberty by those whose welfare is assured.

The criticism is really against the paternalistic welfare state—made paternalistic by political pressure arising because of unwillingness on the part of many to promote the progress of a cooperative welfare state.

The paternalistic welfare state is not consistent with the American form of democratic capitalism. It would, in time, break down individual incentive and mutual responsibility. Its end is either stagnation or dictatorship. The Santa Claus state may become the Stalin state.

The cooperative welfare state is consistent with democratic capitalism. It supports mutual self-help, taxation with representation; it sustains justice among our people, and avoids a loss of freedom by the person whose way of life is assured. It seeks to prevent dependency before it occurs, and where dependency does occur, to deal with it constructively. It is my firm conviction that the American people want to sustain democratic capitalism under a cooperative welfare state.

It is the challenge to statesmen, administrators, and social scientists to learn how to implement this common desire of the American people. The answer is action, not charges and countercharges about welfare. We need the finest arts of policy development and administrative planning. We need courage for dynamic experimentation and progress in the development of the contributory social insurances, for example, just as we need courage for experimentation with nuclear energy. We need the one for sustaining justice, welfare, and liberty, just as we need the other to provide for the common defense.

The cooperative welfare state must be concerned with many other endeavors—the self-financing aid of housing, power development, irrigation, highways, hospitals, adult educational services, etc. It is the effort of a free people, through the organization of the state, to help each other in areas where private enterprise alone is insufficient.

There is no question but that private enterprise is the most efficient framework of activity in the vast, major areas of economic life. It assures incentive, flexibility, and progress in providing the means for general welfare. But where private enterprise is not enough, and where public action is necessary in the area of general welfare, it is important to the survival of democratic capitalism that as much as possible be accomplished by cooperative action rather than ex parte paternalistic action. States, like individuals, are tempted to become paternalistic. The higher calling is to use our intelligence and our energies to help people help themselves. That mission, successfully accomplished, will promote justice, welfare, and liberty, under democratic capitalism in a cooperative welfare state.

What kind of social security measures best fit the American way of life? Accumulating experience indicates that the survival of democratic capitalism depends upon the genius of man in combining three essential ingredients:

1. Individual incentive.
2. Mutual responsibility.
3. An effective framework against the corroding fear of insecurity.

In the agricultural period in the development of America, individual incentive was the most important of these three ingredients. The farmer and the shopkeeper of colonial days thrived because of individual incentive, and the simple economy thrived with them. The factory system and the coming of the railroads and other public utilities introduced new and intricate relationships of mutual responsibility. And now vast aggregations of interdependent activities by their very size and the impact of impersonal forces upon individuals necessitate greatly enhanced safeguards against arbitrary and overwhelming contingencies.

But no social security system is safe or conducive to the survival of democratic capitalism that does not sustain the other two ingredients essential to survival—individual incentive and mutual responsibility.

The American system of social security must, therefore, be built around social insurance and not dependency relief or free benefits such as sought by those who favor Townsendism. To preserve incentive, social-insurance benefits must be related to past productivity—employment and earnings with real differentials according to the degree to which the individual has contributed to the society to which he is a part. To preserve mutual responsbility, social-insurance costs must be shared by the individual insured through a direct, immediate, and tangible charge upon his income. So far as is possible, protection must be an earned and individual right, a specific protection against dependency, not a sugar-coated form of paternalistic relief, whether provided on a retail or a wholesale basis. Dependency relief will still be needed in many cases, but we must build on an effective structure of contributory social insurances to reduce constantly the scope of dependency relief.

In summary, then, an urban, industrial society demands a framework against the corroding fear of insecurity. A democratic, capitalistic society demands a social-security system in which individual incentive and mutual responsibility are preserved. The only mechanism yet invented to meet these two pressing demands is contributory social insurance with benefits varying with the earnings of the insured. That is the mechanism of a cooperative welfare state and a bulwark against the growing pressure toward a paternalistic state.

The critical question is: Will the American people take the right road in the choice between the cooperative as opposed to the paternalistic welfare state? Will they through ignorance or a softening of our moral fibers take the primrose path to state paternalism? A decade or a century from now men may look back and say that the decision was made in the year 1950. The America of that time will be a vastly different nation according to the decision we make in the months immediately ahead.

EXTENSION OF THE TERM OF CERTAIN PATENTS HELD BY VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents held by veterans of World War II, which was submitted on March 22, 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). The conference report will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the same.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,
HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOSEPH R. BRYSON,
EDWIN E. WILLIS,
J. CALEB BOGGS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, this matter is a very simple one. As the Senate passed the bill, it extended the term of patents held by members of the armed services for an additional amount of time equal to the amount of time they spent in the services. On the other hand, the bill, as passed by the House, would have extended the term for twice that long. The conferees, after having met, have agreed with the position taken by the House of Representatives. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the chairman of our subcommittee, has gone to the hospital; and he has asked me to present the conference report, which is unanimously agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. President, by way of further explanation, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum relative to this matter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM TO SENATOR JAMES O. EASTLAND, RE H. R. 4692, A BILL TO EXTEND PATENTS HELD BY VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II, MAY 1, 1950

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

Passed the House on August 15, 1949. Reported to the Senate favorably with an amendment by Senate Judiciary on October 17, 1950, and passed the Senate as reported the following day. Senate insisted on its amendment and requested a conference. Messrs. EASTLAND, Chairman, O'CONOR and WILEY were appointed Senate conferees. On March 22, 1950, conference report was filed in Senate and on April 5, 1950, it was filed in the House.

PARLIAMENTARY SITUATION

Under the rules the Senate must act first. It is a privileged matter and can be called up by any Senator, although the chairman of the conference is generally considered to hold the initiative.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

To provide for an extension of the life of patents issued to veterans of World War II on the theory that their service would have in many cases precluded them an opportunity to exploit their patents during that period.

The act of May 31, 1928 (35 U. S. C. 40a-40d) provided similar patent-extension privileges to Veterans of World War I. The reported bill is similar in essential respects to the earlier law. The legislation calls for no additional appropriations and in some measure makes restitution for the sacrifices of wartime service.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

Section 1 of the bill would permit a person who served honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States for all or part of the period between December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, and to whom had been issued or who has continuously owned since a time prior to September 2, 1945, a patent whose original term had not expired before the latter date, to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the term of his patent equal to twice that portion of his military or naval service between the dates of December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, during which his patent was in force.

Section 2 explains the method of making application to the Commissioner of Patents, the fee required, and the information and documentation to be submitted when making the application. It also provides for the succession of rights where the veteran patentee dies or becomes mentally incompetent.

Section 3 provides for the examination of the application by the Commissioner of Patents, the publication of notice of such application, the filing of opposition within 45 days after publication of notice, the hearing on the opposition, the remedy of the unsuccessful applicant by appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the ultimate insurance of the extension by the Commissioner of Patents, and publication of notice of the extension.

Section 4 provides that a false statement in the verified application will constitute a valid defense in a suit by the patentee for infringement occurring within the period of extension. The section precludes the patentee benefited by an extension from making any claim against the United States for the period of the extension, and preserves the status quo of the rights of the United States as if such patent had not been extended. This section also protects the innocent persons who might unwittingly and legally be manufacturing a patented invention after the expiration of its original term and then finds that the extension of the period creates a technical infringement. In such cases the continued manufacture is permitted, subject only to the payment of a reasonable royalty.

CONFERENCE DATA

As passed the House the bill granted a patent extension equal to twice the veteran patent holder's military or naval service between the dates of December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, during which his patent was in force. The Senate amendment limited the war veteran patentee's extension to once his war service rather than twice. This caused the conference. Upon study it was considered that the House version was fairer than that of the Senate for the obvious reason that almost 5 years have elapsed since the termination of the war as defined in the bill (September 2, 1945). Thus, a veteran patentee, with 3 years' war service, whose patent expired in 1945, would have it extended to 1948 under the Senate bill, to 1951 under the House bill. Obviously, the Senate version would afford no relief for the above class of patentees. The following paragraph from the statement of the managers on the part of the House (H. Rept. 1880) states the reason for the Senate's recession from its amendment being substantially that stated above couched in different language:

"The Senate amendment to the bill would have reduced the period of the proposed extension of patents for veterans of World War II from twice the period of their service between certain dates to a length of time only equaling the period of service between those dates. This would have inadvertently deprived many veterans of their rights because in many cases the period represented by the Senate amendment would have already expired. The effect of the Senate receding from its amendment is to restore the bill to precisely the form in which it passed the House.

"JOSEPH R. BRYSON,
"E. E. WILLIS,
"J. CALEB BOGGS,
"Managers on the Part of the House."

GENERAL

All conferees, House and Senate, have signed the report. Both the House and Senate Judiciary Committees found the legislation noncontroversial. The bill passed the Senate Consent Calendar on the first call. The file contains no opposition correspondence, and has some dozen letters in favor. It is believed the legislation is noncontroversial.

Informal discussion with the Patent Office reveals their actual position is one of disinterest and neutrality. If asked formally to report, they would take a mild adverse position to remain consistent in their historical stand against extension of private patents. However, when asked "off the record" they believe it is more or less a matter of legislative policy.

ROBERT B. YOUNG.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000), to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk amendments intended to be proposed by myself, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], which would provide a wage base of $4,800 for the old-age and survivors insurance program, and amendments intended to be proposed by myself, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] providing for the establishment of a program of Federal grants for medical assistance payments to the needy, to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I have prepared a statement on amendments to the pending social-security measure, including explanatory statements on each of the amendments I have introduced, have joined in introducing, or which I support. Because of the time limitations, I ask unanimous consent to introduce my covering statement and my explanatory statements on these amendments into the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN ON CERTAIN AMENDMENTS TO H. R. 6000, THE SOCIAL SECURITY BILL; AND STATEMENTS ON INDIVIDUAL AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, I have joined with some of my colleagues in sponsoring liberalizing amendments to the pending social-security bill, H. R. 6000. I hope that the Senate will see fit to adopt all these amendments, and thus give to H. R. 6000 a broader scope and more liberal application than is provided under the terms of the pending measure.

Having undertaken, in H. R. 6000, to extend the coverage of old-age insurance to additional millions of our people, we should not fail to include all those who are in need of this essential protection and who can practicably be covered.

We should include as employees under this legislation all those individuals who work for wages, commissions, or payments, regardless of the legalistic form given to the contractual relationship between them and their employers. Such categories would include wholesale salesmen, homeworkers, and agent-drivers.

Nor should we overlook this opportunity, this occasion, for strengthening social security at its most vulnerable point, by including provision for disability insurance, to meet the needs of those already covered but who become, because of total and permanent physical disability, unable to continue to earn their livelihood before they reach the age of 65.

We must not lose sight of our objective—which is to provide social security for the greatest possible number of our citizens, and to extend as widely as possible the system to which we are committed, namely, a system of sound reserves, based on contributions by both employer and employee, which will provide protection for the greatest possible number of our people against insecurity in old age, and, I hope, in disability.

In improving and extending the insurance system, we must also make that system as attractive as possible, and provide recognition for the number of years spent in gainful employment. This is the reason for the pending amendment on increments. It would be un-American, in my judgment, to provide the same old-age benefit payment for the man who has contributed for 20 years and for the man who has contributed for 4 years.

On the same basis and for the same reasons, I appeal for the approval of the pending amendment to increase the wage base on which the taxes are to be computed, and on which the benefits are to be based. We must recognize the difference in wage levels today as against 10 years ago. The levels provided in the present law and in the committee measure are unrealistic. A ceiling of $4,800 would be perfectly sound and would recognize the increase in monetary wage levels in America today.

I also strongly urge an amendment I have submitted to include Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands under all the provisions of the Social Security Act, those now in effect and those under consideration. I believe that these citizens of ours, living in these two Territories, need social security as much, if not more, than citizens on the mainland. I do not believe that we should discriminate against these people in this legislation. I believe that the public-assistance grants provided in the pending legislation should certainly be made available to these two Territories on the same basis as it is made available to Hawaii, Alaska, or the States of the Union.

I recognize that time for debate on these great questions is limited and will be even more severely limited tomorrow. That is well because this legislation must be disposed of, in favor of other legislation which awaits our attention.

Hence I have prepared separate statements bearing on some of the amendments whose approval I urge, and regarding which I may not have an opportunity to speak at any length at a later time.

The first series of these statements is addressed to those amendments of which I am the principal sponsor. They include:

1. Amendment to include tips as wages in computing social-security benefits.
2. Amendment to include wholesale outside salesmen as "employees" for the purposes of the old-age and survivors insurance program.
3. Amendment to include certain groups of agent-drivers as "employees" for the purposes of the old-age and survivors insurance program.
4. Amendment to include "homeworkers" under the provisions of old-age and survivors insurance program.
5. Amendment to include under old-age and survivors insurance program domestics who work a minimum of 6 days in any one quarter for a single employer who receive as wages from that employer a minimum of $50 during that quarter.
6. Amendment to include Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands under public-assistance provisions including aid to the blind, the needy aged, the disabled, and the dependent children.
7. Amendment to provide Federal grants for medical care to the needy, on the basis recommended by the Senate advisory council on social security.

The second series of statements deals with amendments of which I am a cosponsor. These amendments are:

1. Amendment to increase the wage base for old-age and survivors insurance.
2. Amendment to provide for an increase in old-age and survivors insurance benefits, based on years of participation and contribution to the old-age and survivors insurance fund.
3. Amendment to authorize old-age and survivors insurance benefits to be paid to eligible participants in the program before reaching the age of 65, in the event of permanent and total disability incurred before that age.
4. Amendment to include under the old-age and survivors insurance program employees of transit systems which have been taken over by municipal or State governments, even if such employees may be blanketed into a State or municipal retirement system.
5. Amendment to authorize an increase from $50 to $65 monthly in State old-age-assistance payments, with the Federal Government paying one-third of such increase.
6. Amendment to authorize increase from $50 to $65 monthly in State assistance payments to the blind, with the Federal Government paying one-third of such increase.
7. Amendment to extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to certain public employees already covered by a retirement system, when that system provides for integration with the Federal system. (Applies specifically to public employees covered by the Wisconsin retirement system.)
8. Amendment to extend OASI coverage to additional farm workers by revising definition of regularly employed worker to one who has worked 60 days in the calendar quarter rather than 40 days. This would extend coverage to an additional 775,000 farm workers.

The third series of statements is addressed to those amendments sponsored by one or another of my colleagues which I support and for whose approval I appeal, although I am not a sponsor:

1. Amendment to provide Federal matching of assistance payments to adult relatives caring for dependent children.
2. Amendment to give credit for past contributions to old-age and survivors insurance program by individuals employed by farm cooperatives.
3. Amendment to make child welfare service grants available on July 1, 1950, instead of July 1, 1951.

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE TIPS AS WAGES

This amendment is designed to assure to workers, part of whose compensation customarily consists of tips, that their entire compensation will be included in the computation of their social security old-age benefits.

This amendment is supported by the labor unions representing employees who work for wages plus tips. These workers are perfectly willing to report their tips and to pay taxes on them for social-security purposes. The fact is that many employees in the service trades receive a major part of their compensation in tips. To exclude this compensation from wages in computing social-security payments and benefits would be to deprive these employees of most of the old-age benefits available under social security. In some service trades tips represent as much as 75 percent of compensation for these workers.

The strange argument is made against this amendment that workers do not wish to report their tips because then they would be required to pay income taxes on them. But the law says that tips must be included in income for income-tax purposes. The workers involved are apparently willing to report their tips. The argument against the pending amendment is pure casuistry.

In any event, the pending amendment places the responsibility squarely on the employee. He need not report his tips for social-security purposes if he does not wish to. The employer pays tax, just as the employee does, only on the amount of tips reported.

There are no absolute figures on the number of employees who customarily receive tips, nor on the exact amount of income they receive in this form. However, it is estimated that waiters and waitresses alone number about three million, and average about $2.75 per day in tips. In addition, of course, there are bellhops, taxi drivers, barbers, beauty parlor operators, messengers, and many other types of workers who receive a substantial part of their earnings in tips.

In order to facilitate the reporting of tips as earnings, my amendment provides that tips would be counted only if the employee reported the amount of such remuneration to his employer within 10 days after the end of the quarter in which it was received. This provision was included in the House bill.

The amendment contains also a provision which was not in the House bill. The bill as passed by the House was objected to on the ground that although the employer would be liable for both his own and the employee's tax on the amount of tips received, he might have no opportunity to deduct the employee tax from the worker's wages. This objection has been met by a provision in my amendment that the tips could not be counted unless the employer had in his possession wages of the employee from which he could deduct the amount of the tax, or unless the employee transmitted with his report of tips a sum of money equal to the employee tax.

OUTSIDE SALESMEN

The purpose of this amendment is to define clearly in the law the status of wholesale outside commission salesmen as employees for the purpose of the Social Security Act.

These people are employees. The courts have found that they are employees. The Gearhart resolution, passed by the Eightieth Congress, declared that they were not employees, but I firmly believe that they should be so regarded and should be covered by the old-age and survivors insurance program on the same basis as any other employee.

Under the present law the employer decides whether these people are to be considered as employees for social-security purposes. This is wholly inequitable.

The House agreed that these wholesale salesmen should be considered as employees. The wholesale salesmen themselves are overwhelmingly in favor of being considered as employees for social-security purposes.

The definition as given in the House-approved version of H. R. 6000 was "outside salesmen in the manufacturing or wholesale trade." My amendment covers the same group, but specifically excludes salesmen of petroleum products who apparently do not wish to be covered. House-to-house salesmen are also excluded.

There is no reason for the exclusion of the wholesale outside salesmen from the old-age and survivors insurance program. Those of you who have seen the fine stage play, Death of a Salesman may know something of the emotional and other problems of this group.

Security is a vital need of these people. They should be included as employees, and not as self-employed. They are not self-employed, regardless of the commission basis and the contractual relationship. There are no administrative difficulties in the way of making payments and deductions from the compensation paid them by the wholesale companies for whom these salesmen work.

The situation is now loose and untidy, as a result of the Gearhart resolution and of the prevailing practice of letting the employer decide whether the salesman is an employee or self-employed.

This situation can and should be remedied by the insertion of language which will eliminate any doubt that commission salesmen selling at wholesale to retailers for resale are employees for purposes of social-security taxation and benefits.

AMENDMENT ON AGENT-DRIVERS

The purpose of this amendment is as simple as the amendment, itself, is desirable. This amendment would include as an employee for social-security purposes agent-drivers or commission drivers engaged in distributing products not covered in the specific enumeration in the committee version of H. R. 6000.

The committee bill includes as employees agent-drivers who distribute meat products, bakery products, or laundry or dry-cleaning services.

The reason given by the committee for covering such individuals as employees is that, although they may not be considered to be employees under the usual common-law rules for determining the employer-employee relationship, nevertheless, they occupy a status substantially the same as those who are employees under such rules. This provision, if adopted, would result in extending coverage, as employees under the program, to an estimated 75,000 individuals.

There are a substantial number of agent-drivers and commission-drivers who are engaged in distributing other products or other services in a manner and under relationships indistinguishable from those listed by the committee.

Approximately 18,000 agent or commission-drivers distribute beverages to wholesalers, retailers, or consumers. Some 15,000 are engaged in the retail distribution of fuel and ice; about 10,000 are engaged in the retail sale of ice cream to consumers; some 1,500 distribute canned and preserved fruits, vegetables, and sea food; about 500 are distributors of confectionary products; and about 3,000 handle miscellaneous food products.

The total number who would be covered as employees under the proposed amendment to the language recommended by the committee would approximate 48,000 individuals. This number would be in addition to the estimated 75,000 intended to be covered by the committee.

There are, in addition, approximately 14,000 agents, or commission-drivers engaged in distributing manufactured or processed dairy products, such as cheese, butter, and cream. The proposed amendment to the definition of employee would not include these individuals as employees. The reason for this exclusion is to avoid the difficulty involved in the relationship between these commission drivers and individual farmers and farm cooperatives.

I urge the approval of this amendment including as employees all these agent-drivers other than dairy drivers.

AMENDMENT INCLUDING HOMEWORKERS AS EMPLOYEES

This amendment is designed to extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to approximately 40,000 individuals who work on a piece-work basis, in their own homes, primarily in needlework of one kind or another. They make artificial flowers, embroidery, gloves, or lingerie.

Under existing law, homeworkers (and their dependents generally) have been denied the benefits and protection of the old-age and survivors insurance program because Federal court decisions which have ruled that those so employed are not employees under an application of the common-law rules for determining the employer and employee relationship. The pertinent legal citations are: Glenn v. Beard (141 F. 2d 876); Kentucky Cottage Industries, Inc. v. Glenn (39 F. Supp. 642).

These court decisions are based on the judicial finding that homeworkers are not subject to a sufficient degree of control to constitute them as employees. Specifically, the courts have found that with respect to the performance of the work involved, these workers are not controlled in fact as to how, when, and where they shall perform their work.

But for unemployment compensation purposes, homeworkers have been held to be employees and to be eligible for unemployment compensation in the States of Illinois and New York. The pertinent legal citations are: Peasley v. Murphy (44 N. E. 2d 876 (Ill.)); Andrews v. Commodore Knitting Mills, Inc. (13 N. Y. S. (2d) 577). Under workmen's compensation laws, homeworkers have also been held to be employees. (DeJong v. Allied Mutual Liability Insurance Co. (205 N. Y. S. 165); Jasnig v. Winter (150 N. J. L. 320, affm'd. 116 N. J. L. 191.).

Similarly, under the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act, homeworkers have been uniformly held to be employees. McComb v. Homeworkers' Handicraft Cooperative (176 F. 2d 633); Walling v. American Needle Crafts, Inc. (139 F. 2d 60); Fleming v. G. & C. Novelty Shoppe (35 F. Supp. 829).

In 22 jurisdictions today, homework is regulated by law.[1] In some instances these laws define homeworkers as employees.[2] In other instances they prescribe minimum rates of pay to be paid homeworkers and the maximum hours they may work.[3] They provide for the licensing of homeworkers and the issuance of work certificates, and require employers of homeworkers to maintain records and to report to State agencies regarding the amount of work performed by homeworkers.[4] The requirements of the State of New York are fairly typical in this regard. These regulations include the following:

1. The homeworker is permitted to work for only one employer.

2. The employer is required to furnish all materials and articles directly to the homeworker.

3. The homeworker is covered by workmen's compensation insurance.

4. A homeworker shall be paid at least the same rate as is paid to shop workers in the same operations.

5. The employer and the homeworker are required to keep records of the date the work is issued, the amount of work given out, the operations performed, the rate of pay, the date of return of the work, the amount of work returned, and the total payment made to the homeworker.

Hence, there can be no logical basis for excluding these homeworkers from the application of old-age and survivors insurance.

[1] California, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

[2] California, Maine, New York, Rhode Island.

[3] California, Colorado (in retail trades only), Connecticut, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Oregon (in connection with the processing of nuts only), Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Wisconsin.

[4] Missouri, Ohio, and Tennessee do not require the furnishing of reports.

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND COVERAGE TO DOMESTICS WHO WORK 1 DAY PER WEEK FOR THE SAME EMPLOYER

There are approximately 2,500,000 individuals employed as domestics in the United States.

The Senate committee version of H. R. 6000 would extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to approximately 1,000,000 of these by including all those regularly employed who receive a minimum of $50 in a calendar quarter (13 weeks) from the same employer. The definition of regularly employed under the committee bill would be employment for at least 24 days in a calendar quarter.

My amendment would reduce this requirement of days employed to 6 days in a calendar quarter, but would retain the $50 minimum of compensation received from any single employer in a calendar quarter. I estimate that my amendment would extend coverage to approximately 900,000 additional domestics.

The Senate committee bill is a real forward step toward providing social-security coverage for domestics. Here is a group of our working population who need social security more than any other single occupational group. But the Senate bill does not go far enough.

More than half of the domestics employed in the country do not work as many as 24 days in a calendar quarter for the same employer. This requirement means that these domestics must work at least 2 days a week for the same employer. My amendment would cut this requirement down to 1 day a week. Among the domestics, those who need social security most, are those who work for different employers on different days of the week, but who work regularly for the same employer.

My amendment does set a very conservative standard for the minimum wage that must be earned before coverage is extended. They must earn at least $50 per calendar quarter. If they worked only 6 days in a calendar quarter, they would have to receive compensation at the rate of about $9 per day. Few domestics receive such a wage. In my own State, the average rate is about $6 per day, which would mean that domestics would really be required to work a minimum of 10 days in any calendar quarter.

If Members of the Senate feel it desirable to reduce the wage requirement to $25 per calendar quarter, I would accept such an amendment.

These people are just as regularly employed as those covered by the committee bill. They could be covered with little administrative difficulty and little trouble or inconvenience to their employers. There is no sound reason for leaving them out.

The chief argument against covering these people is the allegation that making the necessary reports would be an impossible burden on housewives and other household employers. In my opinion this argument is not sound. I am advised that the Social Security Administration has worked out some very simple procedures for administering the coverage of domestic workers.

Two alternative methods have been developed for securing wage reports for these domestic workers. Under the first, the simplified payroll reporting plan, the housewife would fill out a simple form showing the name of her employee, the social-security account number of the employee, the total wages paid, and the amount of the tax contributions payable. Moreover, the housewife would be required to do this only once in every calendar quarter—only four times a year.

Under the second alternative, the stamp plan, the housewife would simply buy stamps at the post office and paste one in the domestic's book weekly. The worker would obtain the book and turn it in to the Government at the end of each reporting period. I am especially impressed with this latter plan, the stamp plan, which has been widely used in Europe, and makes record keeping an almost automatic process.

I strongly urge the approval of this amendment.

AMENDMENT FOR INCLUSION OF PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS IN PUBLIC-ASSISTANCE PROVISIONS OF H. R. 6000

Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are integral parts of the United States, and their peoples are United States citizens. The inhabitant citizens share all the responsibilities of United States citizenship, including the responsibility for military service and should similarly share its benefits.

Two titles of the original Social Security Act already apply in these islands—Title V, Child Welfare Services, and Title VI, Public Health Services. There is no sound reason to continue excluding them from the remaining titles of the act. The House of Representatives, after a long and exhaustive study of the case, included these people in H. R. 6000 in both the social insurance and public assistance titles. Subsequently, a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee conducted an on-the-spot survey in the islands. What they found caused them not only to endorse the inclusion of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands in all these titles, but also to urge that the basis for their inclusion be liberalized.

H. R. 6000, as reported by the Senate Finance Committee, includes the islands in the social-insurance title, which I heartily endorse, but omits them from the public-assistance provisions, which I greatly deplore. Because of the economic conditions pertaining in these areas, the islands need Federal participation in the Federal public-assistance program as badly or more than any other part of our Nation. With their poor economy, assistance rates average only about 20 cents a day—20 cents a day to feed, clothe and shelter an aged person or a growing child. I urge that Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands be included in the public-assistance titles of H. R. 6000, on the same basis as the States. There is no sound justification even for the discriminatory treatment provided in the House version, although the House version provides some public assistance to these islands. There should be no discrimination whatsoever in regard to public assistance to these citizens.

It is not, in my opinion, sound policy to continue this discriminatory treatment of United States citizens who live in the islands but who risk their lives for our country and who make the same sacrifices for our Nation as other United States citizens do. It is not, in my opinion, sound policy to say to United States citizens that, if they continue to live in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, they cannot have Federal assistance when in need; to say to them that, if they need assistance, they must leave their homes and come to the mainland.

It is a strange anomaly that we recognize that a Puerto Rican or a Virgin Islander is entitled to Federal assistance if he comes to the States to live, but we say to him that he is not entitled to such assisance as long as he remains in those islands over which the American flag flies. American children, aged and crippled Americans, are suffering want and will continue to suffer hardship until we act favorably on this amendment.

The Territories of Hawaii and Alaska are included under all the titles of the Social Security Act. There is no reason for the exclusion of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

It is true that Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands do not pay Federal income taxes into the United States Treasury. But this waiver constitutes recognition of the lower level of the economy of these islands. It is a waiver, a special dispensation. But in many Federal programs, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands receive benefits on the same basis as States. I am in favor of that. I am likewise in favor of extending the public-assistance provisions, and all other pertinent provisions of the social-security program, to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

The extension of the public-assistance provisions to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands would cost about ten million dollars annually. This is a small cost compared to the need.

For reasons of international reputation also, it is important to our Nation that this Congress take favorable action on this amendment. We have made strong representations before the world in regard to the treatment of dependent peoples. The world is watching what we do for our dependent peoples.

It is important that our concern for them and our actions in their behalf match our oft-expounded ideals and principles.

Our Latin-American neighbors will note with keen interest whether what we do for the Latin-Americans who are part of our Nation matches what we do for Americans of other racial strains.

To do justice to these United States citizens, and to do justice to our national aims and international reputation, this amendment must be approved.

AMENDMENT TO FINANCE MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL CARE FOR THE NEEDY

This amendment would provide Federal financial aid for meeting the cost of medical, hospital, and other health care furnished to the recipients of State assistance to the needy, the blind, dependent children, etc.

My amendment carries out the specific terms of the recommendation made by the Advisory Council on Social Security to the Senate Finance Committee. These recommendations were to the effect that the Federal Government should provide medical care grants to the States based on the number of individuals receiving public assistance in all forms in each State.

Each State would receive up to $6 monthly per person for each adult on the public-assistance rolls, and $3 monthly for each child on the public-assistance rolls; the State could receive from the Federal Government up to 50 percent of its expenditures for medical care for these individuals. States would be permitted to apply the grants to the cost of medical care for all individuals, without individual limits, as long as the average of $6 monthly per adult and $3 monthly per child was adhered to.

The public-assistance provisions of both the House and the Senate committee versions of H. R. 6000 authorize the use of Federal-public-assistance grants to pay for the cost of medical care to the needy, but retains the limit of $50 per month per individual for public assistance and medical care combined.

This is obviously inadequate to meet the cost of any serious illness and has the additional disadvantage of putting medical care in competition with assistance grants. Those States where old-age assistance payments approach $50 a month would obviously be reluctant to reduce these grants in order to provide medical care, however much needed, and the same would be equally true in the other categories of assistance.

There is widespread agreement on the urgency for meeting the medical and related health needs of destitute persons, not only on a humanitarian basis but also as a sound economy in preventing the heavy cost of dependency owing to medical neglect and chronic illness.

Evidence of this agreement has recently been brought to my attention in the recommendations to the Congress, adopted by the interassociation committee on health and formally confirmed by the governing boards of its six constituent organizations, the American Dental Society, the American Hospital Association, the American Medical Association, the American Nursing Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Public Welfare Association. This recommendation states:

"It is recognized that public welfare departments are now handicapped in carrying out their existing responsibility to secure medical care, when needed and not otherwise available, to recipients of federally aided public assistance by the inadequate financial provisions of the Social Security Act and its requirement that all aid be extended in the form of cash payments to the recipient. It is therefore recommended that the latter restriction be eliminated and that the agency administering assistance be authorized to finance the purchase of medical care in behalf of assistance recipients. In order to assure the quality of medical care thus purchased for assistance recipients and relate it to their individual needs, it is also recommended that its financing be accomplished through funds earmarked for that purpose rather than charged against the funds available for cash payments to individuals. The further view is expressed that any provision to finance medical care for assistance recipients should permit the administration of the medical aspects of such care by public health departments and that such arrangements should have the support of these six organizations.

"Whenever the term 'medical care' is used in this statement, it is understood to include dental, nursing, hospital, and other health care as well as physicians' services."

Similar recommendations have likewise been made by most of the spokesmen for the State welfare departments testifying or submitting statements on H. R. 6000 to the Senate Finance Committee.

This amendment is intended to provide a practical means of carrying out these recommendations.

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE WAGE BASE OF OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE PROGRAM

I hope the Senate will approve an amendment increasing the maximum-wage base on which old-age and survivors insurance contributions and benefits are computed.

The social-security bill as reported out by the Senate committee raises benefit amounts substantially. It does not, however, adequately protect that substantial proportion of regularly employed workers—more than one-third of those now covered—who earn more than $3,000 a year.

Prof. Sumner H. Slichter, of Harvard University, a member of the Advisory Council on Social Security to the Committee on Finance, and one of the most eminent economists of our time, has affirmed the necessity for providing adequate protection for skilled workers and supervisory employees who constitute the largest segment of the group of higher paid American workers. Dr. Slichter recently wrote an article which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor of April 29. This article, although directed at the bill as approved by the other House, is very pertinent to the question of wage base.

Dr. Slichter points out that prices have risen by about 70 percent since the benefit provisions of the Social Security Act were last changed, in 1939, and that average weekly earnings have risen about 100 percent. As a result of the rise in prices, the man who has annual earnings of $5,100 today is receiving no more in purchasing power than he did in 1939 if he then earned $3,000.

Although this man's cost of living has risen by 70 percent, the old-age-insurance benefit to which he is entitled under the present law has not risen. On the contrary, this benefit has decreased by 40 percent in terms of its purchasing power. That is the measure of the loss in protection caused by the fact that prices have gone up and the benefit structure has not changed correspondingly.

Even under the liberalized benefit formula contained in this bill, the man who earns more than $3,000 a year will not have restored to him the same degree of protection as he had under the present law at the wage-price level of 1940. For example, a man who was averaging $3,000 per year in 1940 could anticipate retirement, say, in 20 years, with a primary insurance benefit of $48, under the benefit provisions then in effect. Under the bill now before us, he would receive a benefit of $72.50.

However, the benefit of $72.50 under the pending Senate bill would give this hypothetical worker a purchasing power of only $43 in terms of the 1940 wage-price relationship. Consequently, this bill fails to restore even the 1940 value of the benefits assured to this hypothetical worker in 1939. The wage base should certainly be increased in order to restore the retirement protection given in 1939 to the better-paid workers.

As Dr. Slichter said in the article I have referred to (a digest of which I inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 15, 1950):

"It is not wise to have a pension law on the books and to let this law become steadily less and less adequate because of the rise in prices. Congress has delayed altogether too long in amending the law to meet present conditions."

It has taken more than 10 years to bring to this stage of the legislative process improvements in the law that were known to be needed almost as soon as the 1939 amendments were enacted. Any deficiencies in the bill we are now considering, if permitted to remain, may be with us for a long time to come.

Wage rates, already double what they were in 1939, are expected to rise even higher in the future. If we retain the $3,000 wage base now in the law, we will be tying the social-security program to a wage limit already inadequate and rapidly becoming obsolete.

As a first step in the direction of bringing the law in line with present-day conditions, the wage base should be increased to $4,800.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE AN INCREMENT ON BENEFITS FOR YEARS OF PARTICIPATION IN THE OASI PROGRAM

I ask the Senate to approve the amendment to provide for an increase in the amount of old-age benefits for each year during which the worker has made contributions to the insurance fund.

It is of the utmost importance, it seems to me, that this element be restored to the old-age and survivors-benefit insurance formula. Otherwise the effectiveness of the insurance program will be seriously impaired. Only by retaining this increment in the formula can we assure that individual contributors to the program will be treated fairly, that the program will serve to strengthen our system of incentives, and that it will continue to deserve and win public understanding and support.

The formula for computing benefits which is now included in the Senate bill works a gross injustice on the long-term contributor. Under that formula, the man who contributes to the program for 40 years receives no more than the man who contributes for 5 years. I do not see how it can be argued that that constitutes fair treatment for the long-time contributor.

It is a fundamental principle, in any kind of an insurance program with variable benefits, that the benefits should vary with length of participation in the program as well as with wage levels. Only in this way can the extra contributions of the long-term contributor be recognized.

I know, of course, that the majority of the Senate Finance Committee does not share this view, but I find it difficult to follow their reasoning. The report of the committee indicates that the increment would serve largely to reward younger workers for their greater contributions by paying them higher retirement benefits than those paid to persons who were old when the system started. To us, such an advantage seems undesirable. I cannot agree that such an advantage is undesirable. It seems to me highly desirable that those who will be contributing for the next 40 years receive higher benefits than those who will retire, say, in 1953, after 2 or 3 years of contributions.

I cannot agree, either, that people in present covered employment who have been making contributions to the program for the last 14 years should be placed on exactly the same basis as those who will be contributing next year for the first time. I think it will be very difficult for present contributors to understand why they would receive nothing for these 14 years of contributions despite the fact that they have been led to expect increased benefits for those years. The action proposed by the Senate committee strikes out of the law a semicontractual arrangement with 1,000,000 participants who were pledged an increment for their past years of contributions to the insurance fund.

And I do not think that the workers who will be covered for the first time next year would feel that they are being treated unfairly because they will receive less than those who have been covered and have been contributing for the past 14 years.

The American people do not expect to be treated with absolute uniformity regardless of their contribution to society or to the insurance program, nor would they welcome such uniformity of treatment.

The typical American worker wants to feel that he has built his own standard of living and his own security by his own contribution, and that through extra contributions he can build a higher standard. Moreover, this principle of additional rewards for additional contributions is part and parcel of our whole American system of incentives.

What incentive will there be for a worker to go on contributing to the insurance program for 20 or 30 or 40 years into the future when he knows that those who have retired after only a few years of contributions are receiving as much as he can hope to receive? How can anyone expect him to see any justice or equity in such a program? It is totally inconsistent with everything he understands about the American way of life.

I urge the approval of the amendment on so-called increments.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PERMANENT AND TOTAL DISABILITY INSURANCE

I urge with all the conviction at my command, approval of the amendment for permanent and total disability insurance benefits.

It would be a serious mistake to wait any longer to include such benefits in our social-security program. Many years ago, the Congress established permanent and total disability programs for Federal employees, for railroad workers, and for veterans. These programs are working well with these special groups. Why not extend this same protection to all those who are already covered or who are to be covered by old-age and survivors insurance?

Disability benefits should be added to old-age and survivors insurance immediately. This broadening of the Social Security Act would make the old-age-retirement provisions truly realistic. It would frankly recognize—and do something about—the fact that there are a good many regular workers who become permanently and totally disabled before they reach the age of 65.

Over the years, Congress has authorized a number of studies on the causes of insecurity. The Advisory Council of 1938 agreed unanimously on the desirability of providing social insurance for persons who are permanently and totally disabled. Because of disagreement on the proper time for introducing the program, no action was taken.

In 1947 the Senate created a special Advisory Council on Social Security to study the social-security program and to recommend necessary changes. On that Council—appointed by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], when he was chairman of the Finance Committee—were leaders in the fields of economics, labor, big and little business, life insurance, and Government. The Council spent a year analyzing every phase of social security. Many of the provisions in the bill before us are those recommended by this Council. Its recommendation for permanent and total disability benefits, however, is missing, although endorsed by 15 of the 17 members of that Advisory Council.

The Council's report recommending permanent and total disability benefits reflected a careful and temperate approach to this very serious problem. I agree 100 percent with the Council when it said:

"Income loss from permanent and total disability is a major economic hazard to which, like old age and death, all gainful workers are exposed. The Advisory Council believes that the time has come to extend the Nation's social-insurance system to afford protection against this loss."

This, too, was the view taken by the majority of the House Ways and Means Committee. The bill which passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 333 to 14, has an excellent permanent and total disability insurance program in it. I urge that we restore this part of the bill which has been eliminated by the Senate Committee on Finance.

We have made surveys on the prevalence of disability in this country since 1935. The most recent, a special census survey made in February 1949, showed that there are well over 2,000,000 persons of working age who are permanently disabled although not institutionalized. If we add those in institutions and homes, mental hospitals, tuberculosis sanatoriums and the like, the total of permanently disabled is about 3,000,000. Nearly 2,500,000 of these people would normally be working and self-supporting but for their disability.

Permanent total disability is a problem which is primarily associated with aging; two-thirds of those disabled under the age of 65 were in the age group between 45 and 65.

The problem is growing more acute every day. In 1900, approximately 13 percent of the population was 50 years old and over; today this proportion has increased to 22 percent; and by 1980 we expect that it will be at least 30 percent.

Along with the rapid aging of the population, there has occurred a sharp rise in the incidence of chronic invalidity. Medical science, public health, and other factors are extending the life expectancy of our people, but this brings with it a high incidence of persons who are partial or total invalids in their latter years. We must make provision for them.

The old-age and survivors insurance program promises to provide a measure of security for our people after they reach the age of 65. But under the present law, and the Senate bill, the benefits are not available under any circumstances until the age of 65 is reached. If the individual is disabled before he reaches 65, he must be an object of charity until he reaches 65.

Private insurance does not offer security against disability to those who need it most.

The selection of risks is too narrow and the premiums far too high to be available to the average or low-paid worker. Individual company or union plans cover only isolated groups of workers. Federal, State, and local retirement and disability programs are likewise limited to the coverage of comparatively few workers. And workmen's compensation covers only work-connected disability—a bare 5 percent of all permanent total disabilities.

The liquid assets of the average family are too small to withstand the steady heavy drain of the breadwinner's serious disability. With $500 or less in the bank—that's abo ; the national average—a family soon exhausts its resources.

Disability insurance is needed not only to provide continuing income for those workers who become disabled; it is also necessary to correct a very serious inequity under the present law.

At the present time, long periods of disability before the age of 65 may reduce the amount of eventual retirement and survivors benefits. In some instances such benefit rights can be wiped out altogether.

One function of a disability insurance program would be to preserve workers' insurance rights. It would provide that a period of permanent and total disability would not be taken into account in determining insured status or benefit amount for subsequent retirement and survivors benefits. Maintenance of insurance rights during disabilities are common under other Federal and State retirement plans, and under many private insurance policies. In many of these latter policies, premiums otherwise payable are waived when the policyholder becomes disabled. I do not see how we can continue provisions in our Federal law which, in effect, forfeit the rights of disabled workers to retirement benefits and even cut off the rights of their families to survivor protection.

It is a shock to many workers when they learn that the contributions which they have paid and will have paid offer no security if they become disabled before age 65. It is even more bewildering to them when they discover that prolonged disability may actually cause a reduction in their eventual retirement and survivors benefits, or wipe out entirely the benefit rights which they have accumulated.

We are not dealing here with malingerers or hypochondriacs. These are the working men and women of America who have suffered untimely misfortune. They should not be forced, in desperation, to seek charity or undergo the humiliation of the pauper's oath.

As stated by the Advisory Council to the Senate Committee on Finance—

"The Council believes that the permanently and totally disabled worker—as well as the aged worker or the dependent survivors of a deceased worker—should not be required to reduce himself to virtual destitution before he can become eligible for benefits. Certainly there is as great a need to protect the resources, the self-reliance, dignity, and self-respect of disabled workers as of any other group. The protection of the material and spiritual resources of the disabled worker is an important part of preserving his will to work and plays a positive role in his rehabilitation."

Endorsing this view, the House Committee on Ways and Means said in its report on H. R. 6000:

"The worker who has paid social insurance contributions for a number of years—perhaps over much of his working lifetime—has a real stake in the system which deserves to be recognized. He should not be required to show need to become entitled to benefits."

The long-range goal for Federal legislation should be to cut back the assistance programs and let the insurance programs take over the major job of providing economic security.

Both the Advisory Council and the House Ways and Means Committee expressed themselves as firmly opposed to using public assistance as a substitute for insurance. We should not wait until a disabled individual is destitute; our objective should be the prevention of destitution.

Experience under the railroad-retirement program and other disability programs has proved that the rate of long-term disability can be predicted with as much accuracy as the rate of retirement.

I am convinced that if we fail to lay a proper foundation now to meet the need created by permanent total disability, we will shortly be faced with an intolerable situation.

Relief for disabled workers is no real solution to the problem. Ever since we undertook a program of social security in the United States, our objective has been to reduce relief. Public assistance has always been considered as a program to meet emergency needs—and not a program to prevent insecurity on a permanent basis.

A recent Census study showed that in 1948 there were 10 million families with incomes below $2,000. The breadwinner's disability was one of the chief causes for the depressed income and standard of living of many of the urban families in this low-income underprivileged group. This situation led the Subcommittee on Low Income Families of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report to recommend in 1950 "the enactment of legislation to provide social insurance against the hazard of permanent and total disability."

The public relief rolls showed, as of January 1950, that we were supporting 900,000 persons from public funds because of serious disability. In addition we know that there are hundreds of thousands who prefer to live in want or on the fringes of want rather than turn to public or private charity.

Let us not lose sight of the main objectives of the social-insurance program. It was established to eliminate the basic causes of economic insecurity—destitution and the fear of destitution. Disability causes destitution; and workers whose only income is from current earnings have few fears greater than the fear of becoming disabled.

It should have been no great surprise to learn, from a 1947 survey of workers in the automobile industry, that the average worker's greatest worry is not insecurity in terms of unemployment or old age; the most crushing fear is what might happen to the worker's family if he became too disabled to work.

The worker with low or average earnings realizes only too well what disability can mean; for his family's sake, he would be better off dead than seriously disabled. If he dies, then, at least, his family may get survivors benefits. But if he becomes disabled, he is even more than a total loss to his family; he is an added expense to a family deprived of income and doubly burdened by the medical costs of his disability over and above the continuing costs of food, housing, clothing, and the other necessities of life. This sense of insecurity weighs heavily on young workers and those no longer young, those with heavy responsibilities—with small children growing up, going to school, and completely dependent on the breadwinner.

For workers who become seriously disabled, there is no social security. Disability eats away savings that have been built up over many years of hard work and sacrifice; it brings foreclosures on homes, and multiplies the number of lapsed life insurance policies.

We commiserate with these unfortunate people but we continue to dump them on to over-burdened public and private relief agencies or upon self-sacrificing relatives and friends.

The disabled are with us—and insecurity and poverty will always follow in their wake, unless we take the problem in hand and solve it in an orderly and organized fashion by adding protection against this risk to our social insurance system.

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE TRANSIT WORKERS EMPLOYED BY MUNICIPAL AND STATE AGENCIES IN THE OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE PROGRAM

This amendment is designed to meet the peculiar situation of workers employed by transit lines, formerly owned by private companies, but now owned by municipalities or other Government agencies.

These transit workers, on subways, streetcars, bus lines, and other public conveyances, were formerly covered by Federal social security when their companies were privately owned and operated. But when municipal governments or other agencies took these lines over, the workers became ineligible for Federal social security. Most of these employees were taken into municipal and State retirement systems.

The present bill, as reported by the Senate committee, permits State and municipal employees to be covered by Federal old age and survivors insurance program. But the committee bill excludes from that coverage municipal and State employees already covered by retirement systems.

I support that general exclusion. I introduced an amendment for such exclusion and that amendment was substantially adopted by the Senate Finance Committee and included in the pending bill. I proposed that amendment because municipal and State employees already covered by retirement systems in New York and other States indicated a unanimous desire to be excluded.

The transit workers constitute a special case. They want to be covered. They do not wish to be excluded, even though they are members of the municipal and State retirement systems.

Their desire is based on the fact that a majority of them entered the retirement systems only recently, after having been covered by Federal social security for many years—in some cases for more than 10 years.

On retirement these individuals would receive considerably less from the State and municipal retirement systems than other municipal and State employees who have been in the retirement system for a longer period. The transit employees, many of them with equally long periods of employment with the transit companies, feel that this is an inequity. Likewise they do not want to lose the benefits of the past contributions they have made to the Federal old age and survivors insurance fund.

I have been approached and urged to support this amendment by the A. F. of L. union representing transit employees on lines owned by local government units in Binghamton, Staten Island, and other places in New York. I have also been urged to support this proposal by the CIO transit workers union.

I have received a communication to this effect from Mr. Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transit Workers Union. The overwhelming majority of the transit workers in New York City belong to this union. The letter referred to is as follows:

TRANSPORT WORKERS OF AMERICA,
New York, N. Y., June 2, 1950.

Hon. HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In regard to the position of our union on the Senate Finance Committee's reported version of the H. R. 6000 bill, please be advised as follows: We are, of course, interested in and wholeheartedly support the various amendments proposed by national CIO, as these, if enacted, really liberalize and modify the social security law.

Nevertheless, we support the more restricted version of the bill as reported out of the Finance Committee because it contains definite improvements over the existing law. We would have preferred to see remain in this bill the optional language of the House version contained in section 106 to cover public employees who elect to joint the Federal system. Since this was stricken from the bill (and we understand public employees are expressly excluded by language in the modified bill now before the Senate), we urge most seriously that an amendment be included to cover the peculiar situation of the transit workers all over the United States. We understand Senator DOUGLAS has such an amendment under consideration. We favor an amendment which would mandatorily include transit workers of a private line taken over by a municipality even where the men as city employees now belong to a city retirement system. They should get the benefits of the Federal law for the periods during which they were under private operation. In this amendment, there should be a provision protecting the benefits they would otherwise receive from the city system which, of course, covers only the period since the city took over operation.

As to new transit employees who come into city service, we would favor a provision either mandatory or at least optional to them, to have them get the coverage of the Federal law should they elect to do so. This option would give those city transit employees who now have no retirement system or a very poor one, a chance to get the benefits of the Federal system.

We trust you will give these recommendations your most serious consideration. I am looking forward to seeing you personally.

Very truly yours,

MICHAEL J. QUILL,
International President, Transport Workers Union of America, CIO.

I therefore urge the approval of this amendment, which would include these transit workers in the OASI program.

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE LIMIT FOR NEEDY AGED TO $65 MONTHLY

I urge approval of this amendment to provide grants to permit States to increase public assistance pensions to the needy aged to $65 monthly.

The present limit is $50 monthly, of which the Federal Government pays something over 50 percent. In States where the cost of living is high and the States are disposed to pay more than $50 monthly, the proposed amendment would ease the burden of the States and permit a higher pension.

Of the proposed $15 increase in the maximum pension, the Federal Government would pay one-third, and the State would pay two-thirds.

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE LIMIT FOR THE NEEDY BLIND TO $65 MONTHLY

I urge approval of this amendment on the same basis as the preceding amendment. It provides the same kind of a formula for the needy blind as for the needy aged. On a humanitarian, as well as a practical fiscal basis, both this and the preceding amendment should be approved.

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE UNDER OASI CERTAIN PUBLIC EMPLOYEES ALREADY COVERED BY A RETIREMENT SYSTEM (WISCONSIN RETIREMENT SYSTEM)

I have joined with Senator WILEY, of Wisconsin, in sponsoring and urging approval of this amendment, which permits the extension of coverage by the old-age and survivors insurance program for certain public employees already covered by a retirement system in which specific provision is made for the integration of that system with the Federal OASI system.

I take this position because I believe strongly that all workers who desire to be covered by Federal social security should be covered. The members of the Wisconsin retirement system desire to be covered. They have a special provision in their retirement system charter for integration with the Federal system.

Despite the fact that I sponsored and urged, and was glad to see adopted, a provision in the pending social-security bill for the exclusion from OASI of all public employees covered by State or municipal retirement systems, I am strongly in favor of this amendment to include these Wisconsin employees, and any other such groups which desire coverage.

AMENDMENT ON EXTENSION OF OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE TO FARM WORKERS EMPLOYED FOR 40 DAYS IN A CALENDAR QUARTER

I urge approval of this amendment which would include 750,000 additional farm workers under the old-age and survivors insurance program.

The bill as reported out by the Senate Finance Committee would extend OASI coverage to farm workers who are regularly employed. The definition of "regular employment" contained in the Senate bill is employment for 60 days in a calendar quarter. I consider this definition to be far too restrictive.

Considering the employment pattern of farm labor in many States of the Union where weather and harvest conditions must be taken into account, I would judge that employment for 40 days in a calendar quarter is regular employment.

I therefore urge approval of this amendment which will bring under the coverage of old-age and survivors insurance these hundreds of thousands of farm workers.

I believe it to be very much in the national interest as well as in the interests of the stability of our national agriculture to include these workers under the social-security program.

AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE FEDERAL GRANTS FOR PAYMENTS TO ADULT RELATIVES CARING FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN

I wholeheartedly support and urge approval of an amendment to the Senate committee bill to restore the House-approved provision for assistance payments to adult relatives caring for dependent children.

This is a long-overdue amendment to title IV of the Social Security Act, making it possible to include grants for State assistance payments to the mother or other relative responsible for dependent children already receiving federally aided assistance. The Senate Finance Committee eliminated this provision from its recommended version of H. R. 6000.

The amendment would permit the Federal Security Agency to reimburse the States for a proportionate share of payments made to mothers or other responsible relatives of children receiving aid to dependent children on the same basis and up to the same maximum of $30 a month which the bill provides for the first child in such families.

This proposal is a simple matter of humanity, common sense, and justice. It is obviously neither humane nor sensible to make provision for children who are needy because of the death, disability, or desertion of the family breadwinner and fail to make provision for the mother of such children. This is particularly true in view of the pitiful inadequacy of the Federal funds now made available for such children, especially as compared to the Federal funds available for the needy aged and blind under titles I and V of the Social Security Act.

Under the present law, the Federal Government will reimburse States for payments made to the first child in such a family only up to a maximum of $27 a month, the maximum Federal share being $16.50. The Senate Finance Committee has recommended a small increase in this ceiling up to $30 a month, with an increase in the maximum Federal contribution to $18.

But since in the Senate committee version of the bill this must also cover the expenses of the mother, it amounts in fact to $9 a person, as compared to the $30 per individual in Federal funds available for a needy old or blind person. Reimbursement for other children in such families would be limited to a maximum $18 monthly payment, with a maximum Federal share of $12.

There seems no reasonable basis for such inequitable treatment by the Federal Government toward these needy mothers and children. It is surely no less important to make this investment in our future citizens than it is to provide decently for those who have retired. It is certainly neither equitable nor sound economy to provide for these children less than a third in Federal aid of what we provide for the older group.

The American Legion, which has long championed the needs of children through the splendid work of its child-welfare committee, has been particularly active in advocating this change in the Social Security Act. The American Public Welfare Association, the American Parents' Committee, many church, welfare, union, and women's groups have joined in pressing for this reform.

This plea for fair and equitable treatment toward children who, through no fault of their own, are dependent on their Government for the means to grow into healthy, useful citizenship deserves the support of every Senator.

AMENDMENT TO GIVE EMPLOYEES OF FARM COOPERATIVES CREDIT FOR PAST CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE FEDERAL OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE SYSTEM

This amendment would grant relief and clarity to the status of employees of farm cooperatives whose eligibility for participation in the old-age and survivors insurance program has been somewhat clouded in the past.

Under the present bill, in both the House and Senate versions, these employees appear to be definitely covered by the OASI program. Thus their future status seems to be clarified.

The purpose of the pending amendment is to give proper credit for the past contributions of those farm co-op employees who felt they were covered in the past and hence made contributions to the system.

In some cases, it has been ruled that these employees were not eligible and hence their past contributions might be considered forfeited. This amendment would provide that these past contributions are to be counted. Thus the coverage would be made retroactive in all cases in which employees made contributions and considered themselves to be members of the system.

This amendment will remove all legal doubt as to the past status of those employees who have contributed, and clarify their status for the future.

AMENDMENT TO MAKE CHILD-WELFARE-SERVICE GRANTS AVAILABLE ON JULY 1, 1950

The purpose of this amendment is to advance from July 1, 1951, to July 1, 1950, the availability of Federal grants for child-welfare services.

The Senate committee provided that these funds would be made available on July 1, 1951, in the belief that the governmental machinery would not be established until that time to handle these funds.

The fact of the matter is that in many States, this machinery has already been set up. The program can go ahead in these States, as soon as the funds are available. Indeed, in some cases, the States are prepared to go ahead with this program, in anticipation of these funds.

Hence there is every reason to make this authorization effective as of July 1 this year, instead of next year. Indeed it would greatly handicap the program to delay the effective date until July 1 next year.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a call of the roll be rescinded, and that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], who is absent by leave of the Senate, has requested me to submit for him an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes. He will be here tomorrow when his amendment comes up for discussion. The amendment is supported by the Washington Federation of State Employees and the Washington State Federation of Labor.

At the request of the Senator from Washington, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, together with correspondence, a telegram, and a memorandum of the legislative counsel explaining the amendment, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and without objection, the amendment, correspondence, telegram, and memorandum, will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment submitted by Mr. LUCAS (for Mr. MAGNUSON) is as follows:

On page 292, line 17, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "unless such agreement contains such provisions as the Administrator may determine to be appropriate to assure, so far as it is practicable and feasible to do so, that such retirement system will not be abolished or more inapplicable to members of such coverage group or that the benefits provided under such retirement system will not be reduced."

The correspondence, telegram, and memorandum are as follows:

WASHINGTON FEDERATION OF STATE EMPLOYEES,
Olympia, Wash., May 19, 1950.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MAGNUSON: In previous correspondence with you, you are acquainted with the position of our organization with regard to extension of the survivors insurance plan of social security to public employees. We are unalterably opposed to the provision in H. R. 2893 passed by the House in the Eightieth Congress, that completely excluded public employees already in an existing local retirement system. Largely through the efforts of our international, the current social-security measure as it was passed by the House (H. R. 6000) contained a provision (section 218 (d)) which would require a referendum vote among members of an existing retirement system, and a two-thirds favorable vote in such a referendum before such members could be accepted into social security. Our organization highly favored this provision.

However, considerable opposition developed from other States, and from groups that are not truly representative of public employees to this provision, with the result that the Senate Finance Committee eliminated the provision and substituted the same obnoxious provision of total exclusion contained in H. R. 2893. Our international was in session in its biennial convention at Omaha, Nebr., at the time, and called for a public hearing of all State delegations from States that have existing retirement systems. From this hearing came a new proposed amendment, that completely satisfied the entire membership of our international and was adopted unanimously by the convention. Our proposed amendment is: That as a substitute for the House proposal in section 218 (b) and the Senate Finance Committee's provision, that section 218 (b) be amended to read substantially as follows:

"Public employees who now have pension and/or retirement plans shall be excluded except in cases where the governing bodies will agree to supplement such plans with H. R. 6000 benefits with no reduction in the benefits already existing in such pension and/or retirement systems."

This will have to come as a Senate amendment and our organization is very anxious that you not only support such an amendment, but in fact if possible introduce it, which would be the official stand of the largest public employee international union in the American Federation of Labor and the AFL stand on this question. We are supported by the American Federation of Teachers, and the International Association of Technical Engineers in this State, both of which unions are vitally concerned with local retirement systems.

For your information, there is probably no State in the Union, whose public employees are now more thoroughly covered by existing local retirement plans. The Washington State employees retirement system is the seventh largest local retirement system in the Nation. This includes as of this date, all State employees except those covered by other systems such as teachers, and State patrol; the employees of 37 out of 39 counties in this State, about half of the operating PUD's, most of the port districts, 80 percent of the noncertificated employees of school districts, and many other political subdivisions—altogether about 24,000 members. Then there is the large teachers' retirement system, the firemen's pension system, the city-wide system with about a dozen municipalities and eight of the larger cities with their own retirement plans.

All of us who have worked through employee unions for these retirement plans realize that the benefits are wholly inadequate, but must be limited by available local tax revenue, so that our only chance of ever securing an adequate retirement program for the public employees, of this State will be through an eventual supplementation of our plans with Federal social security. Our legislature in 1936 made provision for social security coverage whenever available, so at all times we have looked forward to combining our systems with social security. The amendment placed on H. R. 6000 by the Senate Finance Committtee sounds the death knell to all hopes of ever securing adequate retirement benefits for public employees of this State. Therefore I personally urge you to give this matter your most careful consideration, as I am sure every public employee in this State will be grateful to you. * * * Our proposed amendment so completely protects existing retirement systems that any opposition to this amendment can only come from those who are opposed to any increase in retirement benefits for our public servants.

With kindest personal wishes, I am,
Respectfully yours,

MARK WIENAND,
Chairman of Retirement Committtee Washington Federation of State Employees, also Assistant Secretary Washington State Employees Retirement System.

JUNE 5, 1950.

Mr. MARK WIENAND,
Chairman of Retirement Committee, Washington Federation of State Employees, Olympia, Wash.

DEAR MR. WIENAND: In my response to your letter of May 19 I stated that I was exploring further the possibility and desirability of such an amendment to H. R. 6000 as you proposed. I have discussed the matter at considerable length with our legislative counsel. That discussion was supplemented by subsequent conversations between the counsel and my assistant, Mr. Hoff. The attached memorandum contains the gist of these conversations.

I should like to have you study the memorandum and the amendment Mr. Simms has drawn, then give me your best judgment as to whether you wish me to proceed—also your reactions to the questions Simms poses.

Best personal regards,
Sincerely,

WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
United States Senator.

OLYMPIA, WASH., June 14, 1950.

Senator WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

H. R. 6000 amendment drawn by Simms very excellent. Strongly urge you to sponsor. Air-mail letter answering questions in Simms memorandum following.

MARK WIENAND.

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATOR MAGNUSON

This memorandum is to confirm my telephonic conversation relative to the amendment to H. R. 6000 suggested in the letter to you dated May 19, 1950, from the Washington Federation of State Employees.

Under H. R. 6000, as reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, an agreement between the Federal Security Administrator and a State for the coverage under social security of State and local employees cannot be made applicable to any of such employees who are covered by a retirement system established by the State or any political subdivision thereof. The Washington Federation of State Employees apparently desires an amendment to H. R. 6000 which would enable such an agreement to be extended to State and local employees who are covered by such a retirement system but only if the governing body with respect to such retirement system agrees that the benefits provided by that system will not be reduced as a result of the coverage of the employees by social security. The sponsors of the amendment apparently contemplate that the agreement between the Federal Security Administrator and the State will contain a provision obligating the governing body with respect to the State or local retirement system not to reduce the benefits provided under that system. In the case of a State retirement system, presumably the governing body is the State legislature, while in the case of a local retirement system, presumably the governing body will be the group exercising ordinance-making or other legislative powers with respect to the political subdivision. The big difficulty in connection with the proposal of the Washington Federation of State Employees is that whatever State official may be making the agreement with the Federal Administrator for coverage of State and local employees (presumably the governor under the authority of a State enabling act) would not be in a position to agree that future legislatures of the State or legislative bodies of a political subdivision of that State would refrain from taking action to reduce benefits under the State or local retirement system. This follows from the fact that, generally speaking, one legislative body cannot bind its successors to take or not to take certain action in the future.

Assuming, however, that notwithstanding the consideration referred to in the preceding paragraph, an agreement should be entered into between the Federal Security Administrator and the State to provide for coverage of certain State and local employees covered by a State or local retirement system and the State or local political subdivision should, contrary to the agreement, reduce the benefits payable under that system, a question arises as to what action should be taken by the Federal Government. The Federal statute could, of course, provide for terminating the social-security coverage of the State and local employees. That would, however, be a rather harsh penalty to impose upon the employees themselves who, notwithstanding the fact that they may have paid the equivalent of social-security taxes for several years, would eventually lose their coverage under the social-security system.

A further consideration that should be kept in mind in connection with the proposed amendment is that if the States and local political subdivisions are prohibited from reducing the benefits payable under the State or local retirement systems, the cost of covering State and local employees under the social-security system must be either borne completely by the employees themselves or met by additional expenditures for retirement purposes by the State or the local political subdivision involved. In other words, the State or local political subdivision will not be able to use for the purpose of social-security coverage of its employees the same money which it now contributes to the State or local retirement system applicable to such employees.

The amendment submitted with this memorandum provides that the agreement between the State and the Federal Security Administrator may not be made applicable to State or local employees covered by a State or local retirement system unless the agreement contains such provisions as the Administrator may determine to be appropriate to assure, as far as it is practicable and feasible to do so, that such retirement system will not be abolished or be made inapplicable to such employees or that the benefits provided under such retirement system will not be reduced. In view of the considerations discussed in the foregoing paragraphs of this memorandum, the Administrator may have difficulty in determining what those provisions shall be. The amendment would, however, enable the Administrator to demand that the agreement contain any provisions which he might consider appropriate to assure the accomplishment of the desired objective of having H. R. 6000 benefits supplement rather than replace the benefits provided under the State or local retirement system.

Respectfully,

JOHN H. SIMMS,
Assistant Counsel.

JUNE 2, 1950.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment designed to permit the integration of the Wisconsin retirement fund with the broadened Federal social-security system, intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

WHY WISCONSIN RETIREMENT FUND AMENDMENT MUST BE PASSED

I have commented on several previous occasions on the floor of the Senate on the need for this amendment. I think that we can spell out very clearly and briefly the case for it.

THIRTY THOUSAND EMPLOYEES ARE AFFECTED

First. The net effect of this amendment is to enable the some 30,000 individuals covered under the unique Wisconsin retirement fund to have their modest coverage on a State basis supplemented by Federal coverage. These 30,000 individuals are the employees of some 76 Wisconsin cities, 15 villages, 37 counties, and 33 other local governments in my State.

WISCONSIN IS ONLY STATE WHICH PLANNED FOR INTEGRATION

Second. Wisconsin is the only State in the Nation which especially wrote into its State statute a provision whereby employees covered under the State retirement fund would also be enabled to be covered under the broadened Federal system, once Uncle Sam so decided. I repeat, Wisconsin is the only State in the Union which has made provision for such integration from the very start.

AMENDMENT IS DRAFTED TO AFFECT ONLY WISCONSIN

Third. In view of that fact, this amendment which I have in my hands has been drafted so that the integration would only cover the employees of Wisconsin. They are the only individuals whose State statute, as of January 1, 1950, permitted integration. None of the other 47 States is thus affected in the slightest way.

FINANCE COMMITTEE EXCLUDED FOLKS NOW COVERED

Fourth. The Senate Finance Committee decided not to cover any individual now covered under a State retirement system, but to allow those individuals who might in the future come into such a system to be covered.

I personally feel that there is no reason under the sun why the 30,000 individuals now covered under the Wisconsin statute should be denied this opportunity. If they were so denied, the various States and county governments in my State would have a terrific problem trying to compete for employees with Uncle Sam.

FORD, GENERAL MOTORS, AND SO FORTH, SUPPLEMENT FEDERAL WITH PRIVATE PENSION

Fifth. To allow these individuals to have their meager State coverage supplemented by social-security coverage is similar to allowing the employees of private industry to have their Ford Motor Co. pensions or their General Motors' pension, or other pensions, supplemented by Federal coverage. What is good for a private-industry employee is also good and fair for a Government employee.

WE SHOULD NOT LOWER STATE EMPLOYEES' MORALE

Sixth. It seems to me that one of our major aims is to give force and vitality to State, county, and local governments, rather than to take any action which would impair them or lower the morale of their employees.

NO OPPOSITION IN WISCONSIN

Seventh. There is no opposition to this amendment from any quarter in my State. The teachers, policemen, and firemen are not effected, so the organized teachers, policemen, and firemen groups definitely do not oppose this amendment. The county employees' association definitely supports it. Many mayors of municipalities and other officials have written to me in support of the amendment. The League of Wisconsin Municipalities supports it. Various Government unions support it. I have previously placed in the RECORD the texts of many of these various supporting resolutions.

Nor have I heard from opposition from other States of the Union. There is, in summary, no need for any opposition because this amendment merely protects the unique Wisconsin system without harming or affecting anyone else.

I HOPE SENATOR GEORGE WILL ACCEPT AMENDMENT

It is my earnest hope that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee [Mr. GEORGE] will see his way clear to accepting this amendment and taking it to conference.

Eighth. Let me point out that two out of every three employees covered by the Wisconsin Retirement Fund past the age of 65 has not retired. Why? Because the State pension is so pitifully small it would be practically impossible to survive on it.

COMPARISON OF SENATE AND HOUSE VERSIONS

Ninth. As further clarification, let me compare the Senate and House versions of H. R. 6000 on this point.

(a) Under the version approved by the Senate, provision is made to cover State and local government employees on a voluntary basis by means of a Federal-State agreement. However, no employees could be covered if they were covered by a retirement system at the time the agreement is made applicable to the coverage group. In other words, the State of Wisconsin's employees are penalized because Wisconsin happens to have been farsighted enough to cover its employees by a retirement system.

The purpose of this amendment is, therefore, to make sure that Wisconsin is not penalized for its farsightedness. Thus, the amendment would enable Wisconsin to cover its employees.

(b) Under the House version, on the other hand, State and local employees now covered under a retirement system could have been covered provided two-thirds of a majority participating in a written referendum had so decided. We are perfectly willing to have this two-thirds optional election feature. However, since the Senate Finance Committee knocked out that povision, the only way we can achieve our goal is by tacking on an amendment such as I have proposed.

CONCLUSION

May I state in summary:

(a) This is a unique amendment for a unique situation.

(b) No one will be hurt by this amendment.

(c) Thirty thousand people will be helped by it.

(d) The Social Security Administration has no objection to it, nor has any organized group which has contacted me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk amendments intended to be proposed by myself, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and amendments intended to be proposed by myself and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes. The amendments would extend the coverage of the old-age and survivors insurance law to farmers and farm workers.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendments, together with a statement I have prepared to explain the purpose of the amendments, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the amendments and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendments submitted by Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. LEHMAN) are as follows:

On page 241, lines 1 and 2, delete "on each of some 60 days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on each of some 40 days during such quarter."

On page 322, line 24, delete "on each of some 60 days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "on each of some 40 days during such quarter."

The amendments submitted by Mr. MURRAY (for himself and Mr. PEPPER) are as follows:

On page 257, strike out lines 6 through 11, and renumber the succeeding paragraphs, and change cross-references accordingly.

On page 322, strike out lines 15 through 25; on page 323, strike out lines 1 through 9; strike out "(2)" on line 10 and insert in lieu thereof "(1)"; and renumber the succeeding paragraph, and change cross-references accordingly.

On page 333, strike out lines 8 through 25; on page 334, strike out lines 1 through 25; on page 335, strike out lines 1 through 13; and redesignate the succeeding subsections, and change cross-references accordingly.

On line 14, page 289, strike out "agricultural"; on line 15, page 289, strike out "labor."

On line 1, page 292, strike out "agricultural"; on line 2, page 292, strike out "labor."

On page 322, strike out lines 15 through 25; on page 323, strike out lines 1 through 9; on line 10, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(1)"; and renumber the succeeding paragraphs, and change cross-references accordingly.

On page 333, strike out lines 8 through 25; on page 334, strike out lines 1 through 25; on page 335, strike out lines 1 through 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) Section 1425 (h) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby repealed."

On line 17, page 335, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(h)."

On page 355, strike out lines 22 through 24; on page 356, strike out lines 1 through 3; and renumber the succeeding paragraphs, and change cross-references accordingly.

On page 228, in line 23; on page 229, in lines 2 and 25; on page 230, in line 5; on page 231, in line 17; on page 233, in line 20; and one page 236, line 20, strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy."

The statement presented by Mr. MURRAY is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MURRAY

SOCIAL SECURITY FOR FARM PEOPLE

My first amendment, which I am offering for myself, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] is a very simple one. It deals only with the coverage of regularly employed hired farm labor. It provides for reducing the 60-day requirement in the Finance Committee's proposal to 40 days as the test for who is a regularly employed hired farm laborer. Under the very splendid amendment reported out by the Finance Committee only those farm workers are covered who work 60 days or more in a calendar quarter for a particular farmer. This committee amendment is in the right direction and I congratulate the committee on its recommendation. However, because many farm laborers work in June and July, which cuts across two calendar quarters, they will not be covered. The amendment which Senator LEHMAN and I have introduced would reduce the 60 days to 40 days and enable 775,000 additional farm laborers to be covered. While it would still exclude many farm workers, it would help to bring into the system those who are regularly employed.

In view of the fine statements made by the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator from Ohio, in favor of broadening of coverage, I hope they will support our amendment.

My second amendment is a more far-reaching one. It is an amendment to include all farm people under the insurance program—both farmers and farm hands—except self-employed farmers who receive incomes of less than $400 a year.

I seriously regret that the bill reported by the Finance Committee does not extend coverage to farmers and farm labor.

Under the present social insurance law, farmers and farm workers are discriminated against. The people in the agricultural district are paying for part of the cost of social insurance in the prices of the goods that they buy. Yet they have no real social insurance for themselves.

When a farmer buys a tractor, the price of the tractor includes the cost of social insurance for the industrial worker. This is perfectly proper. But at the same time it is not fair that the farmer himself is excluded from having the protection of social insurance. He too becomes old; he too can die prematurely, leaving a widow and dependent children who might have to apply for private charity. Farmers become permanently and totally disabled just like thousands of other people do every year. For these reasons they should have the same protection as industrial workers.

The Senate Advisory Council on Social Security appointed by the junior Senator from Colorado studied this problem at considerable length. All 17 members of this distinguished Council recommended in favor of covering both farmers and farm hands.

H. R. 6000 makes substantial improvements in the old-age and survivors insurance program. It would extend the program to cover between 7 to 11 million additional workers and would greatly improve the benefit structure of the program. However, it does nothing whatever about the problem of social security for farm people.

Why were the farmers and farm workers left out of the improved program provided for in H. R. 6000? Discussions of this subject on the floor of the House by members of the Ways and Means Committee are very illuminating. I am inserting in the RECORD at this point quotations from the debate in the House on this problem.

Let me quote the answer which Congressman DOUGHTON, Chairman of the House Committee gave to this question:

"Whenever a majority of farm people signify their desire to be covered, I think it would be appropriate to cover them. So far we have had no evidence that a majority of them have such a desire. There is little interest or enthusiasm among the farm organizations about it."

Congressman JERE COOPER likewise remarked:

"Farmers were not included under this bill because the committee did not receive sufficient evidence that they wanted to be included."

"EXTENSION OF COVERAGE

"First. The social-security system should be extended to include more people—including farmers, lawyers, engineers, and the domestic servants who have been left out of H. R. 6000. The Committee on Ways and Means is to be commended for extending the coverage to 11,000,000 additional persons, but the program is not yet complete. If extended to another 8,000,000 working people, with a minimum benefit of $50 a month, which I recommend, we would at last have a comprehensive pension system, with payments based upon a right earned through work and contribution—not a humiliating program of dole, with a means test. It would be a system consistent with our American ideas of frugality and enterprise.

"This extended coverage would not be forced on these people. The farmers of my State have asked to be included in the program. A Nation-wide Gallup poll shows that 60 percent of the farmers of the Nation wish to be included. The Grange organization in my State of Washington has asked that its members be brought under the program.

"After all, no one is spared the experience of growing old." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. HENRY M. JACKSON, Representative from Washington.)

"Of course the most important exclusion from coverage provided in the majority bill is that of farmers and farm labor. You cannot have a truly comprehensive system if you leave out such an important segment of our population. I believe that if those engaged in farming understood the benefits of the system, they would be pleading with their Representatives to admit them." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 4, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon ROBERT W. KEAN, Representative from New Jersey.)

"A poll among farmers reveals that 60 percent favor extension of social-security benefits to them. Small-business men, professional workers, and others who comprise the nonfarm self-employed are asking that they themselves also be included. Farm operators number about 6,000,000. Urban self-employed stand at about 7,700,000." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 4, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. THOMAS J. LANE, Representative from Massachusetts.

"Mr. EBERHARTER. I want to say this further. I am delighted that so many Members were present when the gentleman spoke, because I agree heartily with what the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] has said about the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] and what the gentleman from Arkansas has said about the gentleman from New Jersey with respect to the intense interest they took in this measure. I am delighted that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] indicated that he wanted more extended coverage. That matter, particularly the matter of the inclusion of farmers and farm laborers was certainly not a partisan question in the committee. As far as I am concerned, I am thoroughly in agreement with the position of the gentleman from New Jersey that the farmers, the doctors, the dentists, and lawyers should be included, and we should not have made those exclusions.

"I further want to state there are other members of the majority who feel the same as I do. I further want to state to the gentleman that I agree with him that it was a mistake when we froze the tax in the first place. I do not, of course, blame the majority for that because during those days the minority party voted almost solidly for that freezing of the tax. But I was against it all the time. This colloquy here, however, between the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Arkansas will indicate, I believe, to the Members here how confused this subject is and how differences of opinion occur. It is not particularly a partisan question; it is really a very important question to be decided. This bill, as the chairman has said, is not the product of one mind; it is the product of all the members of the committee. I venture to say that the bill contains a suggestion from every member of the committee, both minority and majority. It was not a bill that was pushed out because of votes on one side or the other. So I feel sure that it is a good bill. There may be some differences of opinion. It did not suit me in every respect; I wanted to include farmers and domestics and all self-employed. But it was the best we could get under the circumstances, and I hope it will receive a good heavy supporting vote." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 4, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER, Representative from Pennsylvania.)

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get back to this matter of including the rural people in social security. As I understand, the National Grange and the Farmers Union went on record in favor of social security for farmers. May I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] if that is not correct?

"Mr. MILLS. During the course of the hearings both the Farmers Union and the National Grange were represented and recommended that farmers be included under title II, as well as farm labor. In fact, the Farm Bureau adopted a resolution at a national convention recommending coverage for farm laborers when a workable program for this type of labor can be formulated, but did not take action on any recommendation with respect to farmers.

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The reason I bring that up is that on yesterday a colleague from New Jersey, from a more or less industrialized region, brought out the fact that the farmer is paying the freight, and I guess he is, because that is an old saying that is heard in the countryside. The farmer buys 40 percent of the manufactured goods of this country. As a matter of fact, he now has to pay a transportation tax on water. He has to pay it on his milk, and that is pretty nearly 90-percent water, so he is even paying a tax on water.

"The thing I wish to have in the record is that this story that the farmers do not want social security just does not stand up. It does not stand up right here, because we have just heard that the National Grange and the Farmers Union both have asked that the farmers be included under the Social Security Act.

"This is the picture, and I say this with no particular criticism of any individual or group. Out of one pocket we are promoting the family-sized farm through the Farm Home Administration, and over the years it has done a splendid piece of work, especially when you realize that in this country we are down to less than 20 percent of the people living on the farms of the United States. Yet out of the other pocket we are putting out funds to promote the commercial type farms that are putting the other type farms out of business. One large wheat grower has had a $250,000 subsidy and one large certain outfit has had over $800,000 in subsidies. If we are going to have $7,000,000 farms such as Clayton & Co. bought out in California within the last few weeks, and if we are going to have million-dollar farms, and expect the family-sized farmer to compete with them, I should like to know how he is going to do it if he is not going to have any minimum wage nor any social security.

"You notice they left the farmers out of that minimum wage bill. To be factual about it, we have a minimum wage in the Sugar Act, and that is fixed at such a low amount that it really does not amount to much. Under the Sugar Act, even though a member of the President's Cabinet has the authority to fix the minimum wage, he fixes it at 25 cents and at 29 cents and at 32 cents in Louisiana and 60 and 65 cents in Colorado and California.

"American agriculture has to face two things. First is the situation where they do not have any minimum wage. A minimum wage in operation for agriculture would protect the man on the family-sized farm, because his time is worth somewhere near what the minimum wage is. Secondly, he is not going to be included under social security. It is just putting one more insult upon another.

"I think the time has come when one class of people that should have been in this bill is the rural people, because not half the people in a lot of those rural districts come under social security. We have many districts like that in the United States. What do they have to look forward to? They can look forward to the time when they get old, and believe me, when you get to be 65 years old you are not going to do too much farming. All they have to look forward to is that they might have someone point a finger at them and call them a reliefer, and yet it all comes out of the same pot, more or less. There is no reason why rural people, not only the farmers, but the rural areas everywhere should not be included under the social-security program.

"Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

"Mr. MILLS. I desire to congratulate the gentleman on the position he has taken. I recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin as being as well informed as anybody in the House of Representatives on the desires of the farm people and what is best for farm people as far as legislation is concerned. I congratulate the gentleman. I trust the gentleman has made some investigation in his district and that he knows the people of his district are for coverage.

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I received but one letter that was opposed to social security for farmers. Of course, I do not know the man. I do not understand the circumstances, but I can see why no one wants to pay taxes. You realize that human nature is human nature. A man who has many people working for him probably does not like to put in his share of it. But that has nothing to do with it. I recognize that the rural people should be included and I hope the other body will include them.

"Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

"Mr. CRAWFORD. We are faced with what I think is a positively terrible situation, I mean economically speaking. The steel board has come out and unconditionally recommended that the employer pay the total amount for the employee. It says in substance 'You people who have lived simply and exercised thrift and invested your savings in buildings, machinery, and tools, so that the employees might have a job, shall in addition be responsible for the employees' social welfare.'

"Industry is accepting that proposition, as cockeyed as it is, because industrial management knows that it will add that cost to the price of the goods to be sold to the farm people. It is not a simple thing to administer the collection of a tax for social security and make the rules and regulations apply to the farm labor and the farm people. I know that. But here is a group of people on the farms in this country where the top level men in this administration say 'you must not be too much interested in protecting their wage, I mean the farm wage, because if you do you will overload the budget.'

"Everywhere you look the scheme is running contrary to the economic interest and protection of farm wages, the farm workers and the farm operators and the farm hired men. We are not on sound ground when we kick out 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 farm people and leave them hanging on a string which depends strictly on the whims of Congress so far as appropriations are concerned. I think we should assume the responsibility. I certainly would be a great deal friendlier to H. R. 6000 or the other bill if there was something in them which would give the farm people a chance to have a little security.

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman. I am in hopes, I will say to my colleague from Michigan, knowing the interest he has in this problem, that the other body—I know we cannot do it here because this comes to us under a closed rule where we cannot amend the bill—I am in hopes that there will be enough interest there and that farm organizations who have appeared before our committee will also appear before the committee of the other body and will be able to have their position prevail.

"I just believe that the great majority of the people will agree that that should be done in the other body.

"Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

"Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. There is so much good in this bill that I expect to vote for it. But I do want to endorse what the gentleman from Wisconsin has just said about the gap still remains in our social-security program. Unless that gap is ultimately filled a great injustice is going to be done to the farm people of this country.

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Before we become a party to furnishing company pensions and Federal old-age security under the social-security laws we should at least be interested enough to put all our American people under the social-security program." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949, excerpts from statements by Hon. REID F. MURRAY, of Wisconsin; Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, of Arkansas; Hon. BROOKS HAYS, of Arkansas; and Hon. FRED L. CRAWFORD, of Michigan.)

"Mr. DOLLIVER. The gentleman made some remarks earlier in his speech concerning the cost of this program as presently written, both in the gentleman's proposed substitute and the committee bill as it affects the farmer. It evidently is the gentleman's feeling that at this time the farmers cannot be included either in his bill or in the committee bill.

"Mr. KEAN. That is correct.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman develop that thought a little to explain why it is that this burden is upon the farmer and they are not aware of it?

"Mr. KEAN. The reason is that the cost of the social-security program is added to the cost of the goods that the farmers buy.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. It is indirect, rather than a direct tax?

"Mr. KEAN. It is indirect. Every time the farmer buys a tractor he is paying for the social security of all the workers in the factory that made the tractor. That is one thing.

"Then the second thing is that the burden of old-age assistance is so great in those States where they have a lot of farmers that they are paying an inordinately high tax.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. But that for the most part is going to their own people, is it not?

"Mr. KEAN. It is going to their own people; that is correct.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. In other words, they are paying for old-age assistance by way of taxation to people locally rather than sending it to the Social Security Board by way of a payroll tax.

"Mr. KEAN. That is right.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. Can the gentleman give us any idea how those two figures might compare, that is, the amount they might have to pay in payroll taxes if the agricultural elements of the country were covered, and the relative amount they would have to pay for old-age assistance?

"Mr. KEAN. No; I do not think I can give those figures.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. Are there any figures available with respect to that, or are there any estimates?

"Mr. KEAN. I do not think so. Of course, 45 percent of the farmers have already paid social-security taxes out of which they will never get anything because they have gone to work in the towns, for example, for a short time. Some may have gone to clerk in a store for a little while. Some of them have had war work and worked in a factory for a short time. Some of their sons have gone to the city for a year or so, and then gone back on the farms. As a result 45 percent of the farmers have already had some social-security coverage, but they are never going to get a nickel back in the way of benefit from what they have paid in.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. Why is that?

"Mr. KEAN. Because they have paid so little that they cannot qualify.

"Mr. DOLLIVER. In other words, that coverage has lapsed; is that it?

"Mr. KEAN. Yes; it has lapsed." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 4, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. JAMES I. DOLLIVER, Representative from Iowa.)

"Mr. CAMP. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

"Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is from a great farming State and I am also interested in farmers. Would he give us for the purpose of the record the reason why the committee did not cover farmers as such and farm labor?

"Mr. CAMP. We considered that subject perhaps as long as any other question that came before us. There were two or three compelling reasons. One is the fact that there is no demand by the farmers for it.

"Mr. CRAWFORD. In my district I have had every indication that there is greater demand for this social security coverage from people out in the farming districts than in any other part of my district.

"Mr. CAMP. I mean by that, sir, nobody representing the farmers came before our committee during the hearings and expressed their unequivocal desire for compulsory coverage.

"Another reason was the difficulty of collecting the taxes, not only from the farmer himself but from farm labor. The farmer nowadays does not keep such a good record of his business as other businesses. I hope in the future they will. Another reason was that farm labor to a large extent is transient. A man may hire a bunch of fruit pickers or cotton pickers and never see them again, and that was one of the reasons why farmers were left out. I think farmers should be included. I think that the farmers, when they understand this program, will want to be included.

"Mr. CRAWFORD. I join with the gentleman in that, and I think eventually conditions will force them to come in. There will not be a question whether they want to come in; they will have to come in.

"Mr. CAMP. Yes; I think so." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949; excerpts from statements by Hon. A. SIDNEY CAMP, Representative from Georgia, and Hon. FRED L. CRAWFORD, Representative from Michigan.)

"Mr. MICHENER. Did the gentleman's committee give consideration to the administration of the bill if farmers were included? I voted for the original bill and I voted for every amendment. My understanding has always been the only reason farmers were not included was a matter of administration, that administration would be almost impossible.

"Mr. LYNCH. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan my understanding is that the problem of administration in the opinion of the Social Security Administration has been solved. For one, I am thoroughly in accord with the remarks made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY], that farmers and farm labor should be covered. But our information was, and it is my distinct recollection, that originally the Grange came in and advocated coverage only on the theory of voluntary admission on the part of the farmer. Voluntary admission as such is not sound administratively. But if all farmers and farm laborers were brought in or if farm laborers only were brought in, this bill, in my opinion, would still be a better bill than it is today because I am convinced personally that just as the self-employed now are most desirous of being covered by social security so, too, would the farm operators be desirous of being covered by social security once their farm laborers were covered and they understood the benefits of social security perhaps a little better than I am told they understand it at this time.

"The real reason they are not covered in this bill is that there was no grant demand from the farmers, according to our understanding, or from the farm laborers. We had men on the committee who came from rural communities and who are familiar with the situation. We bowed to the better judgment of those Members." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. WALTER A. LYNCH, Representative from New York.)

"Mr. SECREST. Does the gentleman see a future possibility of farmers voluntarily being included in the social-security program?

"Mr. COOPER. Well, of course, it is difficult to tell now. Farmers were not included under this bill because the committee did not receive sufficient evidence that they wanted to be included, and the further fact as indicated by the contribution made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. As a matter of practice, many farmers ordinarily do not retire at 65 years of age. If a man owns his farm, although he may not plow and hoe and work as much as he did in his younger days, he still operates his farm, supervises it, and does not want to retire as many other people do." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. JERE COOPER, Representative from Tennessee.)

"Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I paid my share of social security so he could build up his social security standing.

"How about the farmers, then? They do not come under it at all?

"Mr. DOUGHTON. Whenever a majority of them signify their desire to be covered, I think it would be appropriate to cover them. So far we have had no evidence that a majority of them have such a desire. There is little interest or enthusiasm among the farm organizations about it." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 4, 1949; excerpts from statement by Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, Representative from North Carolina.)

"Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I assert the people's Representatives can provide reasonable social security for the less fortunate among us without in any way sacrificing that liberty which we know as the American way of life. An adequate old-age insurance program, reasonable aid to the unfortunate and extension of retirement benefits is not statism nor is it socialism. Your Congress is determined that aid for the aged shall be based on an insurance system instead of a mere pension system. We have broadened coverage, benefits have been greatly increased. A worker who would now retire at $31 monthly, which is the present average payment, will, under the new bill, get approximately $56 monthly.

"Personally, I consider it but a matter of time before farmers and farm laborers will ask Congress to include them within the social-security program. When they fully understand the benefits of the Federal social security system, they will plead with their Representatives to admit them. Farmers not only pay for the benefits which industrial workers receive because certainly a part of the pay-roll tax is added to the cost of products they buy, but they are also paying State taxes to meet local old-age assistance and relief burdens. I am convinced that all gainfully employed men and women, except public employees such as teachers who have their own pension systems, should be included under our social-security program." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 5, 1949; excerpt from statement by Hon. STEPHEN M. YOUNG, Representative from Ohio.)

"FARM GROUPS SHOULD BE INCLUDED IN SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

"(Extension of remarks of Hon. BROOKS HAYS, of Arkansas, in the House of Representatives, Monday October 17, 1949)

"Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 6000, already adopted by the House, provides vast improvements in the Social Security Act and is one of the most constructive measures of the present session. I earnestly hope it will be enacted into law. Unfortunately, it does not include provisions for farm workers and others within the farm group. I realize that the difficulties in connection with coverage for farmers are substantial but they are not insuperable. In support of the general proposition that it is inequitable not to provide such benefits for millions of Americans so classified I include the following editorial from the Christian Science Monitor, October 10, 1949:

"'Farm social security

"'It is decidedly time for farmers to know more about the old-age and survivors insurance of the social-security system. Congress will doubtless raise, probably next year, the now inadequate benefits for retired workers. The bill recently passed by the House boosts the payment on an average of 70 percent. When substantial monthly sums are given the elderly, many in the rural regions will doubtless question whether it is fair for the farm people not to share the advantages the same as workers in business and industry.

"'The 8,000,000 or more people on the farm eligible for this social insurance comprise the largest group to be omitted for the past 12 years from its coverage. The principal reason that Congress is still making no effort to bring them in is that they don't yet understand the social-security provisions for retirement, according to Washington farm observers.

"'The farm folks who most need the old-age insurance are the 700,000 migratory farm workers. These farm laborers who follow the harvest from one area to another have an unusual handicap in providing for their later years, and many of them also lack the necessary responsibility. The 750,000 share-croppers of the South form another large section which would be greatly helped.

"'The most important and influential farm group, however, consists of the 4,000,000 farm owners. Many are uninterested, some opposed, while a minority favor. Just what the old-age insurance is hasn't yet been made clear to the mass of farm operators. Doubtless, the old-age benefits would prove a welcome resource to many of them.

" 'As the Government insurance is eventually broadened to take in almost everybody else, it seems doubtful if they and the rest of the agricultural world will permanently stay out. Education about this social insurance must someday come to the farm, particularly to the farm operators. If then the farmers don't want it, it is certainly their right to reject it. But if they do, the quicker the old-age protection of the social-security system is made available, the better it will be for a host of farm people.' " (Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Volume 95, part 16, page A6396.)

Congressman CAMP, of Georgia, also indicated that "nobody representing the farmers came before our committee during the hearings and expressed their unequivocal desire for compulsory coverage." He further stated, "I think farmers should be included. I think that the farmers, when they understand this program, will want to be included."

Congressman KEAN, of New Jersey, one of the Republican committee members, indicated his feeling on the subject as follows:

"Of course the most important exclusion * * * is that of farmers and farm labor. You cannot have a truly comprehensive system if you leave out such an important segment of our population. I believe that if those engaged in farming understood the benefits of the system, they would be pleading with their Representatives to admit them."

I quote Congressman LYNCH, of New York:

"I am thoroughly in accord * * * that farmers and farm labor should be covered. * * * If all farmers and farm laborers were brought in or if farm laborers only were brought in, this bill, in my opinion, would still be a better bill than it is today, because I am convinced personally that just as the self-employed now are most desirous of being covered by social security so, too, would the farm operators be desirous of being covered by social security once their farm laborers were covered and they understood the benefits of social security a little better than I am told they understand it at this time.

"The real reason they are not covered in this bill is that there was no great demand from the farmers, according to our understanding, or from the farm laborers."

These are only a few of the many similar statements made on the floor of the House by members of the Ways and Means Committee and by other Congressmen. It is clear, then, that the consensus in the House was that farm people ought to be covered by social security, and that they would be given such coverage if they expressed a desire for it.

But is it true that farm people are not interested in social-security protection? Since the Ways and Means Committee considered the social-security bill last year there have been some significant developments. At the recent public hearings on social security before the Senate Finance Committee, the three major farm organizations testified on this question. Let me read to you what the representative of the National Grange said at that time:

"I appear before you to express the desire of Grange members to have H. R. 6000 amended so as to extend old-age and survivors insurance to farm people. * * * The executive committee has examined the methods proposed for coverage of farm people and has found them workable. Our position, therefore, is for immediate mandatory coverage of both farm workers and farm operators on the same basis as other groups."

And now let me quote from the statement of the National Farmers Union:

"The National Farmers Union has for many years supported the extension of old-age and survivors' benefits to farm people. * * * Information received from members and officials of the National Farmers Union indicates that at least as far as the farmers belonging to our organizations are concerned they need and want social security. * * * Farmers as a whole, particularly aged and destitute ones, are inarticulate. They do not have the means of making their desires and needs known. Therefore, I sincerely hope that the members of this committee, even though they may not have heard directly from farmers, will give serious consideration to a provision which will extend survivors and old-age benefits to farmers and farm workers."

Finally, I quote from the statement of the American Farm Bureau Federation:

"The Federal old-age and survivors insurance program under the Social Security Act provides a type of assistance which has become accepted as an integral part of our economic system. * * * Employees of general agricultural organizations should be covered. Farm labor should also be covered. If the extension is provided by law to include self-employed other than farmers, and is proved feasible and administratively practical, then careful consideration should be given by State and county farm bureaus to the question of the coverage of farm operators under the old-age and survivors insurance program."

All three of the major farm organizations, then, have indicated that farm workers want social security, and two of the three have indicated that the self-employed farm operators want social security. In view of these facts I submit that there can be no further justification for continuing the exclusion of farm people from the old-age and survivors insurance program.

Doubtless it will surprise many people that the traditionally independent and self-reliant farmer has come to feel a need for governmental provision for security. Many people think of farming as a way of life which provides its own security, and there is some basis in tradition for this view. In the days when the self-sufficient family farm was predominant, farming did to a considerable degree provide security against want, though even then farm people were subject to insecurities as a result of droughts, floods, and the other natural uncertainties inherent in their occupation.

Today the character of agriculture is changing. The self-sustaining, one-family farm producing products for home use is no longer the normal situation; more and more the Nation's farms are coming to be commercial enterprises—large, one-crop establishments, factories in the fields, big business. In 1945, for example, only 22 percent of all the farms in the country were producing products primarily for home use. Farms are increasing in size; in the two decades from 1920 to 1940, the percentage of all farm land which was held in farms of 1,000 acres and over increased from 23 percent to 34 percent. In my own home State of Montana, in 1945, one-third of all the farms in the State consisted of 1,000 acres or over, and another one-third were between 260 and 500 acres. With the increasing size of farms and the increasing mechanization of agriculture, it has become harder and harder for farm families to become owners of the land they cultivate. The farm worker or tenant farmer can no longer look forward with any confidence to acquiring a farm of his own, and the farm owner cannot be certain that his land will provide a living for himself or his family when his capacity for productive work is cut off or diminished by old age, disability, or death.

A further reason why farm people want to be covered by social security is that they realize they are bearing a substantial part of the cost of social security. This comes about in two ways. First, public-assistance costs are heavier in rural areas, because farm people are not eligible for insurance benefits, and these costs are met to a substantial extent out of real-estate and other taxes of which the farmer pays a heavy share. Second, farm people, directly and indirectly, bear a part of the cost of the insurance program, although they cannot qualify for benefits under that program. Indirectly, they share in the cost of insurance program to the extent that the contribution of the program are passed on in higher prices for the industrial products that farm people buy. So far as direct payments are concerned, 35 percent of all farm operators, and 45 percent of all farm workers, have paid contributions to the program while temporarily in industrial employment, but only 10.5 percent of all farm operations, and 13.5 percent of all farm workers, are insured for benefits under the program. In the words of the National Farmers Union representative, "we believe strongly that farmers should receive social security because they help pay for the social-security system at present in operation and because we feel that they should receive social-security benefits as a right and not as charity." Yet, unless the insurance program is extended to cover farm people, they will be compelled to look for help to public assistance, with its attendant means test and personal investigations.

There is still a further reason why social security should be extended to farm people. As long as substantial numbers of people remain excluded from old-age and survivors insurance, it is necessary to have fairly strict eligibility requirements in order to protect the system from the heavy financial drain of paying benefits to individuals who have paid contributions for very short periods of time. If farm people were included, the eligibility requirements could safely be made more liberal so that more people could qualify for benefits under the system. Accordingly, I have included in my proposed amendment a provision to make it easier for workers to qualify for benefits by providing for the payment of benefits at age 70 regardless of whether the individual continues to work. This will enable the farmer who is able to continue working on his farm after age 70 to receive retirement benefits at that age.

Mr. President, my proposal would cover all farm people under old-age and survivors insurance except self-employed farmers who receive income of less than $400 a year. In the agricultural regions with which I am familiar this proposal will be a sound and workable one. I realize that in other agricultural regions there may be problems with which I am not acquainted and which might suggest the desirability of certain modifications in my proposal. Nevertheless, I think we can all agree that the objective of the proposed amendment is sound and that immediate steps should be taken to cover farm people under the insurance program.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I am very glad to have this opportunity to say a few words about the pending social-security bill, H. R. 6000. Members of the Senate know that I have long been interested in social security and that some 7 years ago I introduced, with Senator Wagner and Representative DINGELL, the first comprehensive social-security bill, parts of which are now embodied in the bill reported out by the Finance Committee.

I should like to refresh the minds of the Members of the Senate on some of the recent history connected with the social-security bills I have introduced—not in order to take credit for some of the fine things which are in H. R. 6000, or to point out some of the important items included in the House version but omitted by the Finance Committee, but to make some observations about trends in political science which might otherwise go unnoticed.

The first social-security bill I introduced with Senator Wagner and Representative DINGELL was in 1943. We reintroduced our proposals in 1945, 1947, and 1948.

When we first introduced our bill the opposition called it the American Beveridge plan. This was the first step in an attempt to defeat the proposal. It was given a foreign name so as to make it seem that we were just copying a foreign proposal. But since our plan was an American plan this attempt to stop interest in our proposal was not successful, and when the Tory government in Great Britain supported the Beveridge plan the conservatives in the United States dropped their criticism of the Beveridge plan as a device for criticizing our proposals.

In our 1945 bill we included provisions for Federal grants for hospital construction. This proposal was later passed by the Congress in the form of the Hill-Burton bill. Our bill also contained a provision increasing Federal grants in all the States for local public health units. This program has already passed the Senate. Our 1945 bill also provided for increased Federal grants for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child-welfare services. Increased grants for all three of these programs are included in H. R. 6000 as reported by the Finance Committee.

When we introduced our original bill, and on each successive occasion when we introduced a new bill in a new Congress, we expressed the hope that the bill would provide a basis for constructive thinking and legislation in a field where it was sorely needed. During 1943 and 1944 our proposals were the target of a most widespread campaign of opposition, almost unprecedented in volume and in character. I have often witnessed the use of false and misleading propaganda for political purposes and the use of extravagant charges in order to defeat legislation, but I never knew an opposition quite so unprincipled as the campaign which was conducted against the legislation which we introduced.

We recognized, however, that every important proposal to advance the public welfare has always met opposition at first from groups who care only about their own selfish interests. Usually they are satisfied with the status quo, and are opposed to any change whatsoever. Free public education, child-labor legislation, bank-deposit insurance, universal suffrage, the Federal income tax, and other measures to safeguard the general welfare of the public were all bitterly opposed when they were first suggested. The opposition which we faced when we first introduced our social-security bill never shook our faith in the need for social security or in the fundamental soundness of our proposals. I believe that we have been vindicated. The pending social-security bill contains many things which we advocated several years ago.

Practically all Members of the Senate today are supporting the provisions for improvement of the Federal old-age and survivors insurance program, for the extension of its coverage and liberalization of its benefits. I am delighted that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has reported a bill which extends the coverage and liberalizes the benefits and that the minority members of the Senate Finance Committee have indicated that they will support the bill as reported by the committee. But I should like to recall to the attention of the Senate that in 1935, when the question of old-age insurance first came before the Senate, a Republican-sponsored amendment offered by Senator HASTINGS, of Delaware, sought to eliminate the old-age insurance program from the bill. His amendment was defeated, 15 to 63.

When the social-security bill was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in 1935, seven of the Republican members of the committee signed a minority report in which they opposed the establishment of the old-age insurance system. Speaking of the insurance program they said as follows:

> These titles impose a crushing burden upon industry and upon labor.
>
> They establish a bureaucracy in the field of insurance in competition with private business.
>
> They destroy old-age retirement systems set up by private industries, which in most instances provide more liberal benefits than are contemplated under title II. (Conference Committee Report on H. R. 7260, 74th Cong., 1st sess., Rept. 615, pp. 43–44.)

Not a single one of these fears expressed by the Republican opposition has come to pass. The philosophy of fear is frequently used to try to defeat progressive legislation, but after the legislation has been put into effect and has been made workable by a Democratic administration, the Republicans come around and support it as if they were the original friends of the program who had gotten it enacted into law.

This is what Representative TABER said in 1935:

> Never in the history of the world has any measure been brought in here so insidiously designed to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers, and to prevent any possibility of the employers providing work for the people. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 19, 1935, p. 6054.)

This is what Senator Hastings said on the floor of the Senate:

> I am not prepared at this time to say that I should vote for any of these plans, because I have not made up my mind that the Congress has any authority to force upon anybody an annuity system of any kind. As I say, I am in general sympathy with the scheme. I think of all things that can be done for a young person, the most important is to have him begin to pay into some kind of a fund that will take care of him in his old age, but to have the Congress of the United States force him to make such payments is so entirely new, and so different from my philosophy of what the Congress has a right to do, that I am not for the moment prepared to approve any plan of that character. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 17, 1935, p. 9424.)

I am very happy that some members of the minority have now changed their minds and agree that it is important to support amendments expanding and liberalizing the program. If we had had their support during these last 15 years we could have improved the program much farther and much faster.

The Republican minority has consistently opposed our proposals by crying that they tended toward the welfare state. Finally that issue was thrashed out in a New York senatorial campaign last year, when the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] defeated the Republican candidate, Mr. Dulles, on the issue of whether the social legislation being advocated by the Democratic administration should be continued and improved. Subsequent to that time, Governor Dewey capitulated and announced that there was nothing wrong with the welfare state. This was reported in the New York Times as follows:

> Governor Dewey, of New York, declared in his second lecture tonight at the Woodrow Wilson High School of Public and International Affairs that it must have been some very clumsy Republicans who tried to pin the label "welfare state" on the Truman administration. Mr. Dewey said he did not know the origin of the phrase or who perpetrated it. It has generally been associated with Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, of Ohio, Mr. Dewey's opponent for the Republican presidential nomination of 1948 and 1940. It also was used exclusively by John Foster Dulles, Republican senatorial candidate in the last New York State election.
>
> "Anyone who thinks that an attack on the fundamental idea of security and welfare appeals to the people generally is living in the Middle Ages," Mr. Dewey declared. "Everybody wants welfare and security in one form or another. I have never met anybody who did not want welfare and security. The man who first used the phrase against our present government did his cause no good, to put it mildly" (New York Times, February 10, 1950).

Repeatedly, Republicans have criticized the compulsory coverage features of the social security and health proposals which I have introduced. I am glad to note that the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Colorado now not only defend the compulsory coverage features of the bill, but have indicated that they wish to compel more people to contribute to the system. That horrible word "compulsion," which the Republicans and the American Medical Association have used to try to crucify those of us who are in favor of social legislation, can now be placed equally on the heads of the Senators from Ohio and Colorado and the other members of their party. I am glad to welcome them into our corner, where they may now admit the error of their ways and a belated conversion to their new faith.

I do not want my remarks to indicate criticism of anyone. I am just trying to bring out the facts. Every time we on the Democratic side have advanced progressive social legislation, it has been repeatedly criticized—in the beginning, by conservative groups and representatives of the Republican Party; but later on the Republicans see the light and begin to defend what we have done and to take credit for trying to do the job bigger and better than we have.

Of course I recognize that this is an inevitable human tendency. I believe those of us who are in favor of social legislation must recognize the fact that we are going to get a lot of criticism when we first advance proposals, but that as time goes on we shall get more and more support; and finally, after our proposals are enacted, those who first opposed them will begin to see their merit.

One of the very fine provisions in House bill 6000 is the one which for the first time includes small-business men under the insurance program. In 1943 I was chairman of a special committee to study problems of American small business. Among the members of that committee were the following persons who are Members of the Senate at the present time: The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. Former Senator Capper, of Kansas, was the chairman of a Subcommittee on Research and Education. In conjunction with Senator Capper, our committee published a study called Small Business Wants Old-Age Security.

That was the first time there had been any real study of the problem of covering small-business men under the Federal OASI program. I am very proud of that study. I am proud of the fact that the committee of which I was chairman recognized the problem and indicated, over 7 years ago, how social-security protection could be extended to persons in business for themselves.

One reason why I have long been in favor of national social legislation such as old-age and survivors insurance is that it helps small business. Contrary to the false statements, that are sometimes made, that national social legislation hurts small business, I am convinced that workmen's compensation, accident and health insurance, old-age insurance, and unemployment insurance help small business to retain its employees against the competition from big business, and also help small business by maintaining purchasing power for families, so that they can buy merchandise at their local grocery, drug store, and hardware store, can pay for tickets to their local movie, and can pay their doctor and hospital bills.

In the bill which former Senator Wagner and I introduced on June 30, 1943, we included a provision for the coverage of all self-employed businessmen, and that provision has been repeated in every insurance bill that we have introduced since that time. We did not get very much support in 1943, 1945, or 1947 from any of the Republican Members of the Congress for our proposal, but I am deeply gratified that now the Members of the minority have come around to seeing that we had a sound idea.

In the bill we introduced in 1943, we included a provision for giving wage credits to individuals while they were in military service. We repeated this provision in our succeeding bills. Although the Congress did not see fit, for 7 years, to go along with this provision, both the House-approved version of H. R. 6000 and the bill as reported by the Senate Finance Committee include wage credits for persons who served in the military service during World War II. We are very gratified by the acceptance by the committee of this important provision, which we introduced 7 years ago.

Our bill also included provisions for covering farm labor and farmers under the insurance program. The bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee does include some farm labor. I have submitted to H. R. 6000 an amendment which would include additional farm labor, and I sincerely hope that the Senators who have been saying they are in favor of universal coverage will vote for my amendment.

I am, of course, in favor of extending the program to all farm people, including self-employed farmers, and I have had prepared an amendment which would do so. Senators on both sides of the aisle have said they favor, in principle, extending the program to cover farmers. I should be glad to offer my amendment to cover farmers if the leadership feels that an expression of views on this amendment would be helpful in obtaining early inclusion of farmers under the program. In order that the matter can be properly explored, I should be glad to have my amendment printed and laid on the table, so that any Senator who wishes to express his support of this amendment can do so. I should be glad to add to the amendment the name of any Senator who wishes to join me as a cosponsor.

I should like to point out that the coverage of farmers would not be effective until January 1, 1952, so that there would be ample opportunity to prepare the necessary administrative machinery to bring them under the program. Moreover, it would give the administrative agency a year of experience in covering nonfarm self-employed before bringing in the self-employed farmer. I agree with the Republican leaders that it will not be long before farmers are covered under the insurance program, and I see no reason why we should not now include in the bill a provision which will bring them into the program at an early date.

In the bill we introduced in 1943 we provided for liberalizing the insurance benefits. I am glad the Finance Committee has included provisions to liberalize the insurance benefits; but I feel, as many other Senators do, that the committee has not liberalized the benefits enough. Under the bill reported by the committee, the maximum insurance benefit payable is $72.50 a month, based upon maximum wages of $3,000. It is my understanding that various members of the committee will support an amendment to increase the maximum wage base to $3,600, which will permit a maximum insurance benefit of $80 a month. Naturally, I shall support any proposal to increase the insurance benefits, but I must say quite frankly that I do not think a maximum of $80 is sufficient. I believe the insurance benefits should be raised to about $100 a month for a person earning $400 a month who has been covered under the insurance program for 5 years. I strongly believe that the maximum wage base should be increased to $4,800, or in any event to not less than $4,200. I also believe it is most important to include in the insurance program an increase for each year for which an individual has contributed. I shall certainly support the amendments submitted by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania to increase the maximum wage base and to put back into the program the so-called increment for years of contributions to the insurance system.

There is one very grave omission from the bill; I refer to the action of the Finance Committee in striking out the disability insurance provisions approved by the House. I deeply regret that the Finance Committee took this action. Their action is diametrically in opposition to the recommendation made to them by their own advisory council. That distinguished council, composed of 17 members picked by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], voted 15 to 2 to include disability insurance in the social-security program. Yet the Finance Committee has disregarded this advice and has eliminated this most valuable and essential protection.

It is clear that this action of the Finance Committee was taken because of the tremendous campaign that has been waged by the private insurance companies, the American Medical Association, and the employer organizations such as the chamber of commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers—all of whom are opposed to this amendment, which is so very badly needed by disabled persons throughout the country. I am well aware of the fact that the members of the Finance Committee were strongly urged by representatives of the insurance companies and these other groups to eliminate the disability insurance provisions of the House bill. I deeply regret that they accepted the unsound arguments of the insurance companies and the other groups, in preference to the recommendation of their own advisory council, the needs of the disabled people, and the welfare of thousands of families in the Nation.

Under laws already passed by Congress we have provided disability insurance protection for railroad workers, for civil service employees, and even for Representatives and Senators. Experience with the disability provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act and the Civil Service Retirement Act has been excellent. But now we are asked to deny this same type of protection to the rest of the workers and small-business men of this country. I do not see how, in good conscience, any Senator can vote to withhold this protection from millions of persons who work for a living, when he himself, and all of these other groups, have protection against disability.

I know that many of the Senators here voted to provide disability insurance protection for railroad workers. Why, then, should they oppose the same sort of protection for the rest of the people who work for a living in this country? As a matter of fact, the amendment proposed for payment of disability benefits is much more restricted, much more conservative, much more limited than what is now authorized under the Railroad Retirement Act, the Civil Service Retirement Act, and the other Federal programs providing for disability benefits.

The arguments made by the insurance companies and the American Medical Association can easily be refuted. They were refuted in the House of Representatives, before the House Ways and Means Committee reported the provision. They have been refuted time and time again.

In the first place, most of the insurance companies sell very little disability insurance through private policies. As a matter of fact, under many of the collective-bargaining contracts which provide for disability benefits, the insurance companies will not insure this protection, but they make the employer self-insure the disability benefits. So the amendment, if passed, would not in any way adversely affect insurance companies.

Nor would the amendment adversely affect the welfare of doctors or hospitals. As a matter of fact, if this amendment passes, it would put money into the hands of disabled people, which would make them better able to pay their doctor and hospital bills. Yet the doctors are opposed to this provision, despite the fact that it will help them and help their patients. They are taking a dog-in-the-manger attitude, because they are unwilling to support any progressive legislation whatsoever.

As a matter of fact, the official position of the American Medical Association in favor of permanent and total disability insurance, taken in 1938, is still in effect. It is the board of trustees of the American Medical Association which has taken the position against the proposal, not the house of delegates. Thus the action of the house of delegates in 1938 still remains the official action of the American Medical Association. Twelve years ago they admitted the validity of the argument that disability insurance would help the patients and help the doctors. But today, because they are opposing various health bills, they take the position that they must oppose everything, good, bad, or indifferent. This is a reckless and unprincipled policy.

I am sure that disability insurance is going to be the law of the land, sooner or later. Yet the doctors of this country, through their official organization, are putting themselves on record as preventing progress and as refusing to promote a decent and humanitarian program.

I should like to point out that the American Hospital Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Legion have endorsed the principle of disability insurance—Senate hearings, pages 578 and 2368.

I have consistently supported social-security and full-employment legislation, because I believe that such legislation will help us to preserve our free-enterprise system. I believe that if we are to have a dynamic economy people must have an opportunity to work at rates of pay that will sustain a rising standard of living, and that there must be common protection against the causes of insecurity which face people who work for a living.

The program of full employment and social security under a free-enterprise system, which I have advocated during these past years is not going to come in the United States of its own accord. If we want that kind of program and want to put it in operation we must plan for it, we must work for it, and we must fight for it, against the opposition of those who are constantly trying to defeat our proposals.

Last year there was much criticism of the proposals for social security on the ground that they would cost a great deal of money. Members of the minority party inserted into the RECORD material showing the tremendous cost of social security through the year 2000. The only trouble with all these terribly high cost estimates was that the members of the minority party assumed that there would be no progress made in wages, employment, and living standards for the next 50 years. That might have been a correct assumption to make, had the Republican Party gotten into control of our Government. I believe Republicans must recognize that under the policies advocated by the Republican Party there would be very little progress made in improving wages or living standards.

I cannot accept this lack of faith in our country and in its future, which the Republicans have accepted. I believe that we are going to go forward to improve our wages, increase our employment, and raise our standard of living. As we do this, we can provide social security for our people without impairing incentives or placing too great a burden upon the productive members of our society. If we are to act as a humanitarian, intelligent, democratic Nation, we must make adequate provision for those in our country who become sick, disabled, aged, or unemployed, or who die prematurely. We must continue to improve our social-security program.

Recently, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] wrote me asking my opinion on the flat-pension proposal he has advocated as a substitute for improving the insurance program. I am opposed to any such proposal, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of my reply to the Senator from Nebraska, giving my reasons for my position.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS,
June 19, 1950.

Hon. HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BUTLER: This is in reply to your letter of June 13 in which you request that I support a plan for a 2-year stop-gap social-security measure pending consideration of a flat-pension substitute for the present old-age and survivors insurance program.

As you know, for many years I have been greatly interested in social security and have given careful study and consideration to proposals of the sort you advocate. As a result of this study I am convinced that the flat-pension system which you are advocating would be completely unsound and that it is unsuited to the American economy and inconsistent with our system of free enterprise, thrift, and incentives.

In a country such as ours, with wide variations in wage levels and living costs from State to State, and even within States, it seems to me that it would be utterly impossible to select any uniform pension level which would be suitable in all parts of the country. Moreover, not only are there wide geographical differences in costs of living and wage levels, but even within the same area the needs and standards of living of individuals may differ widely; here again, an amount which would be barely adequate for one person might actually, in another case, provide a standard of living exceeding that which the individual was able to attain for himself during his working years.

Moreover, I believe it is of the utmost importance for the continuing productivity and prosperity of the Nation that our system of incentives and rewards for superior accomplishment and contribution to the economy be strengthened in every possible way. Just as we must have a variable wage structure to encourage individuals to make their maximum contribution to national productivity, we must have also a variable benefit structure in our social insurance programs. I believe that the individual's knowledge that he can improve his future security, as well as his current standard of living, by his own effort, will encourage him to put forth maximum effort.

In this connection I would like to recall to you the splendid statement made during the hearings on H. R. 6000 before the Senate Finance Committee by Prof. J. Douglas Brown, of Princeton: "I would especially like * * * to emphasize the great importance of maintaining a full spread of differentials in an old-age and survivors structure. A contributory social-insurance system should strengthen, rather than weaken, the incentives so necessary in a free-enterprise system. In our efforts to support our least fortunate citizens it is easy to break down incentives by lessening the differential rewards for steady employment, higher earnings, and self-improvement. It is far harder to reestablish incentives once they are lost. Even America, with its great resources of materials and manpower, cannot afford to weaken the incentives of its people to produce more for a better standard of life * * *

"'This country is on the brink of a long and steady descent into a condition of flattened differentials and comfortable averages. To make things easy and to avoid the trouble of differentiating talent, effort, or character, we are tempted to concede flat-insurance benefits, flat-assistance grants, flat rates of pay, flat levels of education, and a tragic averaging toward a single norm in scores of aspects of life. This is one of America's greatest dangers. It is a symptom of a declining conviction in the value of competition, incentive, free enterprise, and free opportunity to prove one's self a more productive and an economically more valuable person than one's neighbor."

I feel, therefore, that I cannot support any proposal which would substitute a flat-benefit program for our present one. In addition, though, there are specific aspects of your proposal which I feel are most unwise.

I do not believe that the method of financing the proposal would be at all sound or satisfactory. First, I could not agree with any method of financing which would relieve the employer from some responsibility for contributing directly toward the security of his employees. It has become a well-established principle that the cost of providing security for aged workers is as much a part of the expense of doing business as is the cost of replacing obsolete or worn-out machinery. Employers and industry generally have accepted this principle, and I believe we would be taking a backward step to relieve them of all responsibility for their employees' security.

Second, apart from the source of the funds for financing the program, I find the financing proposal quite vague, indefinite, and uncertain. I do not see how anyone could feel certain of any security at all with the tax rate to support the program being redetermined from time to time, as you indicate it would be, nor do I see how the tax rate, or indeed the whole system, could fail to develop into a political football subject to varying pressures from all directions. I feel that the end result would be complete confusion and chaos.

In my opinion your statement that H. R. 6000 will be so costly as to bankrupt the economy is completely without foundation. It is impossible for me to conceive that our Nation, with its tremendous productive capacity, will ever be unable to provide the necessary goods and services to support its aged, its widows and orphans, and its disabled at a decent and respectable standard of living. The only correct way to judge the cost of a social-security program is in terms of its effect on the Nation's production of goods and services. The payment of a decent level of benefits under our social-security system does not reduce the amount of goods and services produced; on the contrary, by maintaining the purchasing power of the beneficiaries and by improving the morale of the working population, it increases the Naton's productivity.

You state that the number of Federal employees required to administer the social-security system you propose would be no more than one-half of the number now required. There is absolutely no reason to expect such a reduction. On the contrary, under your proposal the number of Federal employees required would probably be substantially increased.

Many of those who now work on the maintenance of old-age and survivors insurance wage records would still be needed in order, under your proposal, to operate an identification and record system to insure against the payment of more than one benefit to each qualified individual. The employees now engaged in the collection of the payroll taxes also work on the collection of income taxes; the elimination of payroll taxes would not mean that all those employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue whose work is charged for accounting purposes to the collection of the payroll tax could be dismissed. Actually, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, under your proposal, would have to add to its staff in order to handle the additional millions of income-tax returns that would be filed by individuals who do not now pay income taxes. These returns would be greater in number and would require more complex administrative steps to process than are required for the processing of the relatively simple tax returns filed by employers under the present social-security systems. Furthermore, the Federal Government would have to hire additional thousands of personnel to administer the phase of your proposal which requires that benefit amounts be fixed in relation to the amount of taxable income. The benefit amount would vary from year to year and even within the year, and the mechanics of determining the amount to be paid and maintaining the necessary accounting controls would actually be a great deal more expensive than the mechanics of benefit payment under the present program.

I particularly note that your plan does not provide for payment of benefits to disabled persons. I believe that this is a great deficiency in your proposal.

Finally, I could not support any system which penalized individual thrift, as it seems to me your proposal would do. I feel that the worker ought to be able to look forward to receiving his retirement benefits despite the fact that he may have been able to provide additional income for his old age through savings and self-denial in his working years. It seems to me that reducing the benefits where the individual has been able to provide such additional security would be utterly discouraging to all efforts to supplement the basic insurance benefit.

As I am sure you know, I am thoroughly aware of the deficiencies and inadequacies in our present social-security program. I believe, though, that the basis of the program is entirely sound, and that we can improve and expand the program both as regards persons protected and benefits provided so that it will do a really effective job of providing social security in a way consistent with our American beliefs, traditions, and circumstances. Accordingly, I intend to vote for H. R. 6000 and to work for further improvements in the program.

Thank you for sending me your proposal. I am very glad to have had the opportunity to study and comment on it, and I regret that I cannot in good conscience give it my support.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES E. MURRAY.

Mr. MURRAY. I have noted that several of the criticisms of the old-age and survivors insurance system made by the junior Senator from Washington bear a striking resemblance to the criticisms made by Mrs. Marjorie Shearon in her news letter called Challenge to Socialism. For that reason I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the entire editorial from the national Catholic weekly review, America, of May 27. The final paragraph of this editorial points out that:

"Dope sheets" like Challenge to Socialism—and there are many of them—are wrecking the attempt to build up a constructive conservatism in the United States. In their own way, to our mind, they are just as dangerous as the Daily Worker. They smear competent and conscientious Americans whose concern for American security and genuine democratic well-being are unquestioned. And they distract us from facing the real threat confronting our way of life, the threat of Marxism all over the world. Nothing could be more myopic, misguided, or menacing to social progress.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW TO WRECK CONSERVATISM

Among the countless "dope sheets" purporting to furnish busy (and well-heeled) American citizens with what-you-should-know information about national politics is Challenge to Socialism, edited in Washington by Marjorie Shearon, Ph. D. It comes out not less than 35 times a year—allowing ample respite from the ardous research that goes into these invaluable contributions to American culture—and costs $12.50 annually. For some reason, single copies are modestly priced at 10 cents, which comes much closer to the real value of the publication. Its slogan, "Resist unwarranted regulative interference by government," was first aimed at medical legislation, but it now covers the whole waterfront.

In the May 11, 1950, issue of Challenge to Socialism, Dr. Shearon undertakes to do a job on Senator WAYNE L. MORSE, Republican, Oregon. She calls for his defeat in the May 19 Republican primaries, urging Oregonians to reject Senator MORSE as Floridans rejected Senator CLAUDE PEPPER on May 2 (America, May 13, p. 159). "Senator PEPPER's pinkness has been more obvious than that of Senator MORSE," warns the easily alarmed editor, "but both have been long immersed in the same waters."

Senator MORSE needs no defense from us. To begin with, he is a very highly educated person. His academic degrees include those of bachelor and master of arts from the University of Wisconsin, bachelor of laws from the University of Minnesota, and doctor of jurisprudence from Columbia University. The University of Oregon, which appointed him professor of law in 1929, made him dean of its law school in 1931, a position he held until he resigned to run successfully for the Senate in 1944 as a progressive Republican.

Comparing a man of such attainments to CLAUDE PEPPER requires some doing. But it gives Dr. Shearon no pause. She accepts, in derogation of Mr. MORSE, the judgment of Representative CLARE E. HOFFMAN, Republican, Michigan, whose account of his own post-law-school career in the Congressional Directory consists exclusively of a glowing enumeration of his pluralities in every congressional election since 1934: "The sketch [of WAYNE MORSE] does not show that he ever earned the degree of C. S.—common sense * * *." No sketch of Mr. HOFFMAN shows it either. Mr. MORSE, in the account he submitted to the Congressional Directory, could mention, in addition to his unversity teaching, his chairmanship of the President's Railway Emergency Board in 1941 and his membership, representing the public, on the National War Labor Board, 1942–44. He has reason to regard other accomplishments as more important than being reelected to public office, with machine-line precision.

The explanation of Dr. Shearon's attempt to purge Senator MORSE is basically very simple. The Senator, who knows a thing or two about labor law, voted against the Taft-Hartley Act. It makes no difference to Dr. Shearon, apparently—she never mentions it—that Mr. HOFFMAN, an arch-conservative, joined Senators PEPPER and GLEN TAYLOR (whom she brackets with WAYNE MORSE) in opposing the Marshall plan and other phases of our anti-Communist foreign policy. Lining up with the Daily Worker seems to be all right with Challenge to Socialism—so long as it is not on the T-H issue. But opposing what even Business Week (December 18, 1948) admitted to be a piece of anti-union legislation is the unpardonable sin.

Dope sheets like Challenge to Socialism—and there are many of them—are wrecking the attempt to build up a constructive conservatism in the United States. In their own way, to our mind, they are just as dangerous as the Daily Worker. They smear competent and conscientious Americans whose concern for American security and genuine democratic well-being are unquestioned: And they distract us from facing the real threat confronting our way of life, the threat of Marxism all over the world. Nothing could be more myopic, misguided, or menacing to social progress.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, we must not wait another 11 years to improve the program. The last time there was a major revision of the social-security program was in 1939. We all recognize, of course, that because the war intervened there were a lot of things we wanted to do that we were unable to do; but 11 years is too long. I want to say that I shall introduce another bill shortly, providing for the complete extension of coverage, liberalization of the benefits, and other improvements. I hope that the Congress will consider and pass such a bill next year, so that we shall at last have a comprehensive and universal program covering all the major causes of insecurity.

Mr. President, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY

With party leaders on both sides in favor of liberalizing the social-security system, Senate passage of a bill extending coverage and increasing the scale of benefits is virtually assured. In a series of editorials the Washington Post has discussed the chief provisions of the House bill which was passed at the last session and the proposed Senate revisions. In both cases the proposals for extension of coverage are inadequate, but they are a step in the right direction. Moreover, it is encouraging to discover that influential Senators of both parties favor wider coverage leading eventually to all-in coverage.

Under either bill the proposed increases in the scale of payments would provide fairly adequate subsistence benefits for the great majority of workers. But in view of the sharp rise in wages and the 70-percent increase in living costs during the past decade as well as the extremely low level of benefits under the present law, we favor the higher scale of benefits of the Senate bill which increases average payments for retired workers from 85 to 90 percent.

Under the Senate bill the maximum wage on which benefits may be computed would remain at the present $3,000 level. That is much too low, since it prevents workers in higher income categories from qualifying for higher pensions affording more protection against wage losses. Ten years ago all but a negligible fraction of wage earners in covered employment earned less than $3,000, so that benefits were at that time based on the total earnings of the insured, barring minor exceptions. Today the wage base would have to be raised to $4,800 to cover all the wages of 95 percent of insured workers. Consequently, there is strong support in the Senate for an amendment to the pending bill that would raise the maximum wage on which benefits can be computed to $3,600—the figure set by the House bill. That would still be too low a base, providing too little protection against wage loss for workers in the higher wage brackets. But it, too, would be a step in the right direction. Together with the more liberal Senate formula for computing benefits, it would further increase the scale of benefits for higher paid workers, who would, of course, be called on to contribute more to the insurance fund.

The Senate proposal to freeze payroll taxes at existing levels until 1956 instead of raising the rates next January, as under the House bill, is debatable. But in view of the controversy over methods of financing the system as well as the strong political opposition to tax increases at this time, it is perhaps wise to postpone action on tax increases for the time being, especially as the proposed increases in coverage would bring new taxpayers into the system. Moreover, if the tax base were to be increased, a good many workers already covered and their employers would have to pay higher taxes. Finally, at present levels Senator GEORGE estimates that the receipts from payroll taxes will produce sufficient revenue to meet all benefit obligations for the next 5 years. As a result, the tax freeze would not have an inflationary effect on the economy.

The Senate bill omits a provision included in the House bill for pensioning workers who become permanently and totally disabled before reaching retirement age. We hope that this provision will be restored in justice to disabled workers who have made substantial contributions to the insurance system and in the great majority of cases have no other form of protection against a loss of earning power that compels them to rely on public or private charity until they reach the age of 65, if they ever do. Unfortunately, strong pressure has been brought to bear on the Senate to reject disability insurance under the mistaken impression that it would be an entering wedge for compulsory health insurance. It is unlikely, therefore, that this controversial provision of the House bill will be acceptable to the Senate.

On the other hand, there is widespread support for an amendment to the Senate bill calling for an expert study of the social-security system. As the country moves toward universal coverage, the question whether to retain the present trust fund method of financing or to substitute a pay-as-you-go system assumes increasing importance. Although the Washington Post believes that the present contributory system is preferable, there is room for honest difference of opinion on that score. However, action cannot be deferred until a solution has been found for all unsettled problems. Amendatory legislation is needed at once to shore up the present weak structure and lay the foundation for a comprehensive system that will be both adequate and nondiscriminatory.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Green	McKellar
Anderson	Gurney	Malone
Benton	Hayden	Maybank
Brewster	Hendrickson	Millikin
Bricker	Hickenlooper	Mundt
Bridges	Hill	Murray
Butler	Hoey	Myers
Byrd	Humphrey	O'Mahoney
Cain	Hunt	Pepper
Capehart	Ives	Robertson
Chapman	Jenner	Russell
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	Schoeppel
Cordon	Kefauver	Smith, Maine
Darby	Kem	Smith, N. J.
Donnell	Kerr	Sparkman
Dworshak	Knowland	Stennis
Eastland	Leahy	Thomas, Utah
Ecton	Lehman	Thye
Ellender	Lodge	Tydings
Ferguson	Long	Watkins
Flanders	Lucas	Wherry
Frear	McCarran	Wiley
Fulbright	McCarthy	Williams
George	McClellan	Withers
Gillette	McFarland

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into last week for the taking of a vote tomorrow at 4 o'clock on the social-security bill, which is the unfinished business, the time was to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the legislation. I merely mention this because those who desire to speak on the social-security bill had better speak today if they have speeches of any length, because tomorrow I presume the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and other members of the committee will desire to consume most of the 2 hours which will be divided between the Senator from Georgia and other Senators who favor the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator from Illinois plan to move a recess at this time, or is he going to leave the floor open for further speeches?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall leave the floor open for further speeches or debate on the pending question, or any other question, but if no Senator is prepared to speak, the Senator from Illinois is ready to move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the observation made by the majority leader is correct insofar as the time under the unanimous-consent agreement is concerned. I should like to point out to him, however, that there is no provision for control of the time between the proponents and opponents.

I am sure the majority leader will see that that is absent from the agreement, the reason being that there was no one to take charge of the time for the opponents. The time was simply divided, and the time is under the control of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado, who I am sure will take care of any Senator, insofar as time for speaking is concerned.

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps I was technically wrong, but there will be someone opposing the bill. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the colleague of the minority leader, is opposed to the bill, and has made a speech on it, and I suppose he might have time on the bill, which could be given him by the Senator from Colorado, or even by the Senator from Georgia. That is not the important consideration. What I am trying to do is to advise Senators, on this side of the aisle, especially, that unless they speak this afternoon, they run a chance of not being able to get the floor tomorrow.

I understand the Senator from Louisiana desires to speak, and under those circumstances, I yield the floor.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, will he not yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington would like to raise a question concerning the status of the selective-service bill. It had been my understanding that probably if there were a lag this afternoon, that bill would be brought before the Senate, because of the termination date being next Saturday.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator correctly understood the situation, but it is now 15 minutes after 3 o'clock. I had thought that perhaps if there were no speeches earlier in the day on the social security bill or other measures, I would move to take up the bill for the continuation of the Selective Service Act. But after conferring with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and other Senators who are interested, I was prevailed upon the wait until Wednesday before finally moving to take up the bill for the continuation of the Selective Service Act.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I find one of the greatest shortcomings of the bill reported to the Senate by the Senate committee to be that all provisions for aid to disabled persons other than blind persons have been stricken from the bill. In view of the fact that the Senate committee has taken the better part of one year to study this matter, I find it extremely difficult to discover any justification for the Senate committee striking the very worthy provision which was included by the House of Representatives, calling upon the Federal Government to aid in providing assistance for the disabled.

The bill as it passed the House provided for assistance to those totally and permanently disabled. I am thinking in terms of welfare cases. There are persons who have lost their arms, there are persons who have lost their legs, persons who have TB, cancer or have heart disease, who will never be able to work again in their lives. I see some of them in my home State of Louisiana in wheel chairs. I have occasion to visit some of them now and then at their homes, some who may live for 6 months, some who may live for 2 or 3 years, some who may live for 5 or 6 years. Those are certainly cases of more crying need than is the case of the ordinary aged person.

In the State of Louisiana we have tried to do something for such people. Louisiana probably leads the Nation in its attempt to provide for unfortunate disabled people who, by reason of sickness, or by reason of loss of arms, or legs, or other physical impairment, are unable to earn a living in any manner whatsoever.

Mr. President, I should think that anyone who would ponder on his Bible teaching would realize that we should not deny such people a little charitable help from the Federal Government. Yet we see the Federal Government ignoring them but ready to match the States under very liberal programs for aid in the cases of aged people. In my State we are able to work out a program for persons over 65 years of age, even though they may be able to do something for themselves.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has been unavoidably absent, and I should like to call his attention to the fact that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and the senior Senator from Illinois have offered an amendment which would take care of the very situation the Senator is now discussing. While we agreed that the Finance Committee should report the pending bill, we also reserved the right to offer certain liberalizing amendments from the floor of the Senate.

The subject matter the Senator from Louisiana is now discussing is contained in an amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself. I am very happy that the Senator is discussing the subject, and I hope he will cover it fully, because the question involved is a very important one.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am very pleased to have that information brought to my attention. I wonder if the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Pennsylvania includes in the public-welfare provision, as well as in the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance system, aid to the disabled?

Mr. LUCAS. I should have to examine the amendment more carefully to determine that point, but I believe it does. However, I shall make a determination of that question a little later.

Mr. LONG. From only a brief glimpse at the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Pennsylvania, not having had an opportunity to study it, I gain the impression that the amendment deals only with those who are covered by the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance system. I feel that once again we would be left with a blind spot for disabled persons who are not covered by the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance system, and, because they are not covered by social security, they would not have the benefits similar to those provided for the disabled in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will look into that phase of the matter, and if the amendment does not cover the point, I should like to have him, for the RECORD, elaborate upon the subject to which he is now referring.

Mr. LONG. I shall be pleased to do so. I hope the Senator will join me in supporting such an amendment as I have in mind in the event it is necessary to have such an amendment placed in the bill

Mr. President, in the State of Louisiana approximately 25,000 persons are classified as disabled. Most of those persons are disabled by reason of sickness of one sort or another. Some of those cases of disability have resulted from sicknesses suffered in early life; some by reason of cancer, tuberculosis, or heart disease. Many of the persons so disabled are bedridden; many of them are in wheel chairs; many of them, for one reason or another, are unable to provide for themselves.

The junior Senator from Louisiana felt that the House committee was somewhat overstrict in providing that in order to receive any sort of aid a disabled person would have to be totally and permanently disabled. It seemed to me that it should not be necessary to go that far if the State wanted to work out a State and Federal plan to help a disabled person. After all, why should it be necessary that a person be permanently disabled, if he is needy and totally disabled from earning a living? Suppose, for example, a man is in such a condition that, by virtue of some disabling injury, he will not be able to work for a living for 6 or 9 months, or possibly 1 or 2 years, even though at some time in the future it is possible he may be able to work again. If that person is needy, would it not seem that the Federal Government should be able to help him with the program now proposed, even though he is not permanently disabled, but certainly is totally disabled for a substantial period of time.

On the other hand, it seems to me that we should be able to help persons who are disabled even though they are not totally disabled. In this great Nation, we should eliminate this thing of having beggars on the streets trying to sell pencils, or the kind of cases I see in my home town occasionally—and I know every Senator sees such cases in their own States—of a man who has lost both legs, pushing himself along with two weights along the street, playing on some sort of an instrument, or inciting sympathy in some fashion to encourage people to buy pencils for two-bits, trying to get them to help him to exist, because no provision is made by our welfare program, to help such people.

We have done great things in this Nation to reduce poverty and to help those in need. Yet we leave this blind spot. Persons who are disabled I would assume represent, throughout the entire United States of America somewhere between one-half and 1 percent of our population. We leave those miserable, disabled people dependent entirely upon their relatives or dependent upon private charity entirely. That is the blind spot in our program.

Today if a man is 65 years old and needy, we will give him an old-age pension, even though he may be able to work in some fashion for a living. Yet to another man who is 64 years old, totally disabled, not able to lift his hand to provide himself any sort of employment or any sort of earning whatsoever, we say "No, you cannot have any sort of aid at all from your Federal Government."

In my State we have been obliged to have discussions as to how we can best use our State welfare money. In our program for the disabled we receive no Federal matching whatsoever. Naturally there is always a temptation to divert to the aged, money that could go to the disabled, because in aiding the aged, we are able to secure Federal matching and make our money go much further.

Some time ago the question was raised, If we had to economize on our State expenditures how should we go about cutting down on them? Many persons suggested that the wisest thing to do would be to cut back on the part of our program affecting disabled persons, because there the money would not go so far and would not reach so many persons. The director of our public welfare system wisely pointed out that that phase of our program was the one we could least afford to cut back, because they represented cases of the most crying need. We might be able to give an old person $50, by virtue of Federal aid, yet, because we had no aid for disabled persons under our Federal program, a disabled person would have to settle for maybe $20 or $25, when that person, if he were 65 years old would be able to receive $50 by virtue of the State and Federal programs.

Mr. President, I have heard that the Republican Party has, through its policy committee, established a policy that the Republican Party will oppose any sort of aid to disabled persons. I certainly hope that that is not the case. If that should be the case, I certainly hope that the Republican Policy Committee will reconsider their decision.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. THYE. I must say to the very able Senator from Louisiana that I am a Republican, and if the Republican Party has adopted such a policy I am not aware of it. I have never heard of it. I do not know that we have had such a policy under discussion. I am only sorry that Members who serve on the Policy Committee are absent from the floor, because I believe that such a charge should be answered by a member of the Republican Policy Committee. At least, I have not heard that the Republican Party has adopted any such policy as that to which the Senator from Louisiana has referred.

Mr. LONG. The junior Senator from Louisiana is certainly heartened to hear that statement from the senior Senator from Minnesota. I say that I have heard that such a decision was made. Not being a member of the Policy Committee nor a member of the Republican Party, I would be unable to know whether that statement is correct or not. I hope the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota is entirely correct, and that the Republican Party has not taken a stand in opposition to aid to disabled persons.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. THYE. All I can say is that if I had such a thought in mind, and if I were going to make mention of what the policy committee of a certain political party had decided, I would try to ascertain what the facts were before I made reference to that matter on the Senate floor.

Mr. LONG. I say to the Senator from Minnesota that I was informed by a person in whom I have some confidence, that such was the case. I will say, however, that my knowledge is entirely hearsay, and I stated it as being hearsay when I made that particular statement. I believe we will know how the Republican Party feels about this particular matter when we actually have a vote on the amendment dealing with this subject.

Mr. President, I certainly feel that the time is long past when we should cover this blind spot in our social-security program. In my opinion a Federal program to aid the disabled is more needed than any other provision in the pending social-security bill. We find in the bill a liberalization of benefits that individuals are presently drawing under social security. In many respects this bill contains a gratuity, because certainly in the sense of actuarial soundness, if the bill be looked upon in that sense, those persons who will receive greater social-security benefits did not pay enough money into the social-security program to pay for the benefits they will receive. Yet when it comes to the question of actual need we find that in the great category of disabled persons, who are not able to help themselves, the Federal Government is doing nothing to relieve the most dire cases of suffering and distress in America today.

Mr. President, I certainly hope that an amendment of this sort will be adopted to enable the Federal Government to help the States provide for their disabled persons. I propose to offer such an amendment myself. I hope that such an amendment will be adopted on the floor of the Senate when the voting takes place tomorrow.

I hope I shall have the support of the distinguished Senators from Illinois, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, and Senators from other States who, as I understand, have offered amendments to include the disabled in that phase of our old-age and survivors insurance program. It certainly seems to me that, after all the study which was made by the House committee and after the House of Representatives agreed to aid those who are permanently and totally disabled, it comes with ill grace for the Senate committee now to say that we should strike from the bill this worthy provision, which was inserted by the House of Representatives in order to see to it that we would be able to care for those who are disabled, even though they may not be old enough to receive benefits under our old-age-assistance program.

So, Mr. President, I hope the committee will reconsider, and will go along with us in regard to some sort of reasonable proposal to help those who are disabled. I hope we shall be able to have the Senate adopt to this bill an amendment by means of which we shall see to it that some provision is made in the Social Security Act for the cases of the most crying need in America, the persons who are disabled and are unable to earn a living for themselves, and who would be left out of coverage under the act if the bill recommended by the Senate committee, as that bill presently stands, were enacted into law.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT VERSUS TOTALITARIANISM

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, we, as a Nation, are moving toward an executive and bureaucratic order of Government which could take the form of a totalitarian dictatorship at any time. The form of such totalitarianism, Mr. President, could be socialism, communism, or fascism, depending upon the occasion and the whims of the party in power at the psychological moment.

Long ago the Socialist and the Communist groups in this country, believing that our republican, representative form of government should be radically changed, gave up the idea of bringing about such a change through a revolution, and settled down to the slower process of making such changes through the control of one of the major parties of our two-party system.

They do not carry Communist cards or in fact any identification with subversive groups, nevertheless they are definitely a dangerous security risk.

On June 15, 1950, Mr. President, I addressed a prominent American society in Carnegie Hall, in New York City, on the occasion of the testimonial concert for Cardinal Mindszenty, who, as we know, was imprisoned following a forced confession within the confines of an iron curtain country. Mr. President, Cardinal Mindszenty is a symbol, an example, of what might happen to anyone within such an area.

The government under which that outrage was perpetrated is an example of what can happen to any nation that chooses continually to move toward more and more executive and bureaucratic control.

Mr. President, it is the duty of those of us temporarily in policy-making positions to preserve our republican representative form of constitutional government—and to prevent a condition under which the same thing could happen here.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a copy of the address I delivered on June 17, 1950, in Carnegie Hall.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT VERSUS TOTALITARIANISM

(Address of Hon. GEORGE W. MALONE, of Nevada, before the American Society for Preservation of Sacred, Patriotic, and Operatic Music, New York City, N. Y., June 17, 1950, Carnegie Hall)

Mr. Chairman, I want first to pay a tribute to a great conductor and a great composer, Charles Albert McLain, and to the splendid testimonial concert to Cardinal Mindszenty by the Ensemble Chorale Society.

It was a great concert for a great man—no one, least of all the country in which Cardinal Mindszenty was convicted, believes him guilty of the crimes to which he has confessed.

It is the job of those of us who are temporarily in policy-making positions to maintain the principles and fundamentals of our republican representative form of Government to the end that no totalitarian form of control of our people can ever be established here.

The difference between the three forms of totalitarianism is that Communists and Fascists will shoot you to reach their objective, while the Socialists will spend you into it, and that is the course chosen by the present administration in Washington. A Communist is just an impatient Socialist.

We are spending you into a totalitarian form of government.

We are, through our own actions, making it unprofitable to invest venture capital in the economic structure of the Nation, and then claiming that more Federal organizations must be set up to furnish Government money for that purpose—the trend is toward Government control of capital—in place of private control, which constitutes a Socialist form of government.

And yet any form of totalitarianism—socialism, communism or fascism—is repugnant to the American people.

Through such control we are gradually setting up a totalitarian form of government which could be converted almost immediately into either a Socialist, a Communist, or a Fascist control.

TOTALITARIANISM

The Encyclopedia Britannica says of the totalitarian forms of government:

Socialism: "Reduced to its simplest legal and practical expression, means the complete discarding of the institution of private property."

Communism: "A term often loosely used to denote different systems of social organization aiming at common property of the means of production, or at an equal distribution of wealth and income, or both. Historically the term was frequently used as identical with socialism, as was done by Karl Marx and Fredrich Engels in their famous Communist manifesto (1848)."

Fascism: "The general framework of (the Fascist) organization was based on the fact that their employer is the state either directly or indirectly. 'Fascist social theory denied that the state is merely an instrumentality of the citizenry that the state is welfare, and asserted that the state is the the supreme end to which the needs and interest of its citizens, individually or collectively, have to be subordinated.' "

TOTALITARIAN GOVERNMENTS VERSUS ORGANIZED GROUPS

The ultimate objective of all forms of totalitarianism, whether it be socialism, communism, or fascism, is the perfect state, with the individual owning nothing. To be successful, they must destroy all strong organized groups, including religious, labor, and fraternal organizations.

THIS NATION'S RESPONSIBILITY

The trend of government, through Executive recommendations and resulting congressional action, has been toward Executive and bureaucratic control by Executive order and away from principles and constitutional government. It is the responsibility of Congress to prevent Executive control of this Government so that a Cardinal Mindszenty incident could not happen here.

INDEPENDENT BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT

The individual lust for power which drives men, temporarily in high office, to strive for control of government, motivated the founding fathers in setting up, not only the three independent branches of government—the legislative, judicial, and the executive—but a clear division between the Federal and States rights; that is, the specific fields in which each could legislate and exercise control.

DUTIES SPECIFICALLY DEFINED

The three branches of the Federal Government were set up independent of each other and their duties specifically defined by the Constitution of the United States.

That same Constitution then defined the rights of the separate States as those rights and duties of government not specifically granted to the Federal Government. All other rights were specifically reserved to the respective States.

Only through a republican form of government—the representatives elected by the people—can such a free government survive, and then only through a constant awareness and alertness by the sovereign people themselves.

FREEDOM NOT INHERITED

History discloses that freedom is not inherited; it is demanded and secured at great sacrifice by the people of a nation and retained only so long as the people demand it. Constant vigilance is the price of freedom.

Totalitarianism in the form of socialism, communism, or fascism, often comes in the guise of assistance to special groups, powerful at the moment, which are either willing to ignore the totalitarian trend, for the continued special attention—or who do not realize that the principle adopted to help them, may in fact be used against them.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT—BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

During the last two decades there has been much loose and irresponsible talk in describing the forms of government of the nations of the world—including our own.

Benjamin Franklin said, in 1789: "We have given you a Republic, if you can keep it."

George Sokolsky has recently defined our form of government: "By no definition is the United States a democratic state. It is a representative republic."

We have, thank God, been able to maintain the Republic—the republican form of government handed down to us by Benjamin Franklin and his associates.

We have maintained the same representative republican form of government. We do not have a democratic form of government. As a prominent Democrat recently said on the floor of the United States Senate: "Democracy is not a form of government—democracy is a spirit of government."

In the United States the government that Benjamin Franklin and his associates handed down to us is a republican-representative government where the people of the United States elect their representatives through processes laid down in their Constitution—and the duly elected representatives make the laws under which the economic structure and the conduct of the people are regulated.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

One of the greatest safeguards of our republican representative form of government set up by the Constitution of the United States was the unwritten law that no person might be elected to the Presidency for more than two consecutive terms.

The Eightieth Congress passed an amendment to the Constitution, which was submitted to the States making that unwritten law—first established by George Washington—the law of the land. Twenty-four States have approved the amendment—12 additional States must approve it to be effective.

MAKING POLITICAL COWARDS OF BUSINESSMEN

The Congress of the United States has set up an Executive-decree government during the last 18 years. This Executive-decree government is making political cowards out of the businessmen, and many otherwise independent organizations of this Nation.

It is necessary for you to know, as a basis for what I am about to say, that I am a Republican—and then to define the specific fundamental difference between the two major political parties—since we have a definite two-party system and your choice of government is exercised through such two-party system—it is necessary to know and understand the specific difference in principle of the two major parties in order that an intelligent decision by an individual may be made.

I will say to you that the Republican Party strayed for a long while—it lost its bearings and fell into the hands of its enemies—it fell into the hands of the camp followers and the "me-too'ers"—because it had lost its zip and positiveness, which can only come from knowing where it is going.

REPUBLICAN PARTY POSITION

I am glad to say to you now that the Republican Party has quit following false prophets. The Republican Party is definitely opposed to the Democratic Party program of tying the regulation of the national economy to its foreign policy.

The Republican Party is definitely opposed to the often reaffirmed platform of the Democratic Party of promoting unlimited imports of the products of the low-living standard and slave-labor foreign nations of the world.

It is for a floor under wages and investments—to preserve the standard of living of the workingmen and women of America—built up independently over a century of time.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY POLICY

It is necessary to define the exact principles of the two major parties as a foundation for any choice you may wish to make in the road ahead.

The pronounced foreign policy program of the Democratic Party—often reaffirmed—was set down in detail by Assistant Secretary of State Willard H. Thorp, in his testimony before the congressional House Ways and Means Committee in January of last year when he said:

"The European recovery program (Marshall plan or ECA) extends immediate assistance on a short-term basis to put the European countries back on their feet."

The ECA appropriation is designed to make up the trade-balance deficits of the 16 Marshall-plan countries in cash and goods each year—our chief export is cash—until such time as the markets of this Nation have been divided with the European countries and our living standards lowered to those of such nations.

"The trade agreements (act) program is an integral part of our over-all program for world economic recovery."

Under the Trade Agreements Act the markets of this Nation are being divided with the countries of the world to the point that theoretically there will be no further trade balance deficits—the 1934 Trade Agreements Act as extended removed the floor under American wages and investments—and stopped the flow of venture capital into the business stream of our Nation—the simple expedient of putting into the hands of the industrially inexperienced State Department the power to lower the tariffs and import fees approximately 75 percent after perfunctory hearings.

"The International Trade Organization upon which Congress will soon be asked to take favorable action, provides a long-term mechanism—each part of this program is important. Each contributes to an effective and consistent whole."

The ITO transfers the regulation of our national economy to a foreign-controlled organization consisting of 58 nations, each with one vote—we would have the same vote as Siam—it simply makes permanent a condition sought through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, as extended—and the ECA.

If and when the ITO is approved by the Congress of the United States, we are assigning the regulation of our foreign trade into the hands of the foreign nations of the world—all with an eye to obtaining a part of our high standard of living market.

The Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, has said: "It is hardly possible any longer to draw a sharp dividing line between the economic affairs and political affairs. * * * Each complements and supplements the other. They must be combined in a single unified and rounded policy. * * *" Through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act the Congress of the United States transferred its constitutional responsibility to regulate the national economy to the industrially inexperienced State Department—the ITO would make a second transfer to the control of the foreign nations.

Both Secretary of State Acheson and his assistant, Mr. Thorp, have appeared before that same House committee early in 1950 and urgently requested that the International Trade Organization be approved at an early date. The ITO is on the President's "must" list.

FINAL ABANDONMENT OF WORKINGMEN AND INVESTORS

This pronouncement marked the final abandonment of the workingmen and investors of our own Nation—in favor of the one-economic-world theory of averaging the living standards of the nations of the world—and no further venture capital for business development or stabilization could possibly be available since the State Department can choose the industries that are to survive and those that are to be sacrificed.

THE THREE-PART FREE-TRADE PROGRAM

This, then, is the three-part free-trade program tieing the national economy to the foreign policy—to which the Democratic Party is irrevocably committed—and upon which they have staked their entire combination domestic and foreign policy. This is the well-known bipartisan foreign policy—that for so long wrecked the Republican Party—and is moving toward merging this Nation with a foreign-controlled one economic world.

Spokesmen for the administration say that they have adopted this three-phase free-trade program to average our standard of living with the foreign nations of the world on the theory best expressed by one of their slogans that, "you cannot be prosperous in a starving world"; that we must divide our markets—the basis of our own income—with the nations of the world—and average the living standard of nations of the world—they say—to avoid world war III.

It is that party's avowed method of establishing world peace.

1950 REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

The Republican Party—on the other hand—believes in protecting American workers and investors against the competition of low-wage foreign goods. In other words, the Republican Party believes in maintaining our standard of living while we assist the foreign nations to raise their own standards.

It believes that the best safeguard of the peace of the world is a strong American economy.

The Republican Party believes that the regulation of the foreign policy should stop at the water's edge.

It believes that the domestic policy and the foreign policy should remain separated just as the Constitution of the United States provides.

It does not believe that imports from the low-cost and slave-labor foreign nations should be allowed to endanger American industry, nor the standard of living of the workingmen and women, and the farmers, of America.

It does not believe in exporting American jobs to foreign soil.

The 1950 Republican platform specifically establishes that party's definite and unmistakable position in the development of foreign trade. The Statement of Principles says:

"We favor the promotion of world trade on the basis of 'fair and reasonable' competition and we assert that this can be done within the Republican principle that foreign products of underpaid foreign labor shall not be admitted to this country on terms which endanger the living standards of the American workman or the American farmer, or threaten serious injury to a domestic industry. A strong American economy is a vital factor for our security."

THE FLEXIBLE IMPORT FEE

This means that a flexible-import-fee principle must be substituted for the 1934 Trade Agreements Act as extended, under which there would be no consideration of a high or low tariff or import fee—but such import fee would at all times correctly represent the differential in labor-living standards between here and abroad.

It would reestablish a floor under wages and investments—and again encourage the investments of American venture capital, the lifeblood of continued industrial growth and employment—and the development of additional taxable property in this Nation.

Such flexible import fees would be lowered in accordance with any improvement of the foreign nations' living standards—and when their living standards and working conditions approximate our own—then the common objective of free trade between this country and the foreign nations of the world would be almost automatic and immediate.

And our own economy—and employment—would not collapse in the process.

Eighty-five percent of the agricultural production of this Nation does not need a subsidy if the flexible-import-fee principle should be substituted for the 1934 Trade Agreements Act.

POLICIES OF TWO PARTIES DIAMETRICALLY OPPOSED

No one can possibly support the principles of the Republican Party and approve the Democratic Party's combination domestic and foreign free-trade program at the same time, since the fundamental principles of the two parties are diametrically opposed. Bipartisan foreign policy, like reciprocal trade, is a catch-phrase to sell the one-economic world philosophy to the American people and to again destroy the effectiveness of the Republican Party.

It is imperative that a thorough understanding of the fundamental differences in the two major political parties should be had so that an individual may make his choice in the regular manner.

THE 1934 TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

It must be understood that Congress transferred its constitutional responsibility to regulate foreign trade—to regulate the national economy through the regulation of imports, to the executive branch of the Government—through the 1934 Trade Agreements Act—and by that action placed in the hands of an industrially inexperienced State Department the fate of the workingman and investors of this Nation—and by that act effectively destroyed the flow of venture investment capital into the business and industrial life of this Nation.

By that act the Congress also placed in the hands of the State Department the right to say what industries would be preserved—and what industries in this Nation would be sacrificed on the altar of "one economic world."

The Constitution places the responsibility of fixing the foreign policy in the executive branch—therefore Congress also by that act alone tied the regulation of the national economy to the foreign policy.

RESULT IS UNEMPLOYMENT AND LOSS OF TAXABLE PROPERTY

As a result of the administration's three-part free-trade program, the textile, mining, lumber and wood products, the precision instruments, watch, crockery, petroleum, coal, and many other industries have been forced to curtail production and can only result in severe unemployment—a reduced standard of living and continued losses to the investors of this Nation.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

The International Trade Organization—on the must list of the President for legislation to be passed at this session of Congress—would now transfer the regulation of our national economy from the executive branch—the State Department—directly into the complete control of the foreign nations of the world—through the simple expedient of transferring the authority over our national economy into the hands of the foreign nations which want to sell their products, produced by the lower living standard and slave labor, in the markets of this country.

In this set-up, where are the sovereign people of the Republic of these United States?

The ITO is set up to include the 58 nations—with 58 votes—the United States would have one vote, the same as Siam—and that Organization would have the power to not only regulate our national economy through fixing the tariffs and import fees of its member nations—but it is empowered to set quotas of production for the countries signing its charter.

We can theoretically withdraw from the ITO after 3 years and 6 months' notice—but after 3 years we would be so bloody that it is unlikely that any withdrawal could be affected.

THE MARSHALL PLAN—ECA

The ECA—formerly the Marshall plan—is a stopgap arrangement to make up the trade-balance deficits of the 16 ECA European countries in cash and goods until such time as the markets of this Nation can be divided with the foreign nations of the world so that theoretically there would be no trade-balance deficit.

The taxpayers of America furnish the money to install the necessary industrial machinery in foreign countries to manufacture products that must be sold in competition with our own workingmen and investors—this fact alone discourages all future venture capital.

The administration's three-part free-trade program then included the 1934 Trade Agreements Act as extended—the ECA, formerly the Marshall plan—and the International Trade Organization.

IMPORTING PRODUCTS OF CHEAP LABOR

What is the practical difference in importing the products of cheap labor—and in importing the cheap labor itself? It is hardly consistent to support one and not the other.

Under the administration's three-part free-trade program the workers of this Nation are set back 50 years into direct competition with the sweat-shop labor of the foreign nations of the world.

POINT 4—THE BOLD NEW PROGRAM

Now the point 4—the bold new program—originally put forward in principle by Henry Wallace and then by Earl Browder, is designed to carry on where the ECA eventually leaves off, and will prove to be just one more siphon out of the United States Treasury.

Investments in the areas subject to socialization and nationalization of capital and industries can be written off when they are made unless the countries where the investments are to be made completely change their attitude toward such private investments.

Guaranteeing the integrity of private investments by the country in which they are made should be a definite and firm condition of any further aid from this Nation, of any kind.

It is definitely the responsibility of the recipient country to establish a business climate that encourages private investments—and our State Department should make such a condition a part of our foreign policy.

Much of the private investments to be guaranteed under the point 4 or "bold new program" are to be expended in the colonial areas including the Far East—and Africa—thus further guaranteeing the integrity of the colonial system which has been exploited by the empire-minded nations for from 100 to 300 years. In other words, under the guise of democracy, the American taxpayer is underwriting the greatest asset of communism in all of Asia, namely, the moribund colonial system—what every inhabitant of Asia calls the "foreign devils."

A UNITED STATES OF EUROPE—GERMANY

A United States of Europe—including Germany—should be a condition of further aid to that area.

John J. McCloy, United States High Commissioner in Germany, to the effect said "that no permanent solution of German problems seems possible without an effective European union." With a United States of Europe, Germany would no longer be the problem she now is.

We are torn between allowing Germany to become strong industrially, with the danger that she may join Russia and through that union seek to dominate the world, or to turn her into a harmless agrarian state with our endless financial support and with the always-present danger that a frustrated Germany would ultimately join Communist Russia anyway, since Russia is offering her industrial independence.

Russia has just made a trade treaty with Germany to furnish Russia with a large order of manufactured goods—and Russia is holding out the opportunity to Germany of furnishing the necessary manufactured and processed goods to Communist China—it is a great temptation and probably only a United States of Europe will prevent such a coalition.

OTHER CONDITIONS FOR FURTHER AID TO EUROPE

As a condition of further aid to Europe we should also insist upon the integrity of private investments within the 16 ECA nations—free convertibility of the currencies of the European nations as between such countries, and in terms of the dollar—and then loan such ECA money to private industry within the area through the World Bank on the same terms—no more lenient and no more stringent than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) loans money to private industry and individuals in this country in times of stress. There is no reason to loan money to an Englishman or to a Frenchman on easier terms than to a GI in this country.

In no case should we lend money or assistance of any kind whatsoever to the 16 European ECA or any other nations which are trading with or assisting Russia or the iron-curtain countries to prepare for world war III or to consolidate their gains in eastern Europe or in Communist China.

NINETY-SIX TRADE TREATIES WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

The 16 Marshall-plan (ECA) countries have made 96 trade treaties with Russia and the iron-curtain countries since World War II—that number are in good standing at this time—and such countries are shipping everything to Russia and the eastern European nations—everything they need to fight world war III and to consolidate Communist gains in eastern Europe and in Communist China.

These shipments include ball bearings, tool steel, electric equipment, freight cars, locomotives, trucks, tractors, heavy construction and agricultural equipment and many other items—while we are deceiving the American people into believing that we are not helping the Communist countries.

There can be little doubt that our State Department has committed this Nation to follow England in the recognition of Communist China just as soon as the Department's great propaganda machine has softened up the American people to the point that they will accept it.

Secretary Acheson's recent statement that the United States would not oppose the seating of the Communist representatives of Red China in the United Nations and the ousting of the regular representatives is sufficient proof that such recognition is their definite objective.

UNALIENABLE RIGHTS

The Old World philosophy was, and generally speaking is to this day, that the individual derives any right he may have from the state—his right to freedom, his right not to be molested, or mutilated—and that he has no such unalienable rights as the American Colonies laid down in their Declaration of Independence in 1776 and for which they fought and won the bitter struggle for independence—and which laid the foundation for the great nation that we now enjoy.

The philosophy of Americans from the firing of the first gun in the Revolutionary War in 1776—was that the individual had unalienable rights that he did not derive from the State in the first place—and that the State could not interfere with such rights. They believed that such rights included the dignity of man—his right of worship and his liberty.

The Republican Party believes in maintaining the three separate independent governmental departments to safeguard the unalienable rights of the individual—as established by the Constitution of the United States—and that any change shall be made by the consent of the States and not by subterfuges of any kind whatever.

ADMINISTRATION POLICIES AND TOTALITARIANISM

The policies of the administration including its hybrid three-part domestic and foreign program, are heading this Nation into a form of government by Executive order and bureaucratic control, which by its very nature could at any time be directed into a Socialist, Communist, or Fascist form of control.

The Republican Party wants to again separate the foreign policy from the national economy as the Constitution of the United States directs.

THE JUGULAR VEIN OF TOTALITARIAN GOVERNMENT

This separation is the jugular vein of this socialistic senseless one-economic-world program—and can be accomplished through the simple procedure of substituting the flexible-import-fee principle for the 1934 Trade Agreements Act as extended—and stopping the proposed International Trade Organization, which is on the President's "must" list of legislation for this year.

FAITH IN HUMAN LIBERTY

Faith in the value of human liberty is the greatest need of American civilization today. It may seem strange that in the country of the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg address, it seems necessary to make a plea for freedom.

Our country was conceived in liberty. It staked its future on the proposition that every human being is entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Noble ideals were not realized in the settlements that followed the two World Wars. The true victors in the First World War were not principles of freedom in any country. They were the Socialist, Communist, and Fascist principles of Mussolini, Lenin, and Hitler. These three together with Stalin helped turn what idealists had believed would be a golden age of peace and democracy into an age of class warfare and dictatorship—totalitarianism.

IDEALS VERSUS REALITIES

There is a gulf between the ideals and the realities of Europe at the present time. The crimes of peace—slave labor and the destruction of human initiative—rival the crimes of war.

There is no semblance of democracy and human rights in the police states of totalitarianism behind the iron curtain. In other European countries the principles of freedom and liberty are precariously maintained only because of unsettled conditions and behind the front of Socialist governments, kings, and dictators, and worse.

CHALLENGE TO FREEDOM

The world frontier of freedom has receded, not advanced.

Americans still believe in liberty. But their faith is not as passionate and as deeply reasoned as it should be at a time when that priceless heritage is being challenged as never before, both from without and from within.

The challenge from without comes from totalitarianism, a word that covers Socialist, Communist, and Fascist methods of rule.

The totalitarian state has several distinctive features. It is the state that owns and directs the people, not the people who own and direct the state. The individual in a totalitarian state has no rights that the state is bound to respect. In its final stages there is a single party and no opposition activity is permitted.

In a totalitarian government under whatever front, the individual derives his rights from the government. Under the republican representative form of government, the government derives its power from the individual—therein lies the difference between slavery and freedom—the dignity of man and the degradation of the people.

Under totalitarianism, the state penetrates into every aspect of human life, assumes control over every interest, organizes every activity. From birth till death, the subject of the totalitarian state has his life regulated for him. There is no escape, no refuge. It is the most complete slavery known to man. There is no sanctity of the home or any place else.

It controls every newspaper, every magazine, every radio broadcast. It decides what books may be printed, what may be taught in the schools. Totalitarian rulers fear any contact between their people and foreign visitors. The formula for totalitarian government is simple: unlimited propaganda with unlimited terrorism.

DANGERS TO LIBERTY FROM WITHIN

The greatest danger to our American heritage of liberty comes not from without but from within. It comes not from open frontal assault, but from a process of sapping and undermining.

The Fascist sympathizer has disappeared. The Communist sympathizer is most dangerous when he does not fly his colors openly but masks himself behind some nice-sounding camouflage as a liberal, a progressive, a friend of peace and democracy.

The peril to our American way of life, with its roots in individual liberty, is not violent revolution but gradual erosion through the reiteration of political and economic fallacies which the majority of people begin by disregarding and end by half believeing.

One of the most fashionable of these fallacies is to sell liberty short—they say that "Liberty may be well enough in its place, like some antique, but it is not something the common man can eat or wear."

It is also suggested that liberty should be thrown over if it comes into conflict with security.

STANDARD OF LIVING

But the fact is: it is no accidental coincidence that the countries with the highest standards of living for all of our people are also the countries where liberties are best respected. The bottoms of depressions in countries where human liberties are respected are above the tops of the best periods in countries under totalitarianism. Asia has no standard of living.

The movement of political refugees from totalitarian to the free countries is a strictly one-way street.

PRIVATE PROPERTY—SIGN OF FREEDOM

True economic freedom like political freedom, must be based on liberty and consent, and upon checks and balances in government which will prevent undue concentration of power in the hands of any single man or group of men.

Friedrich Hayek, in his Road to Serfdom, put the case for the check-and-balance theory of economic democracy very ably in these words:

"What our generation has forgotten is that the system of private property is the most important guaranty of freedom, not only for those who own property, but scarcely less for those who do not. It is only because the control of means of production is divided among many people acting independently that nobody has complete power over us, that we as individuals can decide what to do with ourselves."

PROLONGED WARTIME CONTROLS DANGEROUS

At the close of the war advocates of a regimented planned economy (totalitarian) saw in the necessary temporary controls of the war period the pattern of a future all-powerful and all-wise bureaucratic state which would have arbitrarily controlled wages, prices, and profits and would have told every citizen how much milk he should drink, how many vegetables he should eat, and how many cotton and silk shirts he should wear.

This is not just a funny caricature. We escaped an indefinite prolongation of rationing and other controls by a margin too narrow for comfort.

LIBERTY AND A HEALTHY ECONOMIC ORDER

Liberty is the first condition of a good society and a healthy economic order. We, in the American tradition, should stand for the free functioning of all groups concerned in the productive process, labor and management, farmers, and distributors.

There can be no doubt that this insures a more civilized way of life and a higher standard of national living than any dictatorial, totalitarian effort to force all workers and producers to submit to regimentation.

There is one principle to a constitutional free society—under a republican form of government—it is the principle that makes reverence for personality and human freedom the end and touchstone of human endeavor, The dignity of the individual.

That is the significance of the Mindszenty outrage behind the iron curtain.

As Americans we must not let freedom down.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "Hanging Out the Wash," an intimate message from Washington, by Harlan Trott, which appeared in the Christion Science Monitor of May 18, 1950, showing that the principle of free trade affects all workingmen and investors alike—covers excerpts of the debate between Senator NEELY, of West Virginia, and the junior Senator from Nevada.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HANGING OUT THE WASH

(By Harlan Trott)

WASHINGTON.—What have clothespins to do with petroleum?

Senator GEORGE MALONE, Republican, of Nevada, brought that one up during a debate on the importation of cheap foreign oil.

Many Senators are worked up over that issue which cuts straight across partisan and geographical lines.

Senator MATTHEW NEELY, Democrat, of West Virginia, started it off with one of his characteristically colorful speeches protesting that cheap foreign oil was pricing coal out of business.

Senator MALONE took the line that it's too bad about those 35,000 coal miners thrown out of work because of a flood of cheap foreign oil is undermining the coal market.

"I want to say further," Senator MALONE declared, "that it not only includes coal and petroleum, but it goes all the way from coal and petroleum to clothespins, which are a product of the home State of the Senator from Maine, Mrs. MARGARET SMITH."

Senator MALONE recalled how on one occasion Senator SMITH had talked about clothespins rather earnestly at a hearing of the august Finance Committee, and how she said it was simply a case of Sweden's producing clothespins, paying something like 54 cents an hour, while in Maine the workers were paid 96 cents an hour.

The Senator from Nevada used this homely illustration to remind his colleagues that the petroleum question is just as simple as that. And what applies to petroleum and clothespins applies to products of the mines and farms, he insisted.

Now whenever you have a Republican Member from the not so internationally minded western interior not only sympathizing with a liberal Member from the other side of the aisle but practically weeping on the other's shoulder, the performance is worth watching.

And the opposition has to be on its guard.

Senator NEELY had argued that the United States has no place to dump its slack coal (the cheap semipowdery stuff that is only fit to burn under the boilers in electric power plants) but that the whole United States is a dumping ground for slack residual oil from the Middle East and Latin America.

This was where Senator MALONE came in. "Does not the Senator from West Virginia," he asked, "agree with Mr. Thorp (Willard Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs) when he testified that the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, the ECA, and the International Trade Organization were each necessary to the President's program, are each dependent upon the other?"

Mr. NEELY was not caught napping. "I hope that the Senator will confine his questions to imported oil, the subject I am discussing.

"Senator MALONE. I should like to state the question so that I would have a specific answer, because I have great regard for the Senator from West Virginia. * * * Does the Senator agree with Mr. Thorp that such a policy is a wise policy for this country?

"Senator NEELY. I cannot answer as to the general policy indicated without much more consideration than I have given the matter. Today I am confining my remarks to the foreign oil that is flooding the country.

"Senator MALONE. I would ask the Senator, then, in view of the information now available concerning the effects on industry, if he would favor a review of the whole question on the Senate floor?

"Senator NEELY. If any other article of commerce is in peril similar to that which now bedevils our coal, oil, and railroad industries, I shall work and vote for whatever proper measure may be necessary to protect it from annihilating competition."

Like his Democratic colleague from West Virginia, presumably Senator MAYBANK, of South Carolina, also supports the administration's foreign-trade policy—subject to reservations cited in his speech demanding protection for his State's textile industries, for which Senator MALONE warmly complimented him.

"Which way will you have your tariff—all in one legislative loaf as some Senators prefer, or sliced into collective exemptions to please all the free-traders?"

Credit Senator MALONE for his shrewd airing of a familiar dilemma in American politics, and for the neat way he pegged it to the line with that apronful of Senator MARGARET SMITH'S clothespins.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an article entitled "The Third Bite," which was published in the San Antonio (Tex.) Light of May 3, 1950, showing the trend by this administration of taking over the obligation of the world.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE THIRD BITE

The utterly preposterous proposition will soon be offered to Congress that the United States, after loans and other forms of assistance to Great Britain amounting to many billions of dollars, now assume responsibility for the payment of British debts to other countries amounting to an additional $8,000,000,000.

But the American people should not delude themselves that this proposition will be rejected by Congress merely because it is preposterous.

The British Government which has already taken two great bites out of the resources of America, the postwar loan and the subsequent Marshall-plan gifts, is now all set for an even bigger third bite.

This would be accomplished by American agreement to ship goods essential to economic rehabilitation to India, Pakistan, Egypt, and other countries to which Great Britain is now indebted, all of these countries in turn agreeing to scale down the British debt in the exact amount of the value of the American goods thus received.

Thus, not merely in effect, but in actual fact, the United States would pay off the British debt.

It is understandable that the British Government should propose such a thing.

It is even understandable that the British Government should expect American acceptance of such a program, since we have already contributed enormously to British recovery and rehabilitation since the war and have reduced our own resources proportionately.

But it is wholly incomprehensible that any official agency of the American Government, responsible for the welfare and security of the United States could seriously suggest that the payment of British debts be our national policy.

Nevertheless, the American State Department has not only given its approval to that proposition but will support it before Congress and will conduct a Nation-wide campaign of propaganda in its behalf.

It will be the biggest give-away program in the history of an administration which is already without peer for sheer profligacy.

"It means that the American taxpayers will keep India, Pakistan and Egypt in the sterling bloc," says Senator MALONE, of Nevada.

"The goods we give them will be credited to the British, and the British in turn will sell for cash.

"It will definitely close these markets to any American commerce, except for that which the State Department would have us give away."

With unemployment increasing steadily in the United States and with the productive enterprises of the country burdened with excessive taxation and the American people harassed by excessive Government spending it is an evil prospect as Senator KEM, of Missouri, remarks:

"This project on top of the Marshall plan and other billions poured into Europe will make it impossible for us to do much to help ourselves."

America is dissipating its wealth and resources in consequence of the first two bites into the heart of our economy by the British.

This third and latest bite will further impair the living standards of our people and reduce their prosperity and bring nearer and make more imminent their ultimate impoverishment.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the column under the headline, "The political parade," by George Rothwell Brown, as it appeared in the New York Journal-American for May 4, 1950, showing that the administration's three-part free-trade policy is definitely pointed to a "one economic world" and the averaging of our living standards with those of the low-wage living standards and the slave labor of the foreign nations of the world.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POLITICAL PARADE

(By George Rothwell Brown)

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Mr. Truman's politically minded Secretary of Agriculture has taken a radically advanced step down the totalitarian road to a one-world Socialist state, by moving the Brannan plan into the international picture.

This is the significance of his appearance before the House Foreign Affairs Committee—packed with State Department sympathizers—to advocate the adoption of the administration's resolution which would put the United States under the Geneva-Habana charter of the International Trade Organization.

While the Secretary of Agriculture was thus adding to the pressure which Secretary Acheson is bringing to bear on Congress for additional economic powers in the foreign field, a small group of Republicans in the Senate were taking the administration's tariff and European-aid programs to pieces.

Brannan told the House committee that membership in ITO would help American farm-export markets, notwithstanding this specious argument is easily refuted by current import statistics on foreign agricultural products.

Senators KEM, of Missouri, MALONE, of Nevada, and JENNER, of Indiana, have been hammering remorselessly at the pending ECA bill, to carry on the Marshall plan for another year.

They have done a magnificent job, teamwork at its best—but unhappily in a Senate of well-nigh empty seats for the Democrats apparently are deliberately boycotting the debate on one of the most important measures to come before Congress this year, affecting the business, employment, savings, and wages of the American people.

At the House of Representatives a revolt led by Representative DAN REED, of New York, against the reference of the ITO resolution to Foreign Affairs, instead of to Ways and Means, where, as a tariff bill, it properly belongs, thus far has been the sole evidence of open hostility to it.

But on the Republican side of the Senate a formidable opposition to ITO is developing, forecasting a determined effort to prevent American membership in this international subsidiary of the United Nations.

During the debate on the pending European-aid bill, Senator MALONE defied the administration, and dared it to have the ITO charter brought to the Senate floor for a show-down vote. He implied it would be defeated.

He characterized it as being, with the Trade Agreements Act and ECA, the third part of a three-part free-trade system that would make permanent what the first two have temporarily established.

That is precisely the nub of the question.

MALONE charged that in the interest of the so-called bipartisan policy, it had been suggested that ITO be withdrawn during the present session, with action deferred until the Republicans can take a more enlightened view.

"What is meant is," said the Nevada Senator, "until they can look at this instrument through the eyes of the one-worlders, which would average the standard of living of the United States with that of the foreign nations of the world—and perhaps through the so-called bipartisan policy secure an agreement that the legislation will pass the Senate.

"The ITO is but one more device affecting private trade which has been placed under the umbrella of that greater protective phrase 'bipartisan foreign policy.'"

What is happening in Washington is the steady emergence of the Roosevelt-Hull-Truman foreign economic policy, under the Marshall plan, the Trade Agreements Act, ECA, ITO, and point 4 as a paramount political issue in the elections of 1950 and 1952.

The Republican Party is divided, but its majority group is steadily rallying to its historic position.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, finally, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article entitled, "MacArthur Aide Submits Plan He Says Will Win Cold War," by Walter Trohan, as published in the Washington Times-Herald for June 14, 1950, recommending a United States of Europe, and utilizing the Monroe Doctrine, long advocated by the junior Senator from Nevada in place of agreements, and to quit the senseless assistance to nations which are furnishing the material to Russia and the iron-curtain countries through the 96 trade treaties for the world war III, and to consolidate their gains in eastern Europe and China.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MACARTHUR AIDE SUBMITS PLAN HE SAYS WILL WIN COLD WAR—GENERAL FELLERS LISTS STEPS TO BE TAKEN IN NEW WORLD STRATEGY FOR PEACE

(By Walter Trohan)

The United States can win the cold war by adopting a new world strategy for peace, in the studied opinion of Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers (retired), who served for 5 years with General MacArthur.

Writing in Human Events, Washington news letter, Fellers offered an eight-point program to implement the new strategy. This is:

1. Keep cold war costs on a sound economic level by limiting foreign military aid; cutting present expenditures for our Army and Navy. This would permit our national genius—an expanding free economy—to provide the real foundation for our whole effort.

URGES STRONGEST AIR FORCE

2. Build without delay the best air force in the world with, of course, adequate support by ground and naval forces. This, too, would reflect the productive genius and human resourcefulness of our people.

3. Improve intelligence agencies—the eyes of defense.

4. Insist that our allies form a United States of Europe; help them to eliminate the threat of civil war. Our military aid should be limited to equipment essential for internal security forces—in the hope of paralysis of the fifth column.

5. Extend the Monroe Doctrine over South Korea, Japan, Formosa, and the Philippines, a positive stand.

6. Foster friendship with strategic Moslem countries. Possibly Libya offers the closest air bases, which we could essentially hold, to Russia's vulnerable areas.

7. Make peace treaties with Japan and Germany with or without Russian consent.

8. Project the truth through the iron curtain to put the Soviet Government on the defensive in its 30-year war against the Russian people. This transcends all other cold-war measures as truth is the inner light by which we must help the Russian people to see and understand.

WOULDN'T ABANDON ALLIES

"This suggested strategy in no way contemplates abandonment of our European allies," Fellers said. "Rather, it is the only course which insures their survival if war comes. In American resourcefulness and genius for production—which could enable us to gain mastery of the air—rests our hope for peace and our insurance for victory should war come."

"Our present obsolete, piecemeal strategy slights all fronts except the European. It offers no assurance of success.

"Our new strategy must be new world in concept. It must be one which is effective continuously. The new strategy must view Russia as an entity; it must promise success and provide effective pressure when and where required."

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the workingmen and investors of America are waking up to the definite plan of the administration to place them in direct competition with the sweat shop and slave labor of Europe and Asia, thereby causing unemployment and loss of taxable property.

Mr. President, whether the competitive sweat-shop labor is located in New England, old England, or in Asia, the result is the same—either a definite lowering of our standard of living, or unemployment, or both.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, a moment ago I asked and obtained consent to have printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a report entitled "How To Raise Real Wages," released on June 14, 1950, by the Committee for Economic Development. In that connection, I stated that the report is an extraordinary one, outlining a 10-point plan to double the real income of the average citizen, over the next 30 years, through the steady growth of our private business system. The conclusion of that report on national policy that real wages can be doubled in the next 30 years is sponsored by such a distinguished group of industrialists and business leaders; and their conclusion is germane to the measure now before us, which is the culmination of a decade of study by the Finance Committee to improve and strengthen the base of social security being developed for every member of our free society.

Mr. President, the goals of an expanding economy under free enterprise go hand in hand with the objectives of social security for all the American people. There is no conflict between those two things. Thus, I wish to say that I shall vote for many liberalizing amendments which I understand are to be submitted tomorrow in order to cover more persons and to bring the benefit levels more in line with present-day living standards.

Mr. President, I rise now in particular to associate myself on the RECORD with the amendment submitted on June 14 by the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], for himself and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. That amendment deals with aid to dependent children. This is a subject in which Mrs. Benton and I have long been interested.

Mr. President, on Whitsunday, May 28, 500,000 children marched in Berlin, under Soviet banners, organized in the so-called Free German Youth movement. I may say that often when I read in the newspapers the phrase "Free German Youth," I wish the newspapers would print in parentheses, immediately afterward, the word "Communist," because the phrase "Free German Youth" is a classic example of the way the Communists distort our words for their own propaganda ends.

On that occasion, Mr. President, there marched in Berlin one-half million children from every part of the eastern zone of Germany—boys and girls from 6 to 16 years of age. They marched with the same sickening rhythm, the same set faces, the same sense of self-importance that were manifested by the Hitler Youth of late and tragic memory.

As those children of the eastern zone of Germany marched in military array under their new Soviet drill masters, they sang, as they had been taught and told to sing, We Are the Children of the New Era.

Mr. President, the distinguished journalist, Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin, commented in the New York Times of June 1 that the impressionable minds and spirits of these children "are the blank paper upon which the Politburo hopes to write the history of tomorrow. Marxism knows no date or deadline for its conquest of the spirits of men; it is proselytizing the young, knowing that if it wins the battle for the minds of youth, it has won—in the long-term view—the battle for the world."

On Decoration Day I personally was privileged to review a parade of school children in my town of Fairfield, Conn. The children moved along waving their American flags and smiling to their parents on the side lines. None of the children was in step. None of the lines was maintained in anything resembling military array. In speaking to the group after the parade I complimented the marchers and the parents and those responsible for the arrangements. I said, "Thank God, they cannot keep step. It was a great parade." Of course, Mr. President, it was a typical parade of free American children, and it was a wonderful sight, contrasting particularly with the scene which had unfolded a few days before in the unhappy city of Berlin.

Who will dispute that the welfare of our children and the support and maintenance of the homes in which they are reared have first claim upon our democratic society? Even the most casual observer of family life recognizes that poverty and emotional insecurity are the breeding grounds of emotional and physical maladjustment and disease, of antisocial attitudes, and even of cynicism or resistance toward the fundamentals of our free institutions and our economic system. Any constructive measure we can take in this area of our national life will be, in my opinion, the soundest financial investment that can possibly be made by the United States today in our country's future.

In order to appreciate fully the amendment about which I am speaking, let us go back for a moment to the beginning of the national effort to provide a measure of social security for dependent children. Even before the enactment of the Social Security Act in 1935, most States had established what was then known as mother's aid or mother's assistance or mother's pensions, in aid of children—any child whose father had died, was incapacitated, or was absent from the home for other reasons. In 1929, about 44 States had such mother's aid laws, involving an aggregate expenditure of $30,000,000 per annum. So this goes back a long time. Even in that remote period of rugged individualism, the States were striving to insure to dependent children the kind of home and family life that was so necessary to healthful growth and full development. Most of the mothers thus aided would otherwise have attempted to support their children by striving to be both breadwinner and homemaker, under conditions of stress and poverty.

These State laws of the 1920's had many inadequacies, and they largely broke down during the depression years. Thousands of mothers went on the relief rolls. National attention was thus focused on this identifiable group in our society, this group which required long-range assistance and support, not merely at the State level but through the instrumentality of the Federal Government; working, of course, in cooperation with the States and localities. Title IV of the Social Security Act of 1935 was born on this self-evident need.

At the present time, under the 1935 law, more than 1,580,000 children in 622,000 families are receiving public assistance. The Federal share of this aid is based on a matching formula, under which the maximum Federal share is $16.50 monthly for the first child and $12 monthly for each additional child. Nothing whatever is contributed toward the support, however needy, of the mother who is caring for the child. The parent or other caretaker, therefore, has to divide this money and take money from it in order to live out of the subsistence payment calculated only to meet the child's need. Of course, in many instances the States supplement these payments out of their own funds, but in many other instances the States have all they can do financially to provide the matching of funds required by Federal law, so that the $27 maximum toward which the Federal Government contributes its $16.50 becomes the maximum, the total the State can pay.

Even counting the State and local contribution, the national average per recipient—that is, the child plus the mother—is only $20.44 a month. This is the total aid per recipient from all sources. The totals per recipient paid in the various States, of course, vary greatly. They range from $38.51 monthly in the State of Washington to only $7.13 monthly per recipient in the State of Mississippi, or $1.75 a week per recipient.

The purpose of this entire aid-to-dependent-children program is, of course, the maintenance of the home. Certainly a home without a father needs a mother to take care of children. After all, the Federal Government undertook this program because in 1935 the Government realized that the States could not carry the burden of their mothers' aid programs. But since then, and even at that time, the Government failed to follow through in this vital respect. The great majority of these dependent children live with their mother only. If these were large families, perhaps it could be reasoned that one more mouth to feed might not make much difference, though, as the father of four children, I have my doubts about the validity of that reasoning, particularly in the face of the low payments which are all many States can afford.

But these families are not large. They have been cut off in midlife. In this category the national average is only 2.5 children per family. It is easy to see what it will mean in such a small family group to have to feed and clothe an additional person. It is even easier to see what it must mean in the many instances of a mother with an only child, when the already scanty subsistence allowance for the child must be divided between the mother and the child.

The Senate Finance Committee has recommended a small increase in the matching ceiling, from $27 up to $30 a month, with a corresponding small increase in the maximum Federal contribution, up to $18 for the first child. But the committee has rejected the sound provision in the House-approved bill authorizing Federal assistance for the mother or other responsible parent on the same level as that for the first child; namely, the $30 maximum, monthly, with maximum Federal contribution of $18. This should apply, Mr. President, for the mother as well as for the child.

The amendment in behalf of which I am speaking would, in effect, restore this sound provision in the House bill.

I, of course, heartily agree with the committee's objective to make insurance the primary program in order to reduce the need for public assistance. But this admirable objective, Mr. President, can become effective only as the new law operates over a period of years. The present needs of today's mothers and today's children cannot be neglected over the next few years on that account.

Let me emphasize that this amendment is not a family-allowance provision regardless of need. The very modest sum which represents the maximum Federal contribution, for the mother, as well as for the child, would be paid only in cases of need, as certified by the responsible State agencies, and only in the amount needed, up to the modest limits of $18 for the mother and $18 for the first child.

I repeat, Mr. President, that existing law makes no provision for needy mothers as such; and under existing law, and under the Senate committee bill, the maximum Federal contribution toward aid to dependent children is, in fact, $9 per person, including the mother and the child in the essential family unit, as compared to $30 of maximum Federal contribution per individual authorized for a needy old or blind person under the very same law. Here we have $9 for a mother and $9 for a child, in contrast with $30 under this bill for a needy old or blind person.

There seems no reasonable basis for such inequitable treatment of mothers and of children by the Federal Government.

All of us with children know that it costs as much if not more to rear children in health, decency, and self-respect than to maintain an adult. It is surely no less important to make this investment in our future citizens than it is to provide decently for those who have retired. It is certainly neither equitable nor sound economy to provide for these children less than a third in Federal aid of what we provide for the aged or the blind.

The American Legion, which has long championed the needs of children through the splendid work of its child welfare committee, has been particularly active in advocating this change in the Social Security Act. The American Public Welfare Association, the American Parents Committee, many church, welfare, labor, and women's groups have joined in pressing for this surely compelling reform.

The amendment about which I am speaking calls for considerably less than the $50 ceiling for the mother as well as for the first child, recommended by the Advisory Council on Social Security, appointed in the Eightieth Congress by the Senate Finance Committee. Senators will recall that this council was headed by the late Edward R. Stettinius and included in its membership outstanding experts representing the general public, such as Sumner H. Slichter, of Harvard University; J. Douglas Brown, dean of the faculty of Princeton University; Marion D. Folsom, treasurer of the Eastman Kodak Co. and more recently chairman of the Committee for Economic Development, and N. Albert Linton, president of the Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co.

These distinguished citizens recommended and voted for funds far in excess of funds proposed in this amendment.

For 15 years, largely through inadvertence in drafting the original Social Security Act, this condition of inequality has existed. For 15 years the most precious family bonds were in effect discriminated against and resulted in a burden and a cause of privation.

The Senate Finance Committee has been realistic in authorizing increased appropriations to strengthen the services for children in other provisions of the bill. I am now pleading that the Senate vote to bring the aid to dependent children into closer harmony with the purpose for which it was established, namely, safeguarding the home in which the children are to be reared, by including authorization of aid for the needy mother who takes care of the dependent child in their home.

This is the year of the midcentury White House conference on children and youth in a democracy. It is a good year, a happy moment, to adopt this amendment which embodies so well our democracy's objectives for its citizens of tomorrow.

Mr. President, I earnestly hope the Senate will act favorably on the amendment when it comes to a vote tomorrow.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. BENTON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should like to advise the Senator that there are many of us who certainly hope the Senator's amendment meets with success, because it has been found, particularly in our experience in the State of Louisiana, that there is a need to help the mother to stay in the home and care for her children, and we have found the necessity of carrying such a burden, without Federal aid in some cases, and we know that such an amendment is necessary.

Mr. BENTON. I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Louisiana. I should like to claim the amendment as my own. It is the amendment of the distinguished majority leader [Mr. LUCAS] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. The truth is that had I not been in Italy, had I not been attending the UNESCO conference in Florence as one of the two congressional representatives of the President, I would have offered the amendment myself. Now I hope I may associate myself with those Senators on the amendment when it is placed before the Senate for a vote tomorrow.

I yield the floor. Mr. President.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded, and that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a great deal of progress has been made since 1935 in reaching the goal of adequate security for the senior citizenry of the United States. All those who had a part in pioneering this great program and in carrying it forward are entitled to the thanks not only of their beneficiaries but of the entire country as well. Another signal step forward is evidenced by what the House of Representatives has done in H. R. 6000 and in the amendments to H. R. 6000 which have been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance and are now under consideration. Undoubtedly this measure will go far beyond what has been done in the past both in the extension of the coverage and in increasing the benefits to those who are the direct beneficiaries of this program.

Mr. President, all that is very good. We all commend it, as well as those who had a part in bringing about the progress. However, we still face the question, Mr. President, of whether what is even now proposed will adequately meet the problem of the aged and permanent and totally disabled. It is evident that our senior citizens have annual incomes lower than those of all our people. The per capita income in 1948 in the United States was $1,410 and in my State of Florida it was $1,137. Whereas the median income of aged persons with incomes in 1948 was only $308. If we include the 3,500,000 persons 65 and over with no incomes, the average of these older people would be far less than $808, which is pitifully low as it is.

I have spoken of the 11,270,000 aged. First I said that three and one-half million of them had no income at all. Then I said that seven and one-half million who had any income had an average income of $808 a year. Then I said that of the 11,000,000, 1,270,000 over 65 years were beneficiaries of the old-age and survivors insurance fund. But, including the benefit which they got under the old-age and survivors insurance fund, 470,000 had total annual incomes under $500, and 470,000 had total annual incomes between $500 and $1,000.

We face not only the economic but the moral problem of whether or not we are providing adequately for those senior citizens, who have not only been the fathers and mothers of this generation but also have borne in their own peculiar way the burden of this generation's work and progress and have contributed so much in the past toward the creating of our present national prosperity. And look how they are faring.

Mr. President, an analysis of the number of aged persons in the United States confirms the fact that there are several million of our honored older citizens who have no visible means of support. In June 1949, 1,800,000 were on old-age and survivors insurance rolls; 3,600,000 were on other kinds of public-assistance benefit rolls; 2,780,000 were employed—aged wives of these employed totaled 890,000; 2,200,000 were neither on benefit rolls of any sort nor employed.

Of the 11,270,000 persons 65 years and over, 6,015,000 were single, widowed, or divorced; 3,302,000 were married with a spouse 65 or over. In other words, there were a little over a million and one-half couples both of whom were 65 and over; 1,800,000 men or women over 65 had a spouse under 65. There again, Mr. President, we see something of the problem we have to face.

Let me show how utterly inadequate are the payments which are now being made under the old-age assistance and aid to the blind programs. In March 1950, under old-age assistance, the payments on an average were $43.94; in Florida they were $40.47.

For the blind the benefits in the United States on an average were $47.70; in Florida they were $42.93.

The number of beneficiaries in March 1950, under the old-age assistance program, was 2,760,379; in Florida the number was 68,121.

The blind, who were the recipients of benefits under the present program, numbered 94,065; there were 3,259 in Florida. In other words, there were about 2,950,000 aged and blind persons living on $50 or less a month in the United States and 71,500 in Florida—when the cost of living is at the highest it has been in over a quarter of a century and when our national prosperity is at the peak of all times.

If we think that the aged and the blind fared badly, the recipients of old-age benefits under the present Social Security Act are not even doing as well as they are. The old-age and survivors insurance benefits in Florida in June 1949, were as follows:

Primary benefit	$25.25
Wife's benefit	13.60
Aged widow	19.62
Widow with dependent children	18.98

A dependent child got $11.76, an aged parent $12.84.

The average benefit under old-age and survivors' insurance has increased 19 percent since 1939, whereas consumer prices, representing the increase in cost of living, have increased about 70 percent. In the same period the per capita income has increased 145 percent. We see, therefore, Mr. President, the grossly inadequate benefits we have provided so far to meet the needs of this segment of our citizens.

Under the Senate committee bill retired workers now on the rolls would get an increase of $20 to $72.50, as contrasted with the present minimum of $10 to $46.50 a month, under the present law. The average benefits for these would be $48, compared with $26 under the present law. Those who retire in the next few years would get about $55 a month.

Mr. President, these are the possible benefits, even under the amendments before us, and I commend the Committee on Finance for having gone beyond the House of Representatives in the pending measure. But we see the limited figures of what would be available to the beneficiaries, even under the bill recommended to us by our distinguished Committee on Finance, whereas the budget for aged couples, on even a modest scale, is, according to every reputable inquiry which has been made, from $120 to $150 a month.

It will be remembered that in the Senate hearings it has also been pointed out that there is a great discrepancy in the percentage of those who are receiving old-age assistance in the several States in relation to the age 65 and over; 10 percent in some States to 80 percent in other States, with an average of 23 percent for the Nation.

I see the distinguished junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] is on the floor. I understand the percentage in his State getting old-age assistance runs up to 80 percent of those who are 65 and over.

Dr. Slichter, the famous Harvard economist who has served so ably on the Advisory Council on Social Security in the Eightieth Congress, says that assistance through the means test places greater reward to the less thrifty, whereas old-age insurance which has no means test, upholds the dignity and self-respect of workers, and encourages self-reliance and thrift through a contributory plan. I concur in these views and believe that we should now once and for all root out of our social-security system, that degrading and humiliating test.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was talking with another Senator when the distinguished Senator from Florida mentioned Colorado. As I understood him he suggested that perhaps 80 percent of those over 65 years of age in the State of Colorado were on public assistance. It is roughly 50 percent.

Mr. PEPPER. Fifty percent?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. There were some States in which the figure ran as high as 80 percent. I thought Colorado was in that category. I know Colorado pays a very high amount, one of the highest in the country.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Colorado pays a very high amount. We pay as high as perhaps $73. The difference between that and what we receive from the Federal Government, of course, is paid for by Colorado, which is quite a tribute to the State's own resourcefulness.

Mr. PEPPER. I commend the able Senator from Colorado for his forward look, and for what his State has done in this field.

In June 1948, 10 percent of all the aged old age and survivors insurance recipients, were receiving old-age assistance. In Florida almost 18 percent. The highest was in Louisiana, where 35.4 percent were receiving it. The lowest was in Delaware, where only 2 percent were receiving it.

Mr. President, it is very clear that if the benefits were adequate under old age and survivors' insurance, it would not be necessary to resort at all to the supplementary contribution of old-age assistance.

Despite 13 years of experience, the proportion of persons becoming eligible for insurance benefits has not increased. The percentage of insured persons to the 80,700,000 living persons with wage credits has remained approximately static for the past 10 years, at about 55 percent, some 45,000,000.

The total gainfully employed, including the armed services, is approximately 64,000,000. The average number in covered employment in the average week is about 35,000,000. Thus only about 58 percent of the civilian labor force in an average week is covered by the present act. What is even more discouraging is the fact that only a little over one-half of those covered become eligible for benefits. This means that only a little over one-fourth of our civilian labor force will be entitled to some insurance benefits under the present law. It has become apparent, therefore, Mr. President, that obviously a more adequate system will have to be devised if we are to achieve anything like full coverage.

The estimated number added to present coverage by the Senate bill is about 9,900,000 persons.

Certain exemptions are still allowed in the bill. Some 19,000,000 farmers, farm workers, and domestic workers not regularly employed by one employer, Federal, State, and local employees covered by other retirement systems, members of the Armed Forces, railroad employees, and self-employed professional persons, are not covered even by the Senate bill.

Despite the great contribution which the agricultural segment of our population has made and is making to our national wealth and prosperity, they are the ones among those exempted who need coverage under the old insurance provisions the most. In 1945 the census showed that one-third of all the farmers were tenants, who owned no land or buildings. Of the landowner farmers, more than 50 percent had land and buildings valued at $5,000 or less. In 1947 57 percent of all farmers had no savings bonds, and 83 percent had no savings accounts. Thirty-three percent save nothing out of current annual income.

The evidence shows that more of our farm people are seeking old-age assistance, and, as expected, fewer of them get old-age insurance benefits.

Of old-age assistance recipients in June 1946, 52 percent resided in the rural areas. Of old-age and survivors' insurance recipients in the same month, only 24 percent resided in rural areas.

Those figures, Mr. President, sum up pretty well the fact that a great percentage of the farm segment of our citizenship has no property, and no appreciable income, and yet only a negligible part of the farm population is covered by even the amended bill that comes to us from the distinguished Committee on Finance. That goes directly also to a measurement of the adequacy of this measure to meet the needs of the country.

Of 6,600,000 farm operators only 36 percent have contributed to old-age and survivors insurance, and only 10½ percent are insured.

Of 4,600,000 hired farm workers, 45 percent have contributed to old-age and survivors insurance, and only 13.5 percent are insured. Here again is a great discrepancy between even the number in both the farm-operator and the hired farm-labor category that has contributed anything at all at some period of their working lives, and those who are insured so as to be eligible to receive anything.

Mr. President, that is why I am joining with the distinguished senior Senator from Montana in sponsoring two amendments to provide for these farmers and laborers.

Mr. President, there is another problem which the Senate bill has not solved. The bill retains the $3,000 base for taxes and benefits; yet, we know that millions of individuals above that base should fare better than they do. Nineteen percent of those with incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 a year had no liquid assets in 1948. Thirty-five percent had assets under $3,500, and 25 percent had assets between $500 and $2,000. I am talking about savings represented by United States savings bonds, savings accounts, loans, checking accounts, and the like.

A new wage-base limit of $4,200 was recommended by the Advisory Council in its 1948 report to the Senate Finance Committee, although Dr. Slichter of Harvard believes even the $4,200 base to be too low. I am happy to be one of those joining with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], as I believe the distinguished occupant of the Chair, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] is also urging upon the Senate that, if we are to forge ahead with this form of social security, we ought to at least raise the wage base from $3,000 a year, which it is in the Senate bill, to $4,200 a year, or $600 a year more than it is in the House of Representatives' bill. This would favorably affect some 24 percent of those who earned wages in 1948.

Mr. President, I should like to see the tax base raised even higher, for it is obvious that what we do at the present time is to make the persons receiving, through remuneration for employment, $3,000 a year or less, provide much of their own care and sustenance in the period of retirement from gainful employment after they have reached the age of 65 years.

I concede that a part of the cost of this program is borne by the public, because, obviously, a part of the contribution the employer makes is passed on to the public by the employer. But, by and large, Mr. President, the citizen who has an income in excess of $3,000 a year is not, in my opinion, making a just contribution to the care of the great mass of the citizenry of the Nation who have been the fathers and mothers of this generation and have borne the burden of the Nation's salvation and progress. If we limit the tax base to $3,000 a year, and the person making $100,000 a year contributes no more to that program than does the man receiving $3,000 a year, the citizen in the higher income-tax brackets is not making a contribution comparable to the contribution on which the person making $3,000 a year makes to the citizen receiving less than $1,000 a year, for example. So, I see no reason why an arbitrary limit of $3,000 a year has been taken as the maximum of the tax base.

It would seem that, if we are to have anything like adequate social security, we must not only broaden the coverage, but we must also raise the tax base and approach more closely the just principle of taxation, of payment according to ability to pay. If everyone receives in return according to his contribution, then let the $3,000 taxpayer or income recipient pay according to his ability, and the $4,000 a year man get back according to what he has paid in; let the $5,000 a year worker get back, in the long run, according to what he has paid in. But we do not do that. We say we have to provide for those at the bottom of the economic ladder, and if the man who made only $500 a year got back, after he reached the age of 65, on the basis of what he paid in, with $500 a year as his tax base, there would not be enough to give him succor when he reached old age. So we say we have to include the man who makes $500 a year, the one who makes $1,000, the one who makes $2,000, the one who makes $2,500, and the one who makes $3,000 a year, so that the man at the bottom of the ladder will have something more nearly adequate when he reaches the age of 65 years and retires from gainful employment and becomes a beneficiary under the program.

If the man receiving $3,000 a year should help the man receiving less than $3,000, the man receiving $5,000 should do the same thing on the basis of his entire income.

I think the tax base should go still higher. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, approximately 10 percent of all persons having incomes receive in excess $4,200 a year. So I raise the question that if we are going to have anything like adequate coverage, if we are going to meet squarely our public duty, if we are going to observe our obligation toward these unfortunate citizens, we must do whatever is necessary in order to have extended coverage and more adequate benefits. I do not see how we can do that unless we raise the tax base above what it is at the present time.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we may as well frankly face the fact that this is social insurance. It is not private insurance. The people who pay in do not get back in return in direct relationship to what they pay. There is a minimum fixed which does not exist in the field of private insurance. It is fixed because we recognize the necessity of minimum receipts by any citizen in order to approximate a decent level of living. Once we have accepted that principle—and it is a sound principle—why do we stop with a figure that yields, on the average, $26 to the retired single recipient of benefits under the present law, or something more than that under the bill which comes to us from the Senate Finance Committee? Why do we stop, Mr. President, at anything less than what the recipient should have and what the economy is able to support? It would seem to me that those factors should be the criteria.

What are they entitled to have when they become totally and permanently disabled, or when the worker dies and his survivors are left without support, or when the worker himself retires from gainful employment after having reached the age of 65 years? What he should have, Mr. President, is something which can reasonably be ascertained by inquiry. Certainly we can have reasonable agreement upon how much an individual must have in order to maintain even approximately a decent standard of American life. How much should a couple have? Let us see, Mr. President, how much we can afford to pay, how much the economy will stand, and then let us go as far in the direction of meeting the needs as the economy will allow us to go without doing more harm to the public interest than we do good.

Those, Mr. President, seem to me to be sound criteria for legislation of this character. I must say that the steps, while they have been forward steps, have been only what a great American, Mr. Bernard Baruch, at one time called faltering steps forward, when he referred to a certain proposal made by the Government. Let us take a great step forward now and not do, as it was said we did before World War I, "Too little too late." Having had 15 years' experience with this program and having gone no further than we have today, the time is now at hand for us to approach the problem upon those criteria and to do justice by these persons who have a right to claim justice at the hands of the Congress and of the country.

Experts in the field claim that benefits should be tied to employment and wages, because a major purpose of old-age insurance is to try to make up as much as possible for the loss of income upon retirement.

Although the Advisory Council in 1948 recommended unanimously that the monthly benefit equal to 50 percent of the first $75 of the average monthly wage and 15 percent of the next $275, I believe that the provisions in the Senate bill, 50 percent of the first $100 and 15 percent of the next $150 is more desirable because the persons in the low-income group need more at retirement than others.

I am cosponsoring an amendment with Senator MYERS, of Pennsylvania, and others a provision already in the present law and another in the House bill to provide a 1-percent increment in the monthly benefit amount for each year of wage credit prior to 1951 and one-half of 1 percent for each year thereafter. The Senate bill does not contain this, but the House bill provides a one-half of 1 percent increment. The purpose of the increment is to provide a relatively higher benefit for the person with a longer record of steady employment.

Respecting eligibility, the new "start" provision in the Senate bill, which I must say is to be commended, would bring under the benefits of this program about 550,000 more aged persons, and about 150,000 dependents.

Only 39 percent of males 65 and over covered by the act are now eligible under the present law, under the Senate bill only 43 to 50 percent of 5,300,000 males 65 years of age and over, and 7 to 9 percent of the 5,900,000 females 65 and over would be eligible in 1951.

That presents a very challenging problem. We assume that approximately 5,300,000 males 65 years of age or over today live in this country as our citizens. Only from 43 to 50 percent of those 5,300,000 males 65 years of age or over would become eligible for benefits, even in 1951. In other words, less than half who might hope, even under this extended bill, to receive any benefits, would receive any benefits whatever in the next year.

The situation is vastly worse with respect to the female portion of our population, 65 years of age and over, for in that case only from 7 to 9 percent of the 5,900,000 women would be eligible to receive any benefits whatever, under this bill, in 1951.

Even if we wait 50 years, until the year 2000, 81 percent to 90 percent of the males estimated then to be 65 years of age or over would be covered, and only 39 percent to 47 percent of the females estimated to be in our population at that time and then 65 years of age or over would be eligible to receive benefits. In other words, Mr. President, we face the shocking fact that even if we wait half a century, less than 90 percent of the male portion of our population over 65 years of age would be covered, and less than 47 percent of the female portion of our population over 65 years of age would be covered. So not only does the Senate bill fail to give adequate coverage to our senior citizens, those above 65 years of age; but if we go on with this bill for half a century, we shall not even substantially or with anything like complete treatment have adequately met the problem of those of our senior citizens who are over 65 years of age.

Mr. President, I should like to cite two cases in the State of Florida which happened to come to my personal knowledge. I present these to show the inadequacy of the two systems we have at the present time. One of them relates to the old-age and survivors insurance system; the other relates to both the old-age insurance and the old-age assistance systems.

Let me refer first to the case relating solely to old-age assistance. This case came to my attention from a little city called Intercession City, south of Orlando, Fla. A gentleman living in that city wrote me a letter in which he says, in substance, that he is just past 70 years of age and his wife is past 65. He had formerly resided in Indiana, but had moved to Intercession City, Fla., and obtained his own home, out of his savings of the past. His wife was threatened with the loss of her eyesight, and he spent all his savings for an operation in the hope that his wife's eyesight could be saved. However, the operation was not successful, and his wife went blind.

Mr. President, what is the situation then? We then find a husband over 70 years of age, who has exhausted all his savings, but owns his own home, in which he lives with his blind wife, who is over 65 years of age. He applied to the State of Florida for old-age-assistance benefits. The State of Florida has a statute—I am not critical of that enactment, Mr. President—which provides that no one can obtain old-age assistance benefits in the State of Florida unless he has resided in that State 5 years. So the State of Florida turned down his application, and said, in effect, "You will have to apply to Indiana."

He then applied to his former State of Indiana; but Indiana advised him that inasmuch as he had left Indiana, and was no longer a citizen of that State, he would have to apply to the State of Florida. However, Florida had said to him, in effect, "You have not been in this State for 5 years as a citizen; therefore, we cannot give you anything." On the other hand, Indiana said, "You are no longer a citizen of Indiana; therefore, we cannot give you anything."

Of course, the United States says, under its rule, "We pay only a part of what the State pays." Therefore, under the circumstances, he cannot obtain anything from the Federal Government.

Yet, Mr. President, he says, "I have been a taxpayer almost all my adult life. I have been a good citizen. I own my own home. I have no job; I have no savings. I cannot get a job, because I cannot find anyone to stay with my blind wife. That is my predicament."

In his letter he asked me whether there is anything like providing fairly for cases like that of his wife and himself, by the laws of our country.

Mr. President, in good conscience I would have to answer him, "No." He and his wife are not adequately provided for under the law we have at the present time. I mention that case with respect to the matter of eligibility. We know that in some States the amount received by a recipient of old-age assistance is greater than the amount received by such persons in other States. My State has been one of the rather forward-looking States in the South on this subject; and the average is approximately $40 a month for the recipients in Florida. The maximum is $50 a month. However, of course, that means that many persons receive far less than $40 a month.

The question arises, How can any citizen decently live in any part of this country for less than $40 a month, or for $40 a month, or for the maximum of $50 a month? Indeed, how could such persons live decently if the maximum were increased to twice $50 a month, because all those who have made a study of the subject have found that from $120 to $150 a month is required for any family in this country to live with anything like a proper regard for a decent standard of American life.

In addition, Mr. President, the recipient has to go through the humiliation of meeting the means test. That means that he practically must sign a pauper's oath, and must subject himself to the scrutiny of those who come to make inquiry not only of his assets but also of his income, however negligible it may be.

The result has been to discourage people from part-time work, because during the course of their employment they might get cut off from the old-age assistance rolls; and it would take a long time for them to get back on the rolls, and during the interval they probably would have no succor at all, beyond their own effort.

So the old-age assistance program, with the present unfair method of determining eligibility, with the means test to which the recipient must subject himself or herself, and with the grossly inadequate amounts that are available, has been a failure; and therefore it should be reexamined, and we must find some solution which will be more adequate and satisfactory than that.

Mr. President, the other case which came to my attention also comes from Florida, and it is in respect to the inadequacy of the old-age and survivors' insurance benefits and old-age assistance. I received an original memorandum from a couple living in Jacksonville, Fla., showing a budget which had been approved by the welfare authorities of the State for a couple over 65 years of age. Certainly I do not in any sense disparage the social workers. They were only doing their duty. However, Mr. President, certainly I denounce the system under which this result occurred.

The budget was the budget approved in the last year for this aged couple, both of them being over 65 years of age, in a great city like the city of Jacksonville, Fla. The total amount allowed for that couple was $58.80 a month. That was the approved budget for both of them; that amount was approved by the welfare authorities.

Let me state the way that budget was broken down:

For rent, for the two of them, for a month, $19.50.

I do not know what sort of quarters they were expected to live in at that price, what sort of quarters they could get for $19.50. However, I wonder whether anyone would say that people like that have no right to the enjoyment or the protection of rent control. Certainly their position will not be improved any by the removal of rent control.

For food for the two of them, for a month, $22.45. Mr. President, that is $11.22½ a person a month. That, divided in terms of 30 days in the month and three meals a day, allows the recipient, in this great national city, 11 cents a meal, 33 cents a day for food to nourish the body of a citizen above 65 years of age. I wonder, Mr. President, whether that is not shocking to the conscience of the country.

The allowance for lights is 50 cents for the couple for a month; for fuel, 53 cents; and for clothing, $3.62. All this is for the couple for a month. For recreation, the allowance is $1. At least there is insurance against their kicking up their heels too much in pleasure, when there is a limit of $1 for recreation for the couple for 1 month.

The amount for personal incidentals is $2; for routine medicine, 75 cents. Let the amount for medicine be noted by those who say we do not need to progress in the field of providing more and better medical care for more people. I should like to know what the doctors are going to do when that couple calls and says, "There is illness in this family, will you come to us?" I should like to know what the hospital is going to do when they apply to the hospital for admission. What is the druggist going to do when they ask for drugs? What is the nurse going to do when her services are required and are called for? For routine medicine they have an allowance of 75 cents a month for the two; for laundry, $2; for household incidentals, 75 cents; for insurance, $3.72; total allowed budget, $58.80 for the month, for these two people.

Mr. President, that kind of thing is going on all over the country. As a matter of fact, that represents a combination of both old age and survivors insurance and old-age assistance, because the couple received $19.80, I believe it was, under old-age and survivors insurance, and, in order to get the $58.80, the remainder had to be supplied through old-age assistance. One member of this family—I presume the husband—had been a contributor for at least 27 quarters, and what they received was $19.80 as a reward for that contribution to old-age and survivors insurance, for their care and succor under old-age and survivors insurance, and the remainder, $40, was made up by old-age assistance. So, Mr. President, in respect to that couple, that is as far as this great, rich, charitable, and generous America has gone since 1935; and that is a period of 15 years.

I am glad we are going to do somewhat better in this bill, if it becomes law, though it will be somewhat better, we are not going to approximate completeness of coverage or adequacy of amount.

We now face the problem also of those in our population who are totally and permanently disabled. What are we going to do with them? The Advisory Council recommended that these benefits be paid to those between the ages of 55 and 65, with necessary objective tests as to disability.

In the hearings on the bill, H. R. 6000, before the Senate Finance Committee, Dr. Slichter is joined by Dr. Brown, of Princeton, in believing that these benefits are just as necessary as those for the aged. I heartily concur in that view. After all, the purpose of this program is to meet need; and where is the need greater than of the one who is unable to work at all by reason of total and permanent disability? How is his case to be distinguished from the one who is unable to work because of age, who is a recipient under this bill? Dr. Slichter points out that only 1 of every 20 cases of total and permanent disability results from industrial accidents. Sufficient protection can be placed in the bill to enable such cases to receive only old-age benefits or workmen's compensation, but not both.

Under workmen's compensation, the public, as it were, bears the burden of the human wreckage in industry, and I see no reason why, if the public bears the cost through workmen's compensation of human wreckage in industry, the country should not also pay the cost of human wreckage outside industry, or in respect to enterprises and activities not covered by workmen's compensation.

Dr. Slichter also says that in April 1940, 14.3 percent of males 60 to 64 were unable to work. Now, what is going to happen to those people who cannot work? They may have worked in the past and become disabled through no fault of their own. If they are not taken care of by private sources of assistance, then what is their problem, and how is it to be met?

In February 1949, excluding persons in institutions, there were 2,059,000 persons 14 to 64 years of age, with disabilities lasting 6 months or more. I emphasize that statement, Mr. President. With these in institutions included, the total would be almost 3,000,000.

The incidence of total and permanent disability per 1,000 workers, by age groups, was about as follows: In the 20-year-old group, about 2 out of the 1,000 are totally and permanently disabled; in the 30-year-age group, about 2 out of 1,000 are totally and permanently disabled; in the 40-year-age group, about 3 out of 1,000 are totally and permanently disabled; in the 50-year-age group, about 7 out of 1,000 are totally and permanently disabled; and those at 60, about 28. So we see that the number rises as the age increases. But even in the group as low as 20 years of age, 2 out of 1,000 are totally and permanently disabled.

Mr. President, the plight of those people presents an economic, moral, and social problem to the people of the United States. Today the Federal Government is doing very little to meet the problem faced by those people. Surely, whatever religion we may happen to have, there is no religion which could countenance casting aside those people and totally neglecting them. The result is, they simply have to subsist upon the meager private or public care which is provided for them at the present time.

Mr. President, there is also an amendment that ir to be offered to the pending bill, restoring substantially the House provision, which provides benefits for those who are totally and permanently disabled, who are in covered occupations. I heartily support that amendment and very earnestly hope that it will be adopted. Several years ago I offered such an amendment in the Senate, and I have advocated such an amendment to our social-security laws ever since. I am glad that we have at least come to the point where the House of Representatives has adopted the amendment. I certainly hope the Senate will take the same step when we come to the consideration of that part of the program.

In respect to private pension plans, Mr. Folsom, treasurer of the Eastman Kodak Co. and an expert on old-age insurance, to whom I have previously adverted, believes that the bill would help private pension plans. It certainly has been our experience that social security and veterans' insurance, instead of hurting the private insurance industry, has aided it. I believe that is common knowledge.

Dr. Slichter, of Harvard, believes that Congress should not regulate the private plans or try to tie them into the bill. Private plans should adjust themselves to the general plan. The country, according to Dr. Slichter, needs a mobile labor force to assure increases in national production, whereas private plans have a tendency to freeze labor to a single employer.

As of December 31, 1949, 13,000 plans, covering 7,200,000 workers, were in effect. Of these, not more than one-third develop any benefit rights.

As of December 31, 1949, almost 2,000,000 workers were under private plans which deduct in whole or in part old-age and survivors' insurance benefits from the private-plan benefit. All of us have noted with satisfaction the progress which the labor unions have made through collective bargaining in improving the social-security status of their members who are employed in many of the important industries of this country. That effort will certainly go on, and it should go on. I favor public progress and private progress in this field, so that we may approach as rapidly as possible the happy day when every citizen of this country, when he or she is totally and permanently disabled, or when he or she reaches the age of retirement from gainful employment, shall be able to rely upon remuneration which will be adequate for their decent care and sustenance.

Mr. President, I realize the difficulty of solving these problems adequately. I realize the administrative responsibilities involved, and the cost that would be incurred, the shock which the economy would experience if we should meet adequately the needs of these deserving people. I commend the able chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. GEORGE] and the distinguished former chairman of that committee [Mr. MILLIKIN] upon having been the authors of a resolution which contemplates a continuing study of the problem. I have been gratified to hear the utterances upon the floor in the debate in which the chairman of the Finance Commitee, the able Senator from Colorado, and many other Senators have said we must come to the time when there shall be universal coverage.

Mr. President, the old-age and survivors insurance program, if it is enacted in the form it comes to us from the Committee on Finance, will still insure in 1951 less than 9 percent of the women of America. What is to happen to them, Mr. President, when they pass 65 years of age, or become totally and permanently disabled? If the bill is enacted, its provisions will reach in 1951 less than 50 percent of the men 65 years of age and over. Who is to take care of the others, Mr. President? How adequately are they to be taken care of? So I say that we are challenged by the inadequacy of the measure to see if, while we are about it, something better, even in this haste, cannot be devised.

Mr. President, there is a measure which has been before the country for many years. It was initiated and advocated by a great American. I refer to what is called the Townsend plan, advocated by Dr. Francis E. Townsend. I am one of those who on many public occasions have paid their dutiful respects to Dr. Francis E. Townsend as an American citizen. Here is a gentleman who gave up a lucrative medical practice to devote himself to the public interest. For many years no name, other than the name of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in respect to social security has meant more to the senior citizenry of America than the illustrious name of Dr. Francis E. Townsend. He has suffered all manner of ridicule and scorn. However, he has borne it with the dignity and confidence which come from an awareness of the righteousness of the cause which he supports and so nobly advocates. Millions of senior citizens all over this land still honor and follow the name of Dr. Francis E. Townsend toward a better day for those who reach the age of retirement from gainful employment at 65 years of age.

Dr. Townsend recommends, and I agree, that the age of retirement should be 60. I agree that a person should begin to receive the benefits of the program at 60 years of age. Dr. Townsend's plan contemplates that there shall be no means test. It would seem to me that a plan might well be worked out under which recipients could accept some kind of part-time employment. Dr. Townsend's plan contemplates that a recipient shall retire from gainful employment and plow back monthly into the economy what he or she would derive under the plan.

Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], on June 13, 1949, I introduced a revised Townsend bill, which was known as S. 2181. That plan has been revised, since it was first initiated by Dr. Townsend. At that time it was generally regarded as a measure of guaranteed payment out of the public treasury of $200 a month to everyone. There were many persons who were skeptical as to whether our economy could afford the payment of such a sum of money without suffering undue shock. However, the plan has been revised, and I think wisely and soundly so.

The Senate Committee on Finance allowed Dr. Townsend and several Members of the Senate, as well as other advocates of the measure, to come before it. The members of the committee were most courteous and gracious in the consideration they showed to this splendid gentleman, and to those who came with him to advocate consideration of the measure. Many questions were asked by members of the committee during the hearing, which indicated the committee's genuine interest in the proposal. Among those were the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], other Senators who were present, and the chairman of the committee.

What does the so-called Townsend plan purpose? It proposes a 3-percent gross income tax upon those who have a monthly income in excess of $250. It is estimated, Mr. President, that such a tax would yield a return of something like $3,000,000,000 a month, and that it would represent a turn-over of $100,000,000,000 a month in our economy.

Mr. President, there are those who say that would be a shocking amount, and that our economy could not stand the shock. What is overlooked is that from a number of different sources we are already paying for general pension purposes about half that amount. If we add up what is being paid out in one form or another, we see that substantially half of that estimated amount is being paid out at the present time. The economy has been standing the shock. It should be remembered that not all the money which is being paid out is required to be immediately plowed back into the economy itself. In other words, it would not be taking money and sending it off somewhere so that it would not come back into the economy. It does not contemplate burying the money. It contemplates plowing back into the economy every 30 days what the recipient receives. It would be going into the same till and distributed again. It is rather like the seed which is taken from the harvest and planted in the ground, from which comes another bountiful harvest through which we achieve a continuity of production and abundance.

What it would do, as I have said, would be to levy a 3 percent gross income tax on all incomes in excess of $250 a month. Those making less than $250 would pay nothing directly. Obviously, even today the public pays a large part of the 1½ percent which the employer must contribute under the old-age and survivors insurance. Just as those persons who make less than $250 a month constitute the majority of the public, so those who make less than $250 a month would not under this plan escape the duty of making a just contribution. We know that those making less than that a month spend practically all of their income anyway. Every time a person spent money it would become a part of some other person's income, and that income would become taxable if it was in excess of $250 a month. Therefore, it is not very different in principle from old-age and survivors insurance, for it is both a gross income tax and an indirect tax, which is required to be paid by the public to whom a part of the levied tax is passed. In the case of old-age and survivors insurance the employer pays it directly but passes on a very large portion of it to the public.

Someone may say, "I did not realize that under old-age and survivors insurance there is a gross income tax imposed." Anyone who says that certainly overlooks the fact that a worker now pays 1½ percent of his total income if he receives less than $3,000 a year. Most workers have little or no income outside of what they receive from their gainful employment. Therefore, at the present time under old-age and survivors insurance the worker is being subjected to a gross income tax. He has no deduction for the cost of getting to work. He has no deduction for the cost of maintaining his body, which goes to the place of employment. He has no deductible item of any character. He pays 1½ percent of his gross income under old-age and survivors insurance.

All that the Townsend plan proposes to do is to switch the group that pays on gross income. The gross income tax would be paid by those earning above $250 a month in income, instead of being borne by those who make less than $250 a month in income. So that substantially the same principle is employed in both systems, except that in the Townsend plan the amount of the tax is 3 percent, whereas under the old-age and survivors insurance plan it is a gross of 3 percent divided between the employee and employer. But 3 percent of incomes under $3,000 is the base of the tax under old-age and survivors insurance, and 3 percent of gross income in the hands of those making more than $250 a month is the tax base in the Townsend plan.

Mr. President, while there may be details about which there would be differences, and no doubt there are, nevertheless it is no more wrong in principle, I venture to say, than are the provisions of old-age and survivors insurance to which we continue to remain wedded in the bill which is recommended to us by the Committee on Finance.

So much for the method of the tax.

Secondly, the principal objective of the Townsend plan is that it is universal in coverage. Every citizen in the United States, man or woman, who reaches, according to the Townsend plan, 60 years of age and retires from gainful employment, becomes immediately eligible to receive the benefits of the program.

Mr. President, that means that all those persons, under the present law and the committee bill who will not get anything in 1951, would immediately become eligible for their share of the benefits available under the Townsend plan, if that bill were the law of the land. I am going to speak about the size of the benefits in a moment.

Mr. President, that means that the other half of our male population over 65 years of age who received nothing and will receive nothing under the new bill in the next year would immediately become eligible for the benefits under the Townsend plan, if that were the law of the land. In other words, the Townsend plan, which has been before the Congress altogether for 16 years, offers all of the features now freely admitted to be necessary to a successful social-security system.

It is a strictly pay-as-you-go financial program; and I interpolate that I agree with what has been better said upon this floor by other Senators—that any program should be fairly close to a pay-as-you-go program.

We have to revise the program anyway after a few years if we adopt the present system. Experience has shown we have had to do it. I dare say we will have to do it again. It is not possible to anticipate what are to be the conditions in this country in the year 2000—50 years from now. Yet the pending bill is predicated upon the continuation of a policy for 50 years—up to the year 2000.

Mr. President, no one can look half a century ahead and see what conditions will be then. So it is obvious that we are going to have to revise the system every few years, and that the funds we build up as a total reserve will be modified or reduced or will disappear or will be augmented as if probably they did not exist. In other words, we will have to make provision to pay the annuities when they become due in the future, out of revenues that then become available, because, as has been pointed out, the money is not lying in a safety-deposit box. We do not have it in currency. It is simply a credit on the books of the Treasury to this fund. They pay out currently what is due currently, out of what comes in currently, I believe, and it goes into this fund, or is a credit on the books of the Government of the United States. It is immediately availed of by the Government of the United States, and in its place are put obligations of the Government. They are bonds of the United States Government. But they can be paid only out of tax revenue. So the people have to put up the money if anything in excess of current revenues is to be paid to the recipients of the plan. The money is to be put up out of current taxation.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As we widen the coverage, through whatever the system may be, the contributors to the system, such as we have now, and the general taxpayers, who will ultimately be called upon to make good the reserve fund, come together in identity, which is another way of saying they pay twice for the same thing.

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly, and obviously we have to collect from those who have the ability to pay.

So, first, the Townsend plan is a pay-as-you-go plan.

Further, Mr. President, the benefits under the program to the recipients of old-age and survivors' insurance have increased 19 percent since 1939. The cost of living has increased about 70 percent in that time. What does that mean? It means that the real value of the benefits has been diminished; in other words, the recipient will get less in terms of buying power than he would have gotten had he become 65 years of age at an earlier date, after this program went into effect.

So long as we are going to have to levy a definite tax and figure the amount of the benefits the beneficiary is entitled to receive under the present law, we will always have that changing relationship between the amount of dollars a recipient may get under a more or less rigid program, and the cost of living a recipient has to bear. Generally, since the cost of living goes up, the change is to the detriment of the recipient under the program.

Mr. President, if the Townsend bill were the law, that discrepancy would not exist, because the way the Townsend revenues are divided is this: The eligible class are simply the distributees of the amount of money the plan provides, in other words, the amount of money that comes in under the tax levied under the Townsend bill. If a certain amount, let us say $1,000,000,000, comes in every month under the Townsend plan, obviously whether we have the figure at 3 percent or 1½ percent or 1 percent or 2 percent, or whether we vary the form of tax, would be determined as a result of experience; but there is nothing new in that. We are merely suggesting that the tax be a gross income tax, but what we are talking about is a current tax.

Suppose that tax, under the Townsend bill, yields a billion dollars a month. That $1,000,000,000 would be divided up among the distributees who are classified and named and made eligible by act of Congress, and each one would get his or her share; but everyone would get something.

Under that plan, it becomes apparent, if we have inflation, so that the dollar is worth less, more dollars would be taken in under the program and more dollars would be distributed as more money was in circulation. But if more money is in circulation and dollars become less valuable, under the law we now have, the recipients would get a fixed number of dollars. Therefore the amount would not fluctuate. If we have a rising cost of living, they do not get more, or if a falling cost of living, there is not an adjustment.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am happy to express my gratification that the Senator is praising so forcefully, and with his customary eloquence, the consideration of this plan, a subject on which he and I have been in agreement for a long time.

Mr. PEPPER. I am most grateful for the Senator's words. Coming from the source from which they emanate, they are praise indeed.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wonder if the Senator has pointed out, in view of what he has been saying about the wisdom of having a fluctuating scale in order to meet the changing values of the dollar, that the one thing we are certain of is that the value of the dollar will not remain the same, that it will go up and down. But this plan is adjusted to that, and allows to the old people their proportionate share of whatever is the national income and whatever is the national productivity, in terms of food, rather than in terms of dollars, which latter is, as we now find, utterly inadequate.

But, in addition, there is the other consideration, namely, that it eliminates the possibility of political shenanigans, such as are an inevitable part of the administration of the means test. If it were possible to have people without human fallacies it would perhaps be possible for them to do justice to all the gradations of income groups. But since it is administered by very human beings of one or another political persuasion, I presume it is a little more easy perhaps in Florida for a Democrat to receive benefits by way of old-age assistance, and I presume in the State of Maine, it would be more easy for a Republican to receive such benefits. That is the result of the inevitable operations of human nature.

I believe we shall arrive at an equitable solution of the problem and of the fundamental principles involved by the universal application of a pay-as-you-go plan, of a widely distributed tax which will be subject to study, and the elimination of a means test. Those fundamental principles I believe must eventually evolve.

As I said the other day, it is profoundly gratifying to me to note the submission of a resolution, which has very substantial support on both sides of the aisle, and which for the first time will bring about careful study and evaluation of the general principles which are at the very foundation of the Townsend plan, and recognize the great service that has been rendered the country by the development of this idea.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from Maine very much for his contribution.

Mr. President, I conclude with this summation. The system we now have has been in effect since 1935. It still leaves more than half of the male members of our population above 65 years of age not taken care of at all, even in 1951. In 1951 it would provide nothing for more than 90 percent of the female population of our country above 65 years of age.

I have already pointed out that of that group there are about 11,200,000 of our citizens; that three and one-half million of them have no income at all, and the average income of those with any income, including what they are now receiving from old-age and survivors' insurance, and from all sources is only $808 a year.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes I should like to say that the remarks of the Senator from Florida pertaining to the old-age insurance and old-age-pension program are entirely fitting and appropriate as we discuss House bill 6000.

I was very much interested in the comments of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] who associated himself with the Senator from Florida, to see this bipartisan effort of working toward the development of program and the acceptance of fundamental principles that pertain to old-age pensions.

I think all of us recognize a debt of gratitude to the Townsend movement for what it has done in terms of making vivid, clear, and meaningful to the American people the dire need of an adequate old-age pension system. I think without that movement that much of this legislation we are considering today would have died on the vine. The Townsend movement has worked tirelessly in behalf of the senior citizens of the Nation.

I am quite confident that as the years pass and as the committee makes further study, that the principle of a universal pension will be accepted. I believe that principle is practically accepted now on the floor of the United States Senate. I have heard several comments from Senators who have stated their belief in the principle of a universal pension.

Surely, the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Maine are entirely correct when they say that the means test is an unfair and unfortunate test for the application of a deserved pension.

Also I think it is important that we consider the fact that the age of 65 for the receiving of a pension is an age limit that will have to be lowered. We ought to be striving toward that particular goal. We do not need to take precipitous action, but indeed it ought to come down to at least age 62, and eventually down to 60 years of age.

Mr. President, I wish to make one further comment. A pension ought not to be looked upon as a gratuity. It ought not to be looked upon as a gift. Actually it is earned income. It is what we call in private employment severance pay, or it is what is termed in Federal employment annual leave.

The vast majority of the American people, the ordinary wage earners, farmers, tradesmen, small businessmen, teachers, professional people, do not have annual leave such as Federal or State and municipal employees are given. Many of them never know what it means to have a severance pay at the time of their retirement, whether enforced retirement or voluntary retirement. I believe we are coming to the point in American economic and political life when we are going to look upon a pension as earned income, annual leave, accumulated leave, or a severance pay that will be worthy of the people upon whom it is bestowed and the people who have justly earned it.

The program we are working upon now surely needs to be expanded and improved. It is but a beginning. It is quite obvious that much has not been done about it in a period of 15 years. In the meantime, great economic changes have taken place in our country.

So I want to pay my tribute to those who have led the fight. The principles of a universal pension, of a lowering of the age, and the elimination of a means test, and of a tax which will provide the necessary revenues to adjust to the value of the dollar or the cost of living, are worthy and sound principles. Sooner or later, these principles will be accepted in the fundamental law of the land.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for the time he has yielded me, but more than that I thank him for the courageous and forthright statement he has made in behalf of the pension program as not only a reality, but as a long-range objective for social and economic progress.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota, who always illuminates any subject to which he turns his keen mind and social conscience.

I was saying that now 15 years' experience with the program has shown its inadequacy, because in 1951 more than 90 percent of the females of the country above 65 years of age will receive nothing, and more than 50 percent of the males more than 65 years of age will be eligible for nothing.

Then if we project this program 50 years into the future, a half a century, in this miraculous millennium, in the year 2000 there would still be more than 10 percent of our men above 65 years of age, and more than 50 percent of our females above 65 years of age who would not be covered. So not only is it grossly inadequate in 1951. It will still be grievously inadequate 50 years from now if we continue to go ahead.

It would seem, therefore, Mr. President, that at least in that respect it is time for the change to be made by the Congress and the country.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. In discussing the implications of the Townsend plan, the one point about which I have always had the greatest question is the one requiring the recipients to give up all active work. I myself am not, even as yet, persuaded that that is wise. I base my view of that point particularly on the amazing example of Dr. Francis E. Townsend, because if he had ceased his labors 15 or 20 years ago, I shudder to think where this movement might have been. I think he is a most outstanding example of the value of carrying on labor following the so-called age of retirement. I think that in many instances the older people themselves still desire to engage in work. That is why I favor a universal plan which will not forbid them to continue active work if they desire, but will, in the course of time, permit that matter to be adjusted through, let us say, a balance wheel on the economy of the country.

Let me inquire whether the Senator has discussed that phase of the program at all.

Mr. PEPPER. I only adverted to it a moment ago. I rather share the view, as I indicated then, of the Senator from Maine. I think there are a great many details of the plan which experience would show should be altered or changed. I myself, think there are many of our senior citizens who would like to find part-time employment. It seems to me we should let them work as much as they want to and as much as they can. Certainly I would not be shocked at having them do what might be called hard work which they might be able and willing to do. I think many of them would be happier to do that, rather than to sit in complete idleness; and I think they would be glad to make some worthwhile contribution to their country.

Mr. BREWSTER. And should not provision be made that they would not be penalized for doing so?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; that could be arranged.

Mr. President, let me call attention to the inadequacy of the present plan. A certain lady in Biddeford, Maine, was notified on April 4, 1950, that she was entitled to primary benefits, under title II of the Social Security Act, payable monthly, in the amount of $24.33. However, she was advised that since she was still working, no benefits could be paid at this time.

She was also advised as follows:

It has also been determined that you are entitled to widow's insurance benefits of 7 cents a month, beginning January 1950 based on your husband's wage record under account No. ———. However, since you are now working, no benefits can be paid at this time. When you have terminated your employment and are eligible to receive payment, we will combine the benefits you are entitled to receive. This will be done in order to eliminate the necessity of sending you two checks, one of which is in an amount less than $1. A monthly benefit check will be sent to you in the amount of $24.40, representing payment of your combined benefits. If you remarry, you will no longer be entitled to your widow's insurance benefit.

Mr. President, in other words, she is being advised that if she remarries, she will lose the 7 cents a month which she would otherwise be entitled to receive. Therefore, I suppose she is able to appraise the agency's value of her late husband's labors, on the basis of that notification to her.

She was further advised:

Notice of remarriage should be sent to the Social Security Administration immediately. However, you will still be entitled to $24.33 a month, based on your own wage record.

Mr. President, that lady would have been entitled to a good many dollars a month as the beneficiary of a husband who probably had paid into this fund for more than 27 quarters; but due to the rule that if she had any benefits of her own under the system, because she had worked, she could not receive benefits based on what her husband had really earned, for his survivor, his widow, but could only receive the difference between what she had won with her own work and what she was entitled to receive as the widow of her husband, who had made his own payment for a considerable period of time, instead of receiving what she should have been entitled to receive as the widow of a husband who had made his own contribution, she was entitled to receive only the difference, which was 7 cents a month. Mr. President, I say the system is not adequate and the problem is not being adequately solved.

I commend the committee for its resolution to go ahead with its study. I particularly commend to the committee, to the Senate, and to the Congress in the future, a specific study of the principles of the Townsend plan. They are basically sound in at least four respects: They are universal coverage; they provide for a pay-as-you-go system; and they will provide a fund that will fluctuate according to the cost of living and the money in circulation in the economy. Mr. President, the amount contemplated by that plan is a far more adequate amount for the recipients than anything which is even foreseeable under the plan we now have in existence.

Mr. President, it is obvious that we are not providing better than that for this honored segment of our citizenship. The Bible tells us in the fifth commandment, "Honor thy father and mother that thy days be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." We are not honoring the fathers and mothers of the people of this country as we should. Adoption of the Townsend bill by Congress will give them the food, shelter, clothes, and other comforts to which a lifetime of work entitles them. It will give them the dignity and responsibility they deserve. Only then, when they have all these things, shall we truly have honored our mothers and fathers.

Therefore, Mr. President, I propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. It is still permissible to send amendments to the desk; is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, to be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PEPPER. And to come up for consideration when amendments lying on the table are to be considered, I understand.

Therefore, Mr. President, I send to the desk, to be printed, an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending measure. The amendment was previously introduced as Senate bill 2181, but I now offer it as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, immediately following my remarks, a statement prepared by a representative of the Railway Labor Executives, showing the relation of the benefits which the Railroad Retirement Act, to those under the old-age and survivors' insurance program. This statement was given to me by Mr. Lyons, executive secretary of the Railway Labor Executives.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The general old-age and survivors system derives a very substantial financial benefit from the maintenance of the separate railroad retirement system. This gives rise to an obligation which should be recognized and which should be met at such time and in such manner as will be to the best interests of the railroad retirement system.

The reason why the general system derives this financial benefit from the maintenance of the separate railroad retirement system is that the railroad employees are a relatively higher cost group for whom to maintain an old-age retirement and survivors system than the general working population covered by the social-security system. The extent of this financial advantage at the time the two systems began in their original form in 1937 was estimated to aggregate over a billion dollars and perhaps to exceed two billion. As benefits are revised and liberalized the effect is to increase the financial benefit which the general system derives from the separate maintenance of the railroad retirement system. Upon the enactment of the pending legislation this benefit would come to approximately the equivalent of 2 percent of the railroad taxable pay roll. In other words if there were paid from the old-age and survivors trust fund into the railroad retirement account each year an amount equivalent to a 2 percent tax on the railroad pay roll, the general system would be merely paying for the benefit it derives from the separate maintenance of the railroad retirement system.

There are a number of reasons why the railroad employees constitute a higher cost group than the population covered by the general system:

1. The average age of the railroad employees is about 6 or 7 years higher than that of the insured Social Security population which of course results in a much smaller deferral of future costs.

2. The seniority system is much more elaborately and universally applied in the railroad industry than in industry generally, with the result that there is a heavier concentration of earnings in the older age group than in the general population.

3. The railroad industry is a mature industry that cannot be expected to expand in proportion to the expansion of industry in general. Past experience indicates that as productivity increases, the numbers of employees in the industry will decline even though the volume of work done remains constant or even expands somewhat.

4 Because of the savings in wives' and survivors' benefits through women being fully insured, there is a financial advantage in having a relatively higher proportion of women in the covered group. Women constitute only about 5 percent of the railroad-retirement coverage, whereas they constitute about 30 percent of the present social-security coverage, and will probably make up an even larger proportion under the coverage as expanded by the pending legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks a letter signed by Dr. Francis E. Townsend, dated June 16, 1950, addressed "Dear Congressman."

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE TOWNSEND PLAN FOR NATIONAL INSURANCE,
Cleveland, Ohio, June 16, 1950.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Here's the chance of a lifetime for Congressmen and Senators to pick up an easy $5,000.

W. D. Dobbins, of the W. D. Dobbins & Sons Development Co., Birmingham, Ala., is the man who is putting up the money.

All you have to do to win is to prove to Mr. Dobbins that the Townsend Plan in operation would cost the taxpayers of this Nation as much as $1.

The argument behind the Townsend plan is that the new business it would create through the additional purchasing power enjoyed by millions of retired elders would far offset the revenue it would require to pension the aged.

Just prove that this is not true and the money is yours.

Here are excerpts from Dobbins' letter to Townsend National Headquarters:

"I will offer $5,000 in cash to any Senator or Congressman who can prove that the Townsend plan would cost the taxpayers $1. It will not only not cost a dollar, but will give us such a tremendous market * * * that we will be able to balance our Federal Budget.

"If you can use this offer in any way to help promote the Townsend plan, I will back it up with the cash or a security bond.

"Let's hit the nail on the head while this is hot in the Senate."

There you are, Congressmen and Senators. There's $5,000 in good American cash waiting for the fellows who have been saying the Townsend plan won't work. If you think it won't work, tell it to Dobbins. Convince him and the money is yours.

Cordially yours,
Dr. F. E. TOWNSEND,
President.

P. S.—The above quote is from Mr. Dobbins' letter dated June 14, 1950, which is on file at Townsend National Headquarters.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CONVENTION WITH REPUBLIC OF PANAMA RELATING TO COLÓN AND CERTAIN OTHER CORRIDORS THROUGH CANAL ZONE—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The VICE PRESIDENT. As in executive session, the Chair lays before the Senate Executive Q, Eighty-first Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama regarding the Colón Corridor and certain other corridors through the Canal Zone, signed at Panama on May 24, 1950. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the convention and the convention, together with the President's message will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the President's message will be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama regarding the Colón Corridor and certain other corridors through the Canal Zone, signed at Panama on May 24, 1950.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report by the Secretary of State with respect to the convention.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 19, 1950.

(Enclosures: (1) Report of the Secretary of State; (2) convention with Panama regarding the Colón Corridor and certain other corridors through the Canal Zone, signed May 24, 1950.)

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, in the unanimous-consent agreement reached on June 14 to vote on the pending bill, H. R. 6000, it was provided that there should be included a vote on a resolution sanctioned by the Senate Finance Committee and to be offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], authorizing and directing that said Finance Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, should continue the study and investigation of social-security problems in the United States.

My position on H. R. 6000 has been that the time is long since past due for a thorough investigation and over-hauling of our present social-security system.

I have urged, as earnestly as I could, that the investigation be conducted in such a way as to give the public complete confidence that the inquiry was completely independent and free from any possible suggestion of influence by the Social Security Administration. It is a matter of great gratification to me that the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Colorado have brought in this resolution providing for further study.

The resolution—Senate Resolution 300 provides that the Finance Committee or authorized subcommittee is authorized to "employ such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable and to designate and appoint advisers."

The Senator from Washington is advised that if, in the process of this study, the Senate Finance Committee should deem it advisable to employ actuaries, experts from the insurance departments of our universities or other highly qualified assistance, they might possibly find themselves in a position of violating sections 281, 282, or 284 of title 18 of the United States Code, or perhaps, some other Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding or matter involving the United States.

The Senator from Washington is wholeheartedly in favor of what the Senate Finance Committee proposes to do, and since it would be unfortunate, disastrous even, if at this late date the committee might inadvertently find itself in a position where it was debarred by law from giving full-time employment to experts badly needed, I offer at this time a resolution providing for the suspension of the laws mentioned with respect to persons employed by the Senate Committee on Finance in connection with the social-security investigation ordered by Senate Resolution 300, of the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. President, if the parliamentary situation tomorrow permits, the Senator from Washington would like at that time to be in position to call up and ask unanimous consent to have the joint resolution which he now sends to the desk acted upon.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should merely like to say that those same provisions of the law came to the attention of the junior Senator from Colorado before the resolution was drawn. The legislative counsel adviced that the committee would have more leeway without including the clauses to which the distinguished Senator from Washington referred, than if they were included. But I am very glad that he has introduced the joint resolution, because I shall ask the legislative counsel to take another look at it during the night.

Mr. CAIN. May the junior Senator from Washington then say to his friend from Colorado that he recognizes the serious determination of the Senator from Colorado and his colleagues to conduct a very thorough-going investigation. The Senator from Washington has only tried to be helpful. Should it continue to be the opinion of the Senator from Colorado that his resolution is a better instrument without having included within it the terms of the joint resolution I have just sent to the desk, I should most happily yield to his views.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further statement?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I put the phraseology the Senator suggests in one of the early drafts of Senate Resolution 300, and it was then deleted on the suggestion of the legislative counsel that we would have more elbow room if it were out. But, as I say, I shall ask for further advice on it.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit one further question, would the Senator from Colorado be disposed, now that the Senator from Washington has introduced this joint resolution, to call it to the attention of the legislative counsel between now and tomorrow, at which time the whole problem will be before us, in the hope that we may dispose of it in a very positive and clear-cut way?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I did so, 30 seconds ago.

Mr. CAIN. I appreciate the Senator's willingness to cooperate.

There being no objection the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) to suspend the application of certain Federal laws with respect to persons employed by the Senate Committee on Finance in connection with the investigation ordered by Senate Resolution 300, Eighty-first Congress, introduced by Mr. CAIN, was received, read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senate of the United States now has the bill to amend the Social Security Act on the floor. It will vote Tuesday, June 20, on this bill. We can be certain that the bill as it passes the Senate will be a decided improvement over the present social-security law.

It will add a minimum of 9,000,000 people to social-security coverage. For the first time self-employed people will be included under the old-age provisions of the social-security program.

I wish to discuss briefly some of the amendments which I plan to submit, of which I have the privilege of being cosponsor, and which I shall support, which would further liberalize the social-security bill.

One of the most important of those amendments, of which I am a cosponsor, would increase the amount of annual wages which may be credited toward final old-age and survivors' insurance benefits. The present law provides a maximum wage base of $3,000. This version was kept in the bill as it is now on the Senate floor in spite of the fact that the House recommended an increase to $3,600, which would permit maximum benefits of $80 per month.

An attempt will be made to raise that maximum benefit even beyond $3,600 to $4,200, which will permit benefits of $87.50, and also to $4,800, which will permit maximum benefits of $95. I am supporting these liberalized efforts. I feel certain that we can pass the $3,600 wage-base amendment in the Senate and I hope we can go further. These amendments are significant because a Senate advisory council some months ago, after a thorough study of the whole program, recommended a base of $4,200.

The next amendment of which I am a cosponsor will provide insurance benefits to individuals who are permanently unable to engage in any gainful activity by reason of any medically proven physical or mental illness. This is called a disability-insurance amendment. It was included in the House bill. It was recommended by the Senate advisory council. I believe it to be regrettable that the Senate Finance Committee decided not to include this provision in the bill as reported to the Senate.

By the way, Mr. President, I want to commend the junior Senator from Louisiana for his very comprehensive and able address this afternoon in reference to disability assistance. I understand the Senator from Louisiana will submit an amendment on disability assistance, and it is my intention to support him, because his case is convincing and is grounded upon sound fact.

The third crucial amendment which we will face on the floor of the Senate and which I will support, is designed to provide some kind of an incentive in the old-age and survivors insurance program. It will do so by increasing basic benefits for each year of contribution. The bill as it is reported by the Senate Finance Committee would give an equal benefit payment to a worker who has contributed to the program for 2 years or for 20 years. Our amendment will add a percentage increment to the benefits received for each year in which a contribution to the social-security fund is made.

It is also my plan to support amendments which would consider salesmen and agent drivers, distributing beverages, fuel, ice, ice cream, and fruit produce, as well as meat and bakery produce, laundry or dry cleaning services, as employees to be covered by the social-security law. This would add about 300,000 persons to the coverage of the Social Security Act.

I also plan to support an amendment which would give protection to about 40,000 home workers and certain domestic servants.

It is my intention to support another amendment which would include tips as wages in computing social-security benefits.

An amendment will also be introduced, which I shall support, extending social-security benefits to about 775,000 additional farm workers.

I now want to bring to the attention of the Senate an amendment which the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] and I have submitted, designed to increase the old-age pension provisions of the social-security law. I recently commented briefly upon this amendment, at the time of its submission. This amendment is for those older folks who are not under the insurance program. This amendment would raise the maximum pension from $50 to $65 per month, which means that the Federal Government would make a contribution to any pension up to $65 by paying one-third of any amount over $50. The present law provides a maximum of $50, and that maximum is maintained by both the Senate and the House versions. The House version does differ, however, from the Senate bill in that it gives more assistance to those States which are of the lower economic income.

My amendment, and the amendment cosponsored by the Senator from New York, will also increase benefits to the blind and to dependent children.

One of the most pressing problems which many local governments face with the public-assistance program is the fact that under the present law it is difficult to provide for medical care for the aged. I am joining with other colleagues in an amendment which will provide Federal grants for medical care to the needy aged, the needy blind, and to dependent children.

RECESS

Mr. KERR. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 20, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 19 (legislative day of June 7), 1950:

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Sumner T. Pike, of Maine, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for a term of 4 years expiring June 30, 1954. (Reappointment.)

Gordon Dean, of California, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for a term of 3 years expiring June 30, 1953. (Reappointment.)

Thomas E. Murray, of New York, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for a term of 2 years expiring June 30, 1952. (Reappointment.)

Henry DeWolf Smyth, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission for a term of 1 year expiring June 30, 1951. (Reappointment.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Creator and companion of our souls, we are coming unto Thee in the fellowship of prayer in order that by the touch of Thy spirit we may be renewed in faith, purified in heart, and strengthened for the tasks which await us.

We know that our plans and purposes, our efforts and endeavors for the building of a nobler civilization are futile and fruitless unless Thou dost gird us with divine wisdom and power.

Show us how we may live and labor in confidence and in courage. May we conquer every temptation and be masters over all the fears and anxieties which assail us.

Grant that dishonest and selfish thoughts and deeds may be hateful to us. May Thy law of truth and righteousness be our delight. May the grace and memory of this moment of sacred communion follow all the hours of this day.

Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 15, 1950, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3498. An act for the relief of the Gluckin Corp.;

H. R. 4100. An act for the relief of Calvin E. Cranford;

H. R. 4163. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Walker;

H. R. 4960. An act for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth H. Whitney;

H. R. 5979. An act for the relief of John Tweit;

H. R. 6652. An act for the relief of Mrs. Fujiko Chichie Imbert, wife, and Robert Imbert, Jr., son of an American soldier;

H. R. 7050. An act for the relief of Louie Gam Yean;

H. R. 7065. An act for the relief of Kazuko Miyama Akana and Chang King Akana;

H. R. 7066. An act for the relief of Setsuko Amano;

H. R. 7073. An act for the relief of Koto Kogami Kitsu and Jeannette Akemi Kitsu;

H. R. 7199. An act for the relief of Nobuko Maeda;

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Mrs. Bernard Smith;

H. R. 7362. An act for the relief of Mrs. Willard Thulin (formerly Jutta Kono);

H. R. 7416. An act for the relief of Suzuko Takanashi;

H. R. 7656. An act for the relief of David George Callaway;

H. R. 7658. An act for the relief of Mitsuko Ito;

H. R. 7682. An act for the relief of Mrs. Akiko Osada Gustafson; and

H. R. 8270. An act relating to the renewal of contracts for the carrying of mail on star routes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1606. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Auf der Heide-Aragona, Inc., and certain of its subcontractors against the United States;

H. R. 3506. An act for the relief of Louis P. Murphy, United States immigrant inspector, El Paso, Tex.;

H. R. 4895. An act to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the Superior National Forest, Minn., and for other purposes;

H. R. 6691. An act for the relief of Paul D. Banning, Chief Disbursing Officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7579. An act to extend the Rubber Act of 1948 (Public Law 469, 80th Cong.), and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 192. An act to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties;

S. 382. An act for the relief of Wong Suey Wing;

S. 841. An act for the relief of Michele Bartolomeo Marchisio;

S. 960. An act to provide for the acquisition, construction, expansion, rehabilitation, conversion, and joint utilization of facilities necessary for the administration and training of units of the Reserve components of the armed forces of the United States for fiscal years 1951, 1952, and 1953, and for other purposes;

S. 1208. An act for the relief of Pasch Bros.;

S. 1304. An act for the relief of Nicolae G. Caranfil and his family;

S. 1320. An act for the relief of Mrs. Barbarita Romero;

S. 1779. An act for the relief of Phil Meyers, also known as Gil Meyers;

S. 1884. An act for the relief of Rev. Lambros Economakos;

S. 2016. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Proctor;

S. 2077. An act for the relief of Francisco Gonzalez Perez;

S. 2095. An act for the relief of Frederick L. Goggans;

S. 2264. An act for the relief of Juliana Sosa de Solis;

S. 2346. An act for the relief of Kuo Chin Lu;

S. 2403. An act for the relief of Curt Edward Friese;

S. 2608. An act for the relief of Dr. Kun Ken Hu;

S. 2658. An act to establish rearing ponds and a fish hatchery in the State of Kentucky;

S. 2991. An act for the relief of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co.;

S. 3520. An act to strengthen the common defense by providing for continuation and expansion of Western Hemisphere production of abacá by the United States;

S. 3571. An act to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes;

S. 3771. An act to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation; and

S. Con. Res. 95. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7477) entitled "An act providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Mass., of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. BENTON, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 238) entitled "Joint resolution to provide the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the United States to all immigrants having a legal right to permanent residence," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. EASTLAND, and Mr. JENNER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POWERS OF APPOINTMENT

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 480, which was unanimously reported to the House on June 15, 1950, by the Committee on Ways and Means.

This is a joint resolution extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers of appointment in connection with property which is subject to a power of appointment created by a person other than the holder of the power.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That sections 403 (d) (3) and 452 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1942 (relating to release of certain powers of appointment in the case of the estate and gift taxes) are hereby amended by striking out "1950" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1951."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is of the utmost importance that House Joint Resolution 480 pass the Congress and be enacted into law with all possible dispatch.

This resolution extends to July 1, 1951, the period for tax-free release of powers of appointment created on or before October 21, 1942, the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1942. Similar extensions of time to permit holders of previously created powers to adjust their affairs as the result of the complicated and highly technical provisions of the Revenue Act of 1942 have been made without interruption by the Congress.

If this extension is not granted for another year, severe hardship will be imposed on many persons who, because of the complexity of the 1942 act and through no fault of their own, have been unable to take the necessary remedial steps.

A power of appointment is the legal expression for a power given to a person by someone else to dispose of property either by will or by an inter vivos transfer. For example, a husband may leave his property to his wife in trust for her life and give his wife a power to designate to whom the property shall go upon her death. In this case the wife is said to have "a power of appointment," because she can appoint or designate persons to whom the property shall go on her death.

The general problem to which this legislation is directed stems from the fact that up until the Revenue Act of 1942 in order for the power of appointment to be included in the wife's estate, the power had to be general, the wife had to exercise it, and the property had to pass as the result of the exercise of the power. If the power of appointment given by the husband to the wife was a special power, that is a power in the wife to appoint the property only among a particular class of persons, then the property subject to this power of appointment was not included in the wife's estate.

The 1942 act changed, however, the entire concept of taxing property subject to powers of appointment. Under this act, the Federal estate tax was made to apply to a power of appointment whether it was exercised or not, whether it was general or special, and without regard to any technical questions of whether the property passed as the result of the exercise of the power. The 1942 act provided that if a decedent "has at the time of his death a power of appointment," the property is taxable in his estate and the term "power of appointment" includes all powers except two: First, power to appoint among a class of persons which includes no one but the decedent's spouse, the spouse of the creator of the power, descendants of the decedent or his spouse, descendants of the creator of the power or his spouse, spouses of such descendants and charities; and second, powers to appoint among a restricted class by a person who has no other interest in the property.

The first exception permits powers of appointment within the family to be excluded from the estate tax, and the second of the exceptions applies to what is commonly known as fiduciary powers. If the power of appointment is within these two classes, it is taxable.

The prior law taxing only the exercise of a general power had been in effect for approximately 25 years, and by 1942 there were in existence a great many powers which had been created in reliance on the law as it then existed. The provisions of the 1942 act not only constituted a radical change but, as a result of subsequent Treasury regulations, many ordinary powers of trustees were construed to be powers of appointment contrary to the general understanding by the legal profession. In addition to the difficulty, if not impossibility, of ascertaining whether existing wills and trust agreements contained powers which might be taxable under the new law, persons in many States are still unable today to avail themselves of the tax-free release privilege because of uncertainties of local law or the nonexistence of applicable State law.

For the past few years the American Bar Association and other interested groups have been endeavoring to reach an agreement with the Treasury Department as to the desirable changes which should be made in order to correct the inequitable results of the 1942 amendments and the Treasury regulations which applied to pre-1942 powers as well as to powers created in the future. Although the area of disagreement has been narrowed, no entirely satisfactory agreement has yet been reached, although both the Treasury Department and interested groups are in accord that remedial legislation is necessary. Moreover, widespread reliance by the entire legal profession has been placed on the fact that remedial legislation would be enacted by the Congress, and it would, therefore, be grossly unfair not to grant a further extension of time pending a final solution to this problem.

RENT-CONTROL ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House may have until 12 o'clock tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill S. 3181, the rent-control bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

THE RUBBER ACT OF 1948

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7579) to extend the Rubber Act of 1948 (Public Law 469, 80th Cong.), and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 6, strike out "1952" and insert "1951."
Line 7, strike out "1953" and insert "1952."
Line 10, strike out "1953" and insert "1952."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain these amendments?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this is to extend the Rubber Act 2 years instead of 3 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is agreeable to the Republican members of the committee?

Mr. VINSON. This is entirely agreeable to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And to the Members on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. VINSON. To the Members on both sides of the aisle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MISS OKLAHOMA

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the Oklahoma delegation is exceedingly proud to advise the House that the daughter of one of the distinguished staff members of our delegation has been selected as Miss Oklahoma to represent our State in the national beauty contest in Atlantic City for the title of Miss America. Miss Louise O'Brien, 22-year-old daughter of Mr. Ed P. O'Brien, administrative assistant in the office of our beloved and able colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GILMER], has just won this distinction.

We are quite sure that her native beauty and Irish luck, both of which she possesses in abundance, will bring to our State the honor of winning the national contest. The title of Miss America has previously been earned by an Oklahoma girl, and we are counting on Miss O'Brien bringing it back to our State, where it belongs.

To her and to her family we extend our heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

MILK FOR WASHINGTON

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this time is taken in order to congratulate the gentleman from Nebraska, Dr. MILLER, for having brought into the District, the city of Washington, to the babies and to the invalids a bountiful supply of milk which is coming in today. Had it not been for his resolution the strike would undoubtedly still be on, but this threat to let milk from 46 other States come in brought these people who had the milk supply of the city of Washington to a certain degree of common sense and fair action.

The doctor is to be congratulated.

PURCHASE AND STORAGE OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a tabulation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, a further study of the Commodity Credit Corporation's latest report as of April 30, 1950, reveals significant information as to the current purchase and storage program.

On June 30, 1949, the Federal Government had no cheese in storage. But on April 30, 1950, it had in storage 21,352,133 pounds and had paid $311,654.44 to keep them in storage.

The net result is that the Federal Government had run up its storage of butter, dried milk, dried eggs and cheese from 152,980,047 to 524,405,722 pounds and had paid out $6,670,383.72 to keep this more than half a billion pounds of food in storage.

The general story as to surplus potatoes is widely know. But the Corporation's latest report as to details is shocking.

It had no potatoes in storage on June 30, 1949. By April 30, 1950, it had purchased 2,755,668,200 pounds at a cost of $49,709,982.02. During the same period $3,358,228.19 was spent to keep them in storage. Two billion six hundred and sixty-eight million two hundred and thirty-two thousand pounds were sold and it is now quite apparent that at least 100,000,000 pounds were sold to some New York exporters at 1 cent a pound for resale to eastern Germany in the Russian zone at a profit. Fifty-eight million one hundred and seventy-two thousand nine hundred pounds were donated somewhere and 28,699,800 pounds were still on hand.

The net loss during this period was stated to be $44,356,471.77. Although I have requested it, I have not been able to secure a statement of how much of this loss is due to spoilage, nor do I know how much of it is attributable to dumping or other means of destruction. I do know that in Massachusetts, at least, and I think it is true undoubtedly elsewhere, all of the surplus of last year's crop has been received and because of its age, these potatoes are sprouting very rapidly and considerable shrinkage has taken place. Unfortunately it seems more than probable that a good portion of these nearly 29,000,000 pounds of potatoes will wind up on dumps.

The stubborn refusal to consider any suggestions which would have prevented this tragic situation as to potatoes makes it unlikely that anything will be done to prevent substantial waste of that commodity. But it is not too late to prevent the same results in the case of the 5,273,265,310 pounds of other wholesome food commodites reported still in storage on April 30, 1950.

A comparison of the amount of 11 food commodities in storage on April 30, 1949, and on April 30, 1950, is startling. It shows an 1806.37 percent increase. This makes it all the more imperative that some direct and constructive action should be taken to insure that these articles of food are not wasted through spoilage or by destruction. The comparative figures, in pounds, are, as follows:

	In storage
	Apr. 30, 1949	Apr. 30, 1950
Rice	None	69,600
Dried peas	None	199,400
Soybeans	None	2,225,100
Turkeys	None	5,662,358
Cheese	None	21,352,133
Dried milk	None	315,913,638
Dried beans	None	472,627,700
Butter	702,381	98,695,046
Raisins	2,236,110	5,996,910
Prunes	7,902,750	15,273,870
Dried eggs	45,983,259	88,444,915
Total	56,824,500	1,026,460,670

I also include for the RECORD a copy of a letter I sent to the President on June 17:

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: For over 3 months I called your attention repeatedly to the tragic, inexcusable waste of the taxpayers' money through paying carrying charges on 16 surplus food commodities. I urged that these funds could be spent much more wisely for transporting these foods to people who could and would eat them but could not afford to buy them. I stated that this waste was continuing at an estimated rate of at least $60,000 daily.

The report of the Commodity Credit Corporation of April 30 shows that this estimate of daily waste was too low. Actually, the total amount spent for this purpose for the first 10 months of the current fiscal year was $24,760,056.10. This was at the rate of $81,447.55 a day. There is no possible reason for continued failure to take immediate, constructive action to remedy this condition. Will you please order such action at once.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN W. HESELTON.

MILK FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], I fear I had nothing to do with settling the milk strike. The strike was settled through arbitration and democratic processes. I would call attention of my colleagues, however, to the necessity of revising the Milk Code for the District of Columbia. That code is 25 years old. When adopted, it probably met the needs, but now we have pasteurization and chemical sterilization of milk. It does seem that the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association is using the health law as sort of an economic peg to hang their hats on and to have a tight monopoly of the milkshed of the District of Columbia. A new bill will propose that milk be permitted to come into the District of Columbia from any one of the 48 States when it is grade A milk and conforms to the regulations of the United States Public Health Service. That has been accepted by 32 States of the Union. It gets away from the economic bludgeon which permits milk to come in only when it is pasteurized within the District. There are a number of things that need to be straightened out in order to give the people of the District of Columbia a sufficient supply of good milk. There is no valid reason why a tight monopoly on milk should continue in this milkshed. The law governing milk for the District is a quarter of a century old. It needs to be modernized to meet changing conditions of sanitation.

A FABLE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, once upon a time there was a mule trader.

Being a mule trader is a very respectable job. What the respectable mule trader tries to do is to trade his mule—the one who has a bad temper, the spavins, and the heaves—for a mule whose temper is not quite so bad and who may have a lighter case of spavins and maybe no heaves at all. If a mule trader can make such trades, he is a good mule trader. If he cannot, he is a bad mule trader.

This man was a bad mule trader because he always wanted to get all the best of all mule trades. When he had a mule with a bad temper he would not trade it except for a mule with the best temper. When he had a mule with the spavins he would not trade it except for a mule who had never come near having the spavins. He was such a bad mule trader that the home folks would not trade mules with him. He could not make his living at home. So he came to Washington. Back in the thirties.

Folks in Washington did not trade mules. They swapped ideas. So this man gave up trading mules and set himself up in business trading ideas. He did not have any ideas of his own, but he got around that with no trouble. He just borrowed or swiped ideas which had belonged to other folks. He was not particular about these ideas. These ideas had bad tempers and most of them had the spavins and the heaves like the mules he used to try to trade. The ideas he got in this country he had to borrow or swipe. The ideas he got from outside this country he did not have to swipe or borrow. The folks who had them gave them to this man. He got them for nothing. These ideas were worse off than the ones he had swiped or borrowed.

Finally, he got all of his ideas together in one idea pen. He was ready to trade. He was not a mule trader any longer. He was an idea trader.

This man wanted to trade tumbledown shacks to war veterans for their independence, their loyalty, and their votes. He did not mind if the war veterans paid twice for these tumbledown shacks—in monthly payments and in taxes.

He wanted to trade the whole American people for special classes.

This man wanted to trade payments not to produce to farmers for their independence, their loyalty, and their votes.

He wanted to trade solvency for bankruptcy.

This man wanted to trade the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness of American labor for slavery to little Hitlers.

He wanted to trade a national fact for an international pipe dream.

This man wanted to trade bibles in the schools for a dole to the schools.

He wanted to trade liberty for liberalism.

This man wanted to trade race friendship for race hatred.

He wanted to trade study for snooping.

This man wanted to trade American cod for red herring.

He wanted to trade a republic for rot.

This man was a bad idea trader because he always wanted to get all the best of all idea trades. When he had an idea with a bad temper he would not trade it except for an idea with a good temper. When he had an idea with the spavins he would not trade it except for an idea who had never come near having the spavins. When this man was such a bad mule trader, folks would not do business with him. That is why he came to Washington. That is why he left home. Now, he is a bad idea trader. It is about time this man left Washington.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I want to use this minute to commend our great and courageous President for his recent veto of S. 1008. This demonstrates again that he is still on the firing line and that his courage is not impaired. As long as he leads us the people of the United States may have no fear of anything or anybody. I am very proud to represent the district in Missouri that has the distinction of being the birthplace of our great President who is also a courageous defender of the rights of the common man.

PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader about the conference report that is coming up tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. A conference report has been filed on the bill H. R. 6567, relating to the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation. That will be on the program to come up tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand, if there is a roll-call vote on it, that will go over until the next day?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my desire, and I know my friend from Massachusetts agrees with that.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6560) to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, to authorize provisions in national service life-insurance policies for increased monthly disability benefits.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

USE OF DIVIDENDS FOR PREMIUMS ON SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8236) to provide that on and after January 1, 1951, dividends on national service life insurance shall be applied in payment of premiums unless the insured has requested payment of dividends in cash.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8235) to amend further the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MILITARY STATUS TO RUSSIAN RAILWAY SERVICE CORPS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6277) to give military status and discharges to members of the Russian Railway Service Corps organized by the War Department under authority of the President of the United States for service during the war with Germany.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment, I wish to advise the House I have applied for a rule on the bill H. R. 6277, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice at this time.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the survivors of the Russian Railway Service Corps.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, my reason for objecting to this resolution is the fact that the Russians took these men over to run their railroads and they were paid by the Russians. There is no reason why we should put them in the Army now and give them the same rights as the people who went into the service of our country and fought for the liberty of our country. These men went over to Russia and were paid by the Russians to do their work. That is the reason I object to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. May I say to the gentleman he is not properly advised. These men were paid by the United States Army. They were advised that they were members of the United States Army. I think they are entitled to the perquisites and benefits attaching to membership in the United States Army.

Mr. RICH. I have been advised that that is not the case and that is the reason I am objecting.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I say to the gentleman, on my responsibility as a Member, that he is ill-informed.

Mr. RICH. Then if, as the gentleman says, a rule is to be granted on this, when we get this on the floor of the House, we can straighten the matter out.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am familiar with this bill and the men who come under the provisions of it. The men from the western railroad were recruited by the Government when the Russians abandoned the trenches and we had to send supplies to Siberia. We sent a large force of experienced railroad men over to Russia to run the Russian-Siberian Transcontinental Railroad. These men, at a great sacrifice to themselves, left their positions and went over to Russia. They were there a long time and this is nothing more nor less than just recognition of their services. They should be given status in the Army. I am personally acquainted with a great many of the men because I was in the service of the railroads at and before that time. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. ANDERSON of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a letter from the survivors of the Russian Railway Service Corps.)

THE ASSOCIATED VETERANS OF THE RUSSIAN RAILWAY SERVICE CORPS,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1950.

Hon. JACK Z. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ANDERSON: I have read, with much concern, the letter dated May 11, 1950, written by Miles D. Kennedy, director of legislation for the American Legion, addressed to the Honorable JOHN RANKIN, and which was introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Representative RANKIN.

Let me state first, please, that I have in years past and still have a very high regard for Congressman RANKIN and his sincerity is respected by me, but in this particular case I believe that the statements by Mr. Kennedy have been misleading and do not reflect the views of the American Legion as a whole.

Mr. Kennedy states in his letter, "The American Legion has repeatedly at its national conventions adopted resolutions opposing this legislation" (and goes on to say "and similar bills to give various groups of a somewhat similar character an honorable discharge for service during World War I").

I challenge that statement as not being correct.

In 1934 the national committee of the American Legion at Indianapolis appointed a subcommittee to investigate the claims of the Veterans of the Russian Railway Service Corps. This is the only investigation the American Legion ever made of our case and this subcommittee reported very strongly recommending that the Legion assist us in securing the justice we are entitled to. A copy of this report is attached hereto.

No further action by the Legion full committee was taken in 1934 but in 1937 there were 17 department resolutions submitted to the national convention in New York City, by the following States: Washington, Illinois, South Dakota, Louisiana, Oregon, Iowa, Minnesota, Texas, California, Michigan, Colorado, Hawaii, Nevada, North Dakota, Missouri, Florida, and Wyoming.

The result of these State resolutions was a resolution by the national convention reading:

"Resolved, That Congress be requested to continue their investigation of the status of the Russian Railway Service Corps and take such action as is warranted by such investigation."

The above resolution has never been rescinded and still stands.

It would seem to me that Mr. Kennedy having made the statement that the American Legion has repeatedly at its national conventions adopted resolutions opposing this legislation should now be called upon to quote such resolutions, and dates enacted, opposing legislation by the Russian Railway Service Corps.

It would further seem that the opposition comes from Mr. Kennedy personally and not from the American Legion as a whole. Resolution 302 which Mr. Kennedy quotes names the various groups it covers and does not include our group.

Mr. Kennedy's letter further states that there are bills before the Congress to give military status to various groups who served during World War II and that if our particular bill, H. R. 6277, is enacted into law it will give aid and encouragement to such groups and that 30 years is more than sufficient time for Congress to give consideration to our small group.

To that statement I have this to say, and I believe you will agree with me that each case should be decided upon its own merits in the traditional way of American justice. I do not believe any group seeking such recognition has any such valid claim as the Russian Railway Service Corps has, and we believe Mr. Kennedy is unfair when he seeks to tie us up with various other groups and does not talk about us as a separate unit. The records before Congress show that the three initial steps leading to our induction in service were convincing that we were a part, and intended to be a part of the United States Army. (1) When called upon to volunteer we were told we would be commissioned in the United States Army. (2) We signed the regular form of application for a commission in the United States Army. (3) We received an appointment upon War Department form showing appointment to various ranks, under authority of the President of the United States, and signed by the Adjutant General of the Army. It denoted actual rank and not an assimilated rank such as the Red Cross, etc.

As to 30 years being sufficient time to consider our case, there is ample precedent for this length of time in considering such matters by the Congress. Our bill has passed in the Senate six times. It has been reported out of House committee three times, but in each case too late to get it on the floor for vote after failure on Consent Calendar.

As to resolution 302, quoted by Mr. Kennedy's letter, passed by the 1949 National Convention of the American Legion, and which I quote below:

"Whereas it has been the traditional policy of the United States to limit veterans' benefits to full-time active duty members of the armed forces of the United States; and

"Whereas only those on active duty in the armed forces of the United States during wartime were subject to the complete dislocation and uncertainties for the future so characteristic of wartime service in the military and naval forces; and

"Whereas the members of the nonmilitary and quasi-military groups were not forced involuntarily into combat conditions and were not subject to the exigencies of the military process; and

"Whereas members of the merchant marine received additional bonuses for service in war zones and bonuses on top of these for being exposed to enemy fire and were not required to remain with their ship on return to port: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the American Legion in national convention assembled in Philadelphia, Pa., August 29–September 1, 1949, That we are opposed to any legislation granting to former members of the merchant marine any veterans' benefits or any benefits akin to those normally granted veterans for their rehabilitation; and be it further

"Resolved, That the American Legion similarly opposes granting of such benefits to former members of the American Field Service, Coast Guard Temporary Reservists (except those on full-time active duty), Civilian Air Patrol, American Red Cross Office of Strategic Services (civilians), and other nonmilitary or quasi-military groups."

Let me say here, please, Mr. Anderson, that the foregoing resolution is not applicable to the Russian Railway Service Corps. The resolution specifically names those organizations it is intended to cover and we are not included. The resolution adopted at the 1937 national convention of the American Legion with respect to the Russian Railway Service Corps has not been rescinded and is still in effect.

We cannot be classed as nonmilitary or quasi-military nor part-time service group for the following reasons:

We wore the identical uniform of the United States Army officer with proper insignia denoting rank and the "castle" denoting the Engineers Corps.

We were armed with regulation side arms and in combat zones we were armed with rifles.

We had troops assigned under our command at various points, and were assigned duties in United States Army general orders.

We, with troops under our command, guarded tunnels and mines and took part in one battle at the Suchan coal mines.

We were on active duty, full-time duty and subject to the complete dislocation and uncertainties for the future so characteristic of war service.

All of this is a part of the House Armed Service Forces Committee hearings on H. R. 6277 and supported by documents introduced into the record.

Mr. Kennedy then adds after his signature to his letter a so-called history of the Russian Railway Service Corps which is no history at all in respect to our organization and efforts to secure the recognition so rightfully ours. It is material taken from War Department reports to the Congress on previous bills and does not present both sides of the case.

The War Department makes adverse reports on our bills as a matter of policy opposing all such efforts. In conversation with the Adjutant General in his office in 1938 and in the presence of three other members of our corps, and in response to my questions the Adjutant General told us that we were paid "right here" (War Department) and that they opposed us because we had a very valid claim but there were other groups who did not have such a valid claim, who were watching our efforts, and by stopping us they were defeating all of the groups.

In this report submitted by Mr. Kennedy is a pay schedule showing that we received more than the regular pay. Previous testimony at hearings has brought out the fact that with foreign pay and all allowances to Regular Army officers we actually received less for lieutenants and captains, majors were practically equal and four lieutenant colonels and one colonel did figure higher, however, when signing applications for an Army commission and during our service for probably 18 months we did not know but what we were receiving the same pay.

As to the Poindexter bill, if the Director of Military opposed legislation in 1918 he did so without our knowledge and without our knowledge that a bill was pending and when he learned of our attitude in the matter he thereafter strongly supported us.

All of these points have been covered in previous House hearings.

The Army presented many interdepartmental communications against our bill but these communications took place 1 and 2 years after we were overseas and we did not have any privilege of assenting to or declining to assent to what took place after we left this country.

The Director of Military Railways, the Chairman of the Council of National Defense have testified in hearings that we were told we were in the Army and had every right to believe we were and this is supported by our signing of an application for an Army commission and receiving an appointment of War Department form denoting appointment by the President of the United States and signed by the Adjutant General. We signed for the duration of the war and could not resign.

In closing, Mr. ANDERSON, it would seem to me that Mr. Kennedy's letter is quite biased in that he ties us up with groups specified in their resolution when the resolution does not cover us and his letter does not represent the true feeling of the American Legion in our case as I brought out in the first part of this letter.

I am attaching hereto a copy of the report of the subcommittee of the National Committee of the American Legion in 1934 which indicates their findings after investigation and which is the only investigation the Legion ever made in our case.

Very respectfully yours,

H. L. HOSKIN.
President, Associated Veterans of the Russian Railway Service Corps.

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON RUSSIAN RAILWAY SERVICE CORPS TO THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, THE AMERICAN LEGION, 1934

The authority for the appointment of your subcommittee is contained in the following resolution, passed by the national executive committee, at its meeting of November last:

"Be it resolved, That the representatives of the Russian Railway Service Corps be invited to submit to the national commander complete data concerning their status, including such affidavits, exhibits or other information as will assist this committee in taking action at its next meeting: be it further

"Resolved, the national commander shall appoint a special committee, of such number as he shall desire to review the situation of the members of the Russian Railway Service Corps, said committee to report at the next meeting."

Your committee finds the following facts:

The Russian Railway Service Corps consisted of about 288 officers, and was organized as an expedition for the purpose of keeping open the lines of communication over the Trans-Siberian Railway between the Russian lines and Vladivostock, and for the benefit of the Russian Government, then at war with the central powers and operating the Chinese Eastern and Trans-Siberian Railway during the period of chaos in Russia and contributed materially by their military service.

Your committee finds that the members of the Russian Railway Service Corps were organized under representations to them that they were to be part of the military service of the United States. They submitted applications for a commission as officers of engineers in the Officers Reserve Corps, organized under the authority of Congress.

The men were advised by the officers of the various railway companies by whom they were employed that they would be enlisted in the United States Army and given commissions with officer's rank, the enlistment to be for the period of the war. Many of these men were of draft age and applied for and were granted exemption from the draft on the ground that they were duly enrolled in the military service. In such cases colonel in charge of the Russian Railway Service Corps certified to the various draft boards that these men were now in the military service of the United States in the Russian Railway Service Corps, that the period of commission was 5 years, and that the acceptance of the commission took place before the officer received notice from the local board to appear for examination. A number of these men were in officers training camps at the time of their commission, and a number of them had opportunity to become commissioned officers in the Engineering Corps of the Regular Army, but believed, and had good cause to believe, that they were duly properly commissioned in the United States Army. The following commission was in fact issued to them:

"You are hereby informed that the President of the United States has appointed you ——— lieutenant in the Russian Railway Service Corps, organized under authority of the President of the United States, to rank as such from November 1, 1917. Immediately on receipt herewith, return the acceptance herewith enclosed, properly filled in, subscribed and attested.

"JOSEPH F. JANDA,
"Adjutant General."

Another instance has been called to our attention in the record of the hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, where at least one of the men of this corps received a commission on the following form:

"You are hereby informed that the President of the United States has appointed you a captain in the Russian Railway Service Corps in military service of the United States. This notice of appointment will be regarded as a commission for all purposes."

Military uniforms and equipment were issued to these men by the War Department, with the insignia of the Engineering Corps on one side of the collar, the letters "RRS" on the other. The uniform was the regulation officers uniform with the insignia pertaining to their particular rank, identical with the insignia used by officers of the United States Army. They were drilled and instructed as officers and performed the duties of officers in the armies of the United States and were treated as such by the officers and enlisted men of the Expeditionary Forces and by all foreign officers. They customarily carried side arms and while on duty guarding bridges and tunnels were armed with rifles. To this corps was assigned the duty of maintaining the lines of communication supporting the eastern front in the general field of war, while corresponding units organized by the same agencies were sent to France for similar duty on the western front. Both forces were in the exclusive service and control of the United States.

The Russian Service Corps was distributed along the entire length of the Trans-Siberian Railway, some 4,000 miles in length. These men assisted in the movement of troops, supplies, and ordnance of the Allies. They installed lines of communication and introduced improved methods and devices. When the Kerenski government was compelled to fall back, they assisted in the movement of some 500 trains of refugees; always were in constant danger of uprising behind the lines and of brigands who were continually cutting the railway lines and wrecking trains. Their work was creditably performed and warmly commended and a number of their officers were decorated by foreign governments.

Your committee is convinced of the sincerity of these men; that they believed at the time they received their commissions that they were being commissioned in the United States Army as a part of the Armed Forces of the country. And, we further believe that this belief was justified by representations made to them by representatives of the United States Government.

Your committee, therefore, recommends that the National Executive Committee report the foregoing findings to the next national convention of the American Legion with the recommendation that said convention favor the passage of legislation now pending in Congress, known as S. 2320, as amended, and that our national legislative committee give to the legislative committee of the Russian Railway Service Corps every assistance in their power.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. GEORGE FISK,
Missouri.
Mr. L. R. PROBST,
Wyoming.
Mr. G. V. BARRON,
Minnesota, Chairman.

PREPARATORY COMMISSION FOR THE INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5863) for refund of customs duties to the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization.

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM] asked to have this bill passed over without prejudice the last time it was called, I ask unanimous consent that it again be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

MULTIPURPOSE TUNNEL THROUGH LAGUNA MOUNTAINS, SAN DIEGO COUNTY, CALIF.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6339) to authorize a survey to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a multipurpose tunnel through the Laguna Mountains in San Diego County, Calif.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the author of the legislation, the gentleman from California, whether my understanding is correct that should this authorization become law, it will not be considered in any way as a precedent which would require the Congress in the future to go ahead with a larger survey and then finally possibly to go ahead with actual construction as a Federal project.

Mr. McKINNON. The original survey would determine from there on as to its practicality. This particular request is in no sense an attempt merely to get the Government to go ahead with an unworthy project.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. What I would like to know particularly is whether or not the author of this bill and the committee are going to attempt to use affirmative action on this legislation as a precedent for the establishment of Federal responsibility for going ahead with the construction, should it be found to be practical.

Mr. McKINNON. That is not the intent of this bill, may I say to the gentleman, because I think it is understood in this case—in the case of this survey—that the Government of the United States is acting in the interest of our national defense. I would not want to preclude further action by the Government in participating in the construction of the project.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. In other words, the matter of the larger survey and the matter of actual construction as a Federal project will rest on their own feet and on their own merits?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill a few questions. Do I understand that there is as a part of this survey and aqueduct as well as a roadway and a railway?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do I understand that San Diego has a contract with the United States Government for some water out of the Colorado River?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that San Diego is now getting a portion of that contract?

Mr. McKINNON. We are taking a portion of our water out of the Colorado River now.

Mr. MURDOCK. Can the gentleman say whether the contract that the city of San Diego has is a higher or lower priority for water out of the river?

Mr. McKINNON. Our priority out of the river is rather low, comparatively speaking.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not as high as some agricultural agencies who are also contractors?

Mr. McKINNON. I understand there are a couple of agricultural agencies that have a higher priority than San Diego.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not the gentleman believe that the highest beneficial use of water is for human consumption, especially in the case of San Diego, where there is a naval base that that is the case?

Mr. McKINNON. Yes. That would be my opinion.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that, speaking for myself, I feel that municipal use of water for human consumption is the highest beneficial use, especially where it is used for the armed services as a part of our national defense, and ought to have the highest priority rating. I wanted to put that in the RECORD, and if the gentleman has any comments on it I would like to hear them.

Water for drinking purposes stands first; for agricultural purposes second, and for power production stands third, and in that order according to the spirit of the water law in the arid and semiarid West. Any other arrangement should be viewed with suspicion and subject to correction.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California a few questions.

Will the gentleman from California tell the Members of the House whether or not San Diego at the present time draws its supply of water, that portion which it takes from the Colorado River, through metropolitan water district aqueduct that runs from Parker Dam into Los Angeles?

Mr. McKINNON. The entire supply that San Diego is drawing out of the Colorado River is brought through the metropolitan aqueduct; yes, sir.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that San Diego has a contract with the Federal Government to supply water?

Mr. McKINNON. San Diego originally had its own independent water supply——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am talking about the present time.

Mr. McKINNON. At the moment San Diego's water rights are thrown in with that of the metropolitan water district.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So I understand. Did not the metropolitan water district incur several million dollars of obligations in connection with the construction of a water-supply system that now goes into San Diego as a part of the metropolitan water district operation?

Mr. McKINNON. That is right. When San Diego joined the metropolitan water district it assumed its proportionate share to pay for the metropolitan water district aqueduct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the present time, then, that portion of the water viaduct system which supplies San Diego is running approximately at full capacity to San Diego?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the aqueduct capacity which runs from the river to Los Angeles is not absorbed, by a long way, is it?

Mr. McKINNON. The gentleman is correct, but the part that is supplied from the aqueduct into San Diego is operating at full capacity. That is brought about largely by the use of the Navy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand. Now, in the event of a great defense program or active participation in a hot war, San Diego would shortly be without an adequate water supply, would it not?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct, plus the additional fact that we feel it is strategically important to have additional supplies coming in through a different route than the present one. What I am trying to say is simply this: That if we duplicated that first barrel with a second barrel along the same route, it would be very easy for the enemy to put our complete water supply out of commission with one bomb; whereas, by supplementing the water supply by a different route, we are adding to our national defense and national safety.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As a matter of fact, this new supply may soon far exceed the capacity of the present supply line.

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct. We could take full water rights and use it advantageously if we could get it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If the survey for this tunnel is permitted and it is ultimately consummated and Congress is asked to make the appropriation to bring that water from the Colorado River into California will it in any way complicate matters, or will it aid and assist in having the great tunnel built under the mountains to take the water down to Arizona eventually where the people of Arizona are trying to get the waters of the Colorado River at a cost to the National Government of over a billion and a quarter, where the expense is going to be up to the sum of $17.50 an acre for what it will irrigate, with the land, when you eventually get it, worth only $200 an acre—is this going to aid and assist that project in any way?

Mr. McKINNON. This has no connection with that project in any way.

Mr. RICH. And it will not influence the gentleman from California to try to get that legislation put through in order that Arizona may have this great project at the expense of the public constructed with great waste of Federal funds?

Mr. McKINNON. The gentleman has no need for alarm in that direction, I can assure him.

Mr. RICH. I am alarmed. I want to keep these things within bounds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Army Engineers is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a multipurpse highway, railway, and adequate tunnel through the Laguna Mountains in San Diego County, Calif., with a view to improving, for national defense purposes, the route of United States Highway No. 80; expediting highway and railway transportation to and from San Diego Harbor; and augmenting and improving the domestic and industrial water supply of the San Diego area: Provided, There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as the Chief of Engineers shall determine to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The Chief of Engineers shall report his recommendations to the Congress within 2 years from the date funds for this survey are made available by the Congress.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "survey" and insert in lieu thereof "preliminary examination and investigation".

Page 1, line 5, before the word "feasibility" insert "engineering"; and before the word "advisability" insert "economic".

Page 1, line 10, strike out "to and from San Diego Harbor" and insert in lieu thereof "through the Laguna Mountains".

Page 2, line 2, after the word "area", strike out the period and insert:

: Provided, That the Chief of Engineers shall consult with the Secretary of the Interior as to all matters relating to augmenting and improving such water supply.

Page 2, lines 3 and 4, after the word "appropriated", strike out "such" and insert in lieu thereof "a"; and after the word "sum", strike out "as the Chief of Engineers shall determine to be necessary" and insert in lieu thereof "not to exceed $50,000".

Page 2, line 6, strike out "two" and insert in lieu thereof "one"; and strike out "s" at the end of the word "years".

Page 2, line 7, strike out "survey" and insert in lieu thereof "preliminary examination and investigation".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize a preliminary examination and investigation to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a multipurpose tunnel through the Laguna Mountains in San Diego County in California."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I need not remind you that there is now a bitter controversy among the States of the Colorado Basin over the legal and rightful division of the limited supply of Colorado River water. This controversy involves all seven of the States of the basin but is particularly bitter at the moment between Arizona and California. As a Representative from Arizona, I have the firm conviction that certain Californians are attempting to divert into California at the Imperial Diversion Dam and into the All-American Canal a greater quantity of water than her legal share, and more than she is rightfully entitled to divert, to the great prospective harm of Arizona and the five other States of the Colorado Basin.

Entirely apart from this bill, I am convinced that those in southern California who are seeking to make this large diversion intend to use the water for a much less beneficial use than the 112,000 acre-feet of water contracted for by San Diego for our naval base. There is abundant evidence to show what their questionable designs are on Colorado River water, which water ought rightfully and legally to be used in other States but which they seek eventually to divert into California at the Imperial Dam and not for the highest use on the coast. No, this would not be water for California cities. I am indignant at these attempts to deprive Arizona of water, the legal and rightful use of which belongs to her, and I think every Member of this body ought to be highly indignant that the claims on Colorado River water for the great naval base at San Diego should be given such a low priority rating in California law.

I warn my colleagues that our desire and determination to fill water needs of the armed forces may be used by designing men to take too much water out of the Colorado River at the Imperial Diversion Dam on a pretext of using it at the naval base at San Diego, but with real intent to use it in a less beneficial way or even in a purely selfish way, and at the same time send most of it to lands in Mexico or waste it to the ocean. Any aqueduct as the one mentioned in this bill must be carefully safeguarded.

ADMINISTRATION OF PERFORMANCE-RATING PLANS FOR CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7824) to provide for the administration of performance-rating plans for certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Performance Rating Act of 1950."

SEC. 2. (a) For the purposes of this act, the term "department" includes (1) the executive departments; (2) the independent establishments and agencies in the executive branch, including corporations wholly owned by the United States; (3) the Administrative Office of the United States Courts; (4) the Library of Congress; (5) the Botanic Gardens; (6) the Government Printing Office; (7) the General Accounting Office; and (8) the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

(b) This act shall not apply to the Tennessee Valley Authority, the field service of the Post Office Department, the Department of Medicine and Surgery of the Veterans' Administration, the Foreign Service of the United States under the Department of State, or to employees in the Territories and possessions of the United States.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of recognizing the merits of officers and employees, and their contributions to efficiency and economy in the Federal service, each department shall establish and use on or more performance-rating plans for evaluating the work performance of such officers and employees.

SEC. 4. No officer or employee of any department shall be given a performance rating, regardless of the name given to such rating, and no such rating shall be used as a basis for any action, except under a performance-rating plan approved by the Civil Service Commission as conforming with the requirements of this act.

SEC. 5. Performance-rating plans required by this act shall be as simple as possible, and each such plan shall provide—

(1) that proper performance requirements be made known to all officers and employees;

(2) that performance be fairly appraised in relation to such requirements;

(3) for the use of appraisals to improve the effectiveness of employee performance;

(4) or strengthening supervisor-employee relationships; and

(5) that each officer and employee be kept currently advised of his performance and promptly notified of his performance rating.

SEC. 6. Each performance-rating plan shall provide for ratings representing at least (1) satisfactory performance, corresponding to an efficiency rating of "good" under the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, as amended, and under laws superseded by this act; (2) unsatisfactory performance, which shall serve as a basis for removal from the position in which such unsatisfactory performance was rendered; and (3) excellent performance, which shall be accorded only when all aspects of performance not only exceed normal requirements but are outstanding and deserve special commendation. No officer or employee shall be rated unsatisfactory without a 90-day prior warning and a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate satisfactory performance.

SEC. 7. (a) Upon the request of any officer or employee of a department, such department shall provide one impartial review of the performance rating of such officer or employee.

(b) There shall be established in each department one or more boards of review for the purpose of considering and passing upon the merits of performance ratings under rating plans established under this act. Each board of review shall be composed of three members. One member shall be designated by the head of the department. One member shall be designated by the officers and employees of the department in such manner as may be provided by the Civil Service Commission. One member, who shall serve as chairman, shall be designated by the Civil Service Commission. Alternate members shall be designated in the same manner as their respective principal members.

(c) In addition to the performance-rating appeal provided in subsection (a), any officer or employee with a current performance rating of less than excellent, upon written appeal to the chairman of the appropriate board of review established under subsection (b), shall be entitled, as a matter of right, to a hearing and decision on the merits of the appealed rating.

(d) At such hearing the appellant, or his designated representative, and representatives of the department shall be afforded an opportunity to submit pertinent information orally or in writing, and to hear or examine, and reply to, information submitted by others. After such hearing, the board of review shall confirm the appealed rating or make such change as it deems to be proper.

SEC. 8. (a) The Civil Service Commission is authorized to issue such regulations as may be necessary for the administration of this act.

(b) The Commission shall inspect the administration of performance-rating plans by each department to determine compliance with the requirements of this act and regulations issued thereunder.

(c) Whenever the Commission shall determine that a performance-rating plan is not being administered in compliance with this act and the regulations issued thereunder, the Commission may, after notice to the department, giving the reasons, revoke its approval of such plan.

(d) After such revocation, such performance-rating plan and any current ratings thereunder shall become inoperative, and the department shall thereupon use a performance-rating plan prescribed by the Commission.

SEC. 9. (a) Section 701 of the Classification Act of 1949 (Public Law 429, 81st Cong., approved October 28, 1949) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 701. Each officer or employee compensated on a per annum basis, and occupying a permanent position within the scope of the compensation schedules fixed by this act, who has not attained the maximum scheduled rate of compensation for the grade in which his position is placed, shall be advanced in compensation successively to the next higher rate within the grade at the beginning of the next pay period following the completion of (1) each 52 calendar weeks of service if his position is in a grade in which the step increases are less than $200 or (2) each 78 calendar weeks of service if his position is in a grade in which the step increases are $200 or more, subject to the following conditions:

"(A) That no equivalent increase in compensation from any cause was received during such period, except increase made pursuant to section 702 or 1002;

"(B) That he has a current performance rating of 'satisfactory' or better; and

"(C) That the benefit of successive step increases shall be preserved, under regulations issued by the Commission for officers and employees whose continuous service is interrupted in the public interest by service with the armed forces or by service in essential non-Government civilian employment during a period of war or national emergency."

(b) Section 702 (a) of such act is amended by striking out "section 701 (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 701."

SEC. 10. Section 703 (b) (2) of title VII of the Classification Act of 1949 (Public Law 429, 81st Cong., approved October 28, 1949) is hereby amended to read:

"(2) No officer or employee shall receive a longevity step increase unless his current performance rating is 'satisfactory' or better."

SEC. 11. The following acts or parts of acts are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 4 of the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 413);

(2) The act of July 31, 1946 (60 Stat. 751; 5 U. S. C. 669a);

(3) Title IX of the Classification Act of 1949 (Public Law 429, 81st Cong.).

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect 90 days after the date of its enactment.

SEC. 13. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 14. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike out lines 4 to 9, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) This act shall not apply to—

"(1) the Tennessee Valley Authority;

"(2) the field service of the Post Office Department;

"(3) physicians, dentists, nurses, and other employees in the Department of Medicine and Surgery in the Veterans' Administration whose compensation is fixed under Public Law 293, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved January 3, 1946;

"(4) the Foreign Service of the United States under the Department of State;

"(5) Production credit corporations;

"(6) Federal intermediate credit banks;

"(7) Federal land banks;

"(8) banks for cooperatives;

"(9) officers and employees of the municipal government of the District of Columbia whose compensation is not fixed by the Classification Act of 1949 (Public Law 429, 81st Cong., approved October 28, 1949)."

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee to the committee amendment: At the end of the committee amendment change the period to a semicolon and add the following: "(10) the Atomic Energy Commission."

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee has unanimously approved H. R. 7824, which provides for the administration of performance-rating plans for certain officers and employees of the Federal Government. The bill sets up a performance-rating system to replace the present efficiency-rating system provided for in title IX of the Classification Act of 1923, as supplemented by the Classification Act of 1949.

Generally, the bill covers all employees in the executive branch of the Government, including the General Accounting Office, the Library of Congress, the Government Printing Office, and classified employees in the municipal government of the District of Columbia. Approximately 1,300,000 employees will be covered by the legislation; whereas the coverage of the efficiency-rating system under the Classification Act applied only to those under the Classification Act who numbered almost 900,000.

Appropriate exemptions are provided for the Tennessee Valley Authority; the field service of the Post Office Department; the Foreign Service of the Department of State; physicians, dentists, and nurses in the Veterans' Administration; certain quasi-Government corporations under the Commodity Credit Corporation; and employees of the District of Columbia government whose compensation is not fixed by the Classification Act.

With respect to the departments and agencies covered, the bill provides the policy that each department and agency shall establish and use a performance-rating system for evaluating the work of its employees under plans approved by the Civil Service Commission.

The principal differences between this bill and existing law are: First, the bill covers an additional 400,000 employees, mainly wage-board employees and other Federal employees for whom no uniform performance-rating system has been established; second, the present efficiency ratings of "excellent," "very good," "good," "fair," and "unsatisfactory" are replaced by three ratings of "excellent," "satisfactory," and "unsatisfactory"; third, Federal employees covered by the Classification Act under the bill will receive within-grade step increases upon maintaining "satisfactory" or above performance ratings, whereas under the present law such classified employees must receive a "good" efficiency rating plus a certificate of satisfactory service and conduct; fourth, the departments and agencies covered by the bill are given greater latitude in formulating performance-rating systems under broad congressional policy, whereas under present law, the Civil Service Commission establishes the efficiency-rating system for classified Federal employees; and fifth, under the bill, employees are entitled to receive a 90-day prior warning and a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate satisfactory performance before an "unsatisfactory" rating is given, whereas at the present time this is merely a regulation of the Civil Service Commission for the benefit of only those employees now covered.

The legislation preserves existing appeal rights of Federal employees in connection with their performance ratings. Impartial and independent boards of review are established for the purpose of considering performance-rating appeals. This procedure is identical with the present procedure regarding efficiency-rating appeals and the independent board is composed of one member representing the employees, one member representing the employing department, and the chairman, a Civil Service Commission employee, designated by the Commission.

The committee conducted extensive hearings with respect to the bill, at which time Federal employee organizations, including the American Federation of Government Employees, the National Federation of Federal Employees, the Government Employees' Council, and the American Federation of Labor appeared and unanimously supported the provisions of the bill.

The Civil Service Commission stated that the legislation was a distinct improvement over the present efficiency rating system. However, it opposed certain principles embodied in the bill which the committee considered essential to any workable performance rating system. In opposition to the Commission's views the committee unanimously agreed: First, that departments and agencies covered by the legislation should be required to provide performance rating plans, subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission; second, that the bill should contain broad policy under which performance rating plans are to be administered; and third, that employees covered by the bill should be entitled to impartial reviews of their performance ratings through the right of appeal to an independent board.

The general objective and purpose of the legislation is to provide a more flexible and workable performance rating system for Federal employees, which is designed to improve the Federal civil service. The committee unanimously agreed that the bill provides adequate safeguards for all Federal employees and will result in a more efficient civil service.

The bill contains general policy requirements which must be followed by the departments and agencies and the Civil Service Commission; however, there is sufficient flexibility to allow the departments and agencies to work out, within reasonable limitations, performance rating plans which will be superior to the present efficiency rating system.

It is believed that the legislation will result in a saving of Federal funds, by reason of the fact that there will be less performance rating appeals by Federal employees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 8, strike out the words "is not being administered in compliance with" and insert in lieu thereof "does not meet the requirements of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENLISTMENT OF ALIENS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2269) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be stricken from the calendar for the reason a rule has been granted for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

REVISIONS IN THE OFFICER PERSONNEL ACT OF 1947, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2335) to make certain revisions in titles I and III of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if a member of the committee will explain this bill briefly for the benefit of the Members.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, my subcommittee handled this bill. May I say first that it is about as technical a bill as I have ever had experience with in the Congress. We worked long hours on it getting the technicalities worked out to the very finest point.

The bill makes a number of technical amendments in the promotion laws covering the Navy and Marine Corps. The most important of the amendments perhaps is the one covering elimination of the so-called plucking boards, which have been in operation in the Navy for some time. These plucking boards are set up for the purpose of eliminating flag-rank officers—that is, high-ranking officers in the Navy. It is felt an officer in the Navy who has been serving for a long period of time when he is removed by the plucking-board process leaves the service under a cloud when it is not the intention of the act to cause him to leave under that status.

Instead of the plucking board, we set up a selection board for the selection of officers for retention in the Navy. This Board will have for its primary duty the retention of flag-rank officers who are needed. Those not retained will then be automatically eliminated but without a stigma attached to their elimination. In other words, they will not be fired. They are simply being dropped from the Navy, and we eliminate the use of the word "plucking," which is objectionable.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. As I understand it, this bill comes here with the unanimous recommendation of members of the committee?

Mr. BROOKS. That is correct, both the subcommittee and the full committee.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think this bill is too complicated and too far-reaching to be passed on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. BROOKS. No. On the contrary, this is badly needed by the services. It is technical and it is not complicated, when one understands the technicalities involved.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. In response to the inquiry of my friend, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE], may I say that while the gentleman from Louisiana has properly stated that this is a technical bill, yet it is a simple bill when one understands the technicalities involved. I can assure the gentleman of that, and I hope he will not interpose any objection to its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby further amended by:

(a) Deleting in the proviso to subsection (b) of section 114 the comma after the word "thirty-two" and substituting therefor a period and deleting the remainder of the said proviso.

(b) Deleting in subsection (r) of section 304 the words "four" and "thirty-four" and substituting therefor the words "five" and "thirty-five", respectively, and deleting the period at the end of the said subsection and substituting therefor a colon and adding the following proviso: "Provided, That those rear admirals of the line not restricted in the performance of duty who attained such status prior to the date of enactment of this amendatory act shall be continued on the active list only upon the recommendation of the first such board convened thereafter."

(c) Amending paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 307 to read as follows:

"(1) Rear admirals not restricted in the performance of duty who attain a status of having completed 5 years of service in grade and 35 years of total commissioned service as defined in subsection 102 (d) of this act shall be eligible for consideration for recommendation for continuation on the active list by a selection board convened in the fiscal year in which they first attain such status: Provided, That those rear admirals not restricted in the performance of duty who attained such status prior to the date of enactment of this amendatory act shall be eligible for such recommendation by the first such board convened thereafter: Provided further, That a rear admiral not restricted in the performance of duty who will attain the age of 62 years in the fiscal year in which he would otherwise be eligible for consideration for continuation on the active list shall not be eligible for such consideration: Provided further, That a rear admiral who shall have lost numbers or precedence at any time shall be eligible for such consideration in the fiscal year in which the most senior rear admiral junior to him who has not lost numbers of precedence is eligible therefor."

(d) Amending paragraph (8) of subsection (a) of section 308 to read as follows:

"(8) The number to be furnished the board in respect to rear admirals not restricted in the performance of duty to be continued on the active list shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy as of the date of the convening of the board. Such number shall be based upon a consideration of the number of vacancies existing among rear admirals not restricted in the performance of duty, plus the number of vacancies estimated to occur during each of the ensuing 5 years in order to best assure to captains a flow of promotion to the grade of rear admiral and to best assure to rear admirals in succeeding years equality of opportunity for continuation on the active list. The number to be so furnished the board shall be not less than 50 percent nor greater than 75 percent of the number of rear admirals eligible for consideration by the board for continuation on the active list."

(e) Deleting in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 309 the words "equal to" and substituting therefor the words "not exceeding."

(f) Amending subsection (a) of section 313 by inserting after the words "Rear Admirals" the words "of the line not restricted in the performance of duty" and deleting the words "two successive selection boards" and substituting therefor the words "a selection board."

(g) Amending subsection (b) of section 313 to read as follows:

"(b) (1) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, each rear admiral designated for engineering duty, aeronautical engineering duty, and special duty, and each rear admiral in the Medical Corps, Supply Corps, Chaplain Corps, Civil Engineer Corps, and Dental Corps, who is not retired or separated from the active list at an earlier date under other provisions of law, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which he completes 7 years' service in the grade of rear admiral or 35 years' total commissioned service as defined in subsections 102 (d) and 202 (d) of this act, whichever is later: Provided, That any such officer shall, if recommended in the report of a board of not less than three naval officers convened for that purpose and approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be retained on the active list and if not retired under other provisions of law, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of any succeeding fiscal year in which he is not again so recommended for retention on the active list by such a board or in which no such board is convened: And provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection, service in grade for an officer promoted to the grade of rear admiral prior to August 7, 1947, and for an officer whose lineal position is adjusted in the grade of rear admiral or who is assigned a new running mate in that grade, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be computed from the date of temporary rank in the grade of rear admiral; and for each other officer promoted to the grade of rear admiral on or after August 7, 1947, from the date of the occurrence of the vacancy to which the officer is promoted to fill.

"(2) The board to consider rear admirals for retention on the active list pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection may be convened annually in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy and shall be convened in any year when the Secretary of the Navy determines that one or more officers who would otherwise be subject to retirement under the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection should be retained on the active list. The number of such officers who may be recommended for such retention on the active list shall not exceed the number furnished the board by the Secretary of the Navy, which shall be the number determined necessary by the Secretary of the Navy to meet the needs of the naval service.

"(3) Each officer, when retired pursuant to this subsection, shall receive retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of his active-duty pay in the grade in which serving at the time of retirement multiplied by the number of years of service for which he is entitled to credit in the computation of pay on the active list, but retired pay so computed shall not exceed a total of 75 percent of said active-duty pay."

(h) Repealing subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j) of section 313 and redesignating subsection (1) of section 313 as subsection (c).

(i) Repealing subsection (k) of section 313, effective July 1, 1950, except as it applies to officers retired under its provisions prior to that date.

(j) Amending subsection (l) of section 314 to read as follows:

"(l) (1) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, major generals who are not retired or separated from the active list at an earlier date under other provisions of law shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they complete 5 years' service in the grade of major general or 35 years' total commissioned service as defined in subsection 102 (d) of this act, whichever is later: Provided, That any such officer shall, if recommended in the report of a board of not less than three naval officers convened for that purpose and approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be retained on the active list and, if not retired under other provisions of law, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of any succeeding fiscal year in which he is not again so recommended for retention on the active list by such a board or in which no such board is convened: Provided further, That an officer serving as Commandant of the Marine Corps shall not, while so serving, be subject to retirement under the provisions of this subsection: And provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection, service in grade shall be computed from the date of appointment in the grade of major general for officers appointed in that grade prior to August 7, 1947, and from the date of the occurrence of the vacancy in the grade of major general to which the officer is promoted to fill for officers promoted to that grade on or after August 7, 1947.

"(2) Each officer, when retired pursuant to this subsection, shall receive retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of his active-duty pay in the grade in which serving at the time of retirement multiplied by the number of years of service for which he is entitled to credit in the computation of pay on the active list, but retired pay so computed shall not exceed a total of 75 percent of said active-duty pay."

(k) Amending subsection (m) of section 314 to read as follows:

"(m) The board to consider major generals for retention on the active list may be convened annually in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy and shall be convened in any year when three or more such officers would otherwise be subject to retirement under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section. The number of officers which may be recommended for retention by each such board shall not exceed the number furnished it by the Secretary of the Navy. The number so furnished shall be that which the Secretary of the Navy shall determine to be necessary to meet the requirements of the Marine Corps and, in any year when the number of officers otherwise subject to retirement under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section is three or more, the number so furnished shall not be less than the number of such officers in excess of two."

(l) Amending subsection (q) of section 314 to read as follows:

"(q) (1) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, brigadier generals designated for supply duty who are not retired or separated from the active list an an earlier date under other provisions of law, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they complete 5 years' service in grade or 35 years' total commissioned service as defined in subsection 102 (d) of this act, whichever is later: Provided, That any such officers shall, if recommended in the report of a board of not less than three officers serving in ranks above that of brigadier general convened for that purpose and approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be retained on the active list and if not retired under other provisions of law, shall be placed on the retired list on June 30 of any succeeding fiscal year in which he is not again so recommended for retention on the active list by such a board or in which no such board is convened: Provided further, That an officer serving as Quartermaster General of the Marine Corps shall not, while so serving, be subject to retirement under the provisions of this subsection: And provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection, service in grade shall be computed from date of appointment in the grade of brigadier general for officers appointed in that grade prior to August 7, 1947, and from the date of the occurrence of the vacancy in the grade of brigadier general to which the officer is promoted to fill for officers promoted to that grade on or after August 7, 1947.

"(2) Each officer, when retired pursuant to this subsection, shall receive retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of his active-duty pay in the grade in which serving at the time of retirement multiplied by the number of years of service for which he is entitled to credit in the computation of pay on the active list but retired pay so computed shall not exceed a total of 75 percent of said active-duty pay."

(m) Amending subsection (r) of section 314 to read as follows:

"(r) The board to consider brigadier generals designated for supply duty for retention on the active list may be convened annually in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy and shall be convened in any year when two or more such officers would otherwise be subject to retirement under the provisions of subsection (q) of this section. The number of officers which may be recommended for retention by each such board shall not exceed the number furnished it by the Secretary of the Navy. The number so furnished shall be that which the Secretary of the Navy shall determine to be necessary to meet the requirements of the Marine Corps and, in any year when the number of officers otherwise subject to retirement under the provisions of subsection (q) of this section is two or more, the number so furnished shall not be less than the number of such officers in excess of one."

(n) Repealing subsection (s) of section 314.

(o) Repealing subsections (t) and (y) of section 314, effective July 1, 1950, and repealing subsection (v) of section 314, effective July 1, 1950, except as it applies to officers heretofore retired under its provisions.

(p) Redesignating subsection (u) of section 314 as subsection (s); redesignating subsection (w) of section 314 as subsection (t) and deleting in the said subsection the words "equal to" and substituting therefor the words "not exceeding"; and redesignating subsection (x) of section 314 as subsection (u).

SEC. 2. The Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, is further amended by deleting in subsections 114 (h) and 314 (h) the word "four" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "three."

SEC. 3. Section 305 (a) (2) of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The officers composing the board for the recommendation of rear admirals for continuation on the active list shall be officers on the active or retired list of the Navy. The officers composing other boards shall be officers on the active list of the Navy. No officer may be a member of two successive boards for the consideration of officers for promotion to the same grade."

SEC. 4. No officer shall be retired pursuant to this amendatory act prior to the first day of the sixth month following the month of its enactment.

With the following committee amendments.

Page 3, line 1, after the word "consideration", strike out the balance of the line and also lines 2 to 6, inclusive.

On page 6, line 14, change the numeral "(1)" to the letter "(l)."

On page 7, line 4, of the bill, strike the words "naval officers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "regular officers on the active or retired lists of the naval service."

On page 8, line 10, change the numeral "(1)" to the letter "(l)."

On page 8, line 17, change the numeral "(1)" to the letter "(l)."

On page 12, line 3, of the bill, add the following new section 4 and renumber present section 4 as section 5:

"SEC. 4. As soon as practicable after June 30, 1950, the Secretary of the Navy shall convene a board of not less than five officers of the Regular Navy of the grade of read admiral or above to consider and recommend for continuation on the active list officers of the line of the Regular Navy not restricted by law in the performance of duty serving in the grade of captain who were serving in that grade on June 30, 1948, and who on that date had completed 29 or more years of total commissioned service as defined in section 102 of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, and whose names are not on a promotion list. Such officers recommended for continuation on the active list in the report of such board, as approved by the Secretary of the Navy, shall be so continued under the provisions of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended. Each such officer not so recommended shall be placed on the retired list on the first day of the sixth month following the month of enactment of this act with retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of his basic pay on the active list at the time of retirement, multiplied by the number of years of service for which entitled to credit in the computation of his pay on the active list, not to exceed a total of 75 percent of said basic pay: Provided, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year in computing the number of years of service by which the rate of 2½ percent is multiplied: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held to reduce the retired rank or pay to which such officer would be entitled under other provisions of law."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABOLISHING THE WHEELER NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7982) to abolish the Wheeler National Monument, in the State of Colorado, and to provide for the administration of the lands contained therein as a part of the national forest within which such national monument is situated, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will somebody tell us something about this bill?

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the inquiry, this is the second of two bills which were introduced by the Congressmen from Colorado to take out from under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service two areas which had formerly been designated as national monuments and put them back under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service where they belong. It is impossible for the National Park Service to accept any control over these areas and to police them as they should be policed. There is no money involved in this transaction whatsoever. They simply revert back to where they were, in the Forest Service, under whose jurisdiction these lands lie and will be taken care of in the future.

Mr. HUBER. There is no provision now for policing this area. How many acres are contained in it?

Mr. ASPINALL. There are just a few acres contained in this national monument; 300 acres, I believe. It is away from all civilization. It is impossible to build roads through the agency of the National Park Service to these areas, but it is possible for the Forest Service to build trails in, as they do throughout all of the areas, and make them accessible to the public.

Mr. HUBER. When was it created a national monument?

Mr. ASPINALL. It was established in 1908.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUBER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Why not let this land revert back to the State of Colorado? Why let the Department take it over and the Federal Government build roads and trails in it? If it is worth anything, let the State take it. Why should the Federal Government go in there now and handle this property?

Mr. ASPINALL. This land has always belonged to the Federal Government. When Colorado became a State it was part of the land owned by the Federal Government. It has been in the boundary of the Rio Grande National Forest continually from the beginning until it was taken out from under the jurisdiction of the National Forest Service by the provisions which made it a national park area.

Mr. RICH. No doubt the Government recommended that this be made a national park at the time the law was enacted. Now they want to take it back. Why did they make the error?

Mr. ASPINALL. More than likely, if the gentleman remembers how these things come about, it was made at the instigation of some Member of Congress who saw in the land a certain peculiarity that might attract public attention and demand exceptional control, and that is the likely reason.

Mr. RICH. They wanted the Federal Government to go out and develop it and spend money on it. Now the Department does not want to do that. Why not turn it back to the State and let them have it? Why should they have it?

Mr. HUBER. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ASPINALL. It is impossible to do that. The land is controlled by the Federal Government.

Mr. PETERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is not this the situation: This is a small volcanic area of about 300 acres within the forest. It was declared back in 1908 to be a national monument. Subsequent events have shown it is impractical, there have been no funds for the purpose of administering it, and we are just canceling the monument. It goes back to the forest, where it originally was, and where both departments say now it should be. When you get two departments together, you have done a good job.

Mr. RICH. I take it they recommended in 1933 that it be made a national monument.

Mr. PETERSON. No. In 1908.

Mr. RICH. Certainly they did, or they would not have made it a monument.

Mr. PETERSON. They may have, but if they did, they made a mistake.

Mr. RICH. They are making lots of mistakes. I want to stop these mistakes. The way to correct it is to give this ground to the State of Colorado and let them have it.

Mr. PETERSON. You would have a little area of approximately 300 acres surrounded entirely by Government acreage.

Mr. RICH. If it is worth anything, let the State of Colorado take it and let them sell it. I would like to get rid of it now so that we can stop the Federal Government from spending any more money on it, and that is what you are going to do if this bill goes through.

Mr. ASPINALL. May I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the State of Colorado does not want jurisdiction over this property?

Mr. RICH. I know. The trouble is they want the Federal Government to handle it. You give it to them. I agree to taking it out as a monument. I think that is a wise thing to do now. But I say, let us give it to the State of Colorado and let us be through with it. You know you will save money if you do that.

Mr. ASPINALL. No, I do not.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is talking about the department's building roads and trails in there to this volcanic ash land. If it is no good for the Federal Government to own, let us give it to the State of Colorado.

Mr. ASPINALL. May I reply that trails are already built into this area? There are no other facilities. There is no intention of building roads as such. The trails are all that are necessary to get the people who are interested in that particular development, in those organic formations, into that area.

Mr. RICH. Is the land worth anything?

Mr. ASPINALL. The land is worth nothing, according to my information, except for some person who has the peculiar idea he wants to study that particular formation.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think the department will do more developing? Does he not think they will want to make more developments in there, and eventually cost the Federal Government more money?

Mr. ASPINALL. I would say no.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman from Florida think that?

Mr. PETERSON. No. What we want to do is get away from developing this little piece of volcanic area within the forest. We just cancel the monument, and this land is included within the forest. It will save money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Wheeler National Monument, containing 300 acres, established by proclamation of December 7, 1908 (35 Stat. 2214), is hereby abolished, and the Federal lands and property therein shall hereafter be administered as a part of the national forest within which such properties are situated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIXING THE PRICE OF COPIES OF RECORDS FURNISHED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6013) to amend an act fixing the price of copies of records furnished by the Department of the Interior.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of August 24, 1912, as amended (37 Stat. 497; 5 U. S. C., sec. 488), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Interior, or any of the officers of that Department may, when not prejudicial to the interests of the Government, furnish authenticated or unauthenticated copies of any official books, records, papers, documents, maps, plats, or diagrams within his custody, and may charge therefor a sum equal to the cost of production thereof, plus the cost of administrative services involved in handling the records for such purpose, as these costs may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior or such subordinate officials or employees as he may designate, and in addition the sum of 25 cents for each certificate of verification and the seal attached to authenticated copies. There shall be no charge for the making or verification of copies required for official use by the officers of any branch of the Government. Only a charge of 25 cents shall be made for furnishing authenticated copies of any rules, regulations, or instructions printed by the Government for gratuitous distribution. The money received for copies under this section shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriations then current and chargeable for the cost of furnishing copies as herein authorized."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Committee on Public Lands for reporting out this bill H. R. 6013, the purpose of which is to have charges made for certain documents which are issued by the Department of the Interior and to include in the charges whatever administrative costs there may be. While there is only a small amount involved, to me this is very important, because it is a step in the right direction.

There is no question but what various departments and agencies of government are rendering services to the public which cost the taxpayers countless of millions of dollars. Those services should be paid for. I hope sometime, if not during this session, then in the next session of the Congress, that an appropriate standing committee, or perhaps a special committee, will be appointed to look into this whole question of permitting the Government to make proper charges for services rendered by departments and agencies of the Government, as well as to look into the whole question of the elimination of unnecessary publications. Members take the floor from time to time and refer to specific publications. No one can take issue with them. As I see it, it is something that has grown up through the years. No particular administration is to blame for that and no particular party is to blame. It is a condition that has developed over the years. It seems to me that very constructive work could be done in connection with a careful study whereby those members of the general public might pay for services that are now given to them free. I do not mean that they should pay for all the services that are given to them, but there are certain services, such as receiving copies of documents and so forth, that they should pay for.

The administrative expenses involved in rendering such services should be taken into consideration. That would bring into the Treasury of the United States many millions of dollars each year. Also, a study should be made looking toward the elimination of unnecessary publications, thereby saving large outlays of money.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the majority leader on the statement he has just made. I have been advocating that ever since I have been a Member of Congress. There are many places where the Department of the Interior, as well as other departments of the Government, could help pay the expenses of services that they give by making a certain charge to the people who receive the benefits.

The Government spends the money to develop these things, and the recipients could very well help to defray the cost to the Government. It is only as a result of recommendations made by men in the position of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the majority leader [Mr. McCORMACK], that we are going to get such action. I am glad to see the gentleman take that stand.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I might say further there is a broad field where constructive work could be done looking toward the elimination of duplication of work which would result in tremendous savings to the Government and to the taxpayers.

At the same time, a study should be made to establish a reasonable and proper charge for services rendered to the Government, which would bring into the Treasury millions of dollars each year. Those members of the general public receiving these benefits would be glad to pay for them and agree that they should be charged for them.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. The evidence before the committee substantiates the last statement that the gentleman from Massachusetts has just made, that the people dealing with the Department of the Interior certainly would have no objection to paying the cost of preparing these various instruments and documents. I do not believe the general public would raise any objection whatsoever.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman. I am glad that my friend made that observation.

While this bill only involves about $20,000 which will come into the Treasury, this is a step in the right direction; it could be the beginning of a program where large sums of money could be saved to the taxpayers by making a proper charge for certain services rendered by the various departments and agencies of Government.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman from Massachusetts speaks of departmental publications. I will say to the gentleman that this bill is not directed at departmental publications, but to copies of maps and plats and patents, and things of that kind.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. People have to pay a filing fee and then when they want a copy of the plat or patent they have to pay an extra charge. I think the facilities of the Government could be made available to the people who have filed these patents and plats so that they should be able to get copies of maps, and so forth.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are many, many services rendered where a proper fee could be made and to which nobody would object. Then there is a broader field with reference to the elimination of publications. A study should be made of documents that are published to find out how many could be eliminated. This is not stepping on anybody's toes. To me it is only common sense and good judgment on our part.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC SCHOOL FACILITIES, WALKER, MINN.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7431) for expenditure of funds for cooperating with the public school board at Walker, Minn., for the extension of public-school facilities to be available to all Indian children in the district, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an additional sum of $80,000 for the purpose of cooperating with Independent School District No. 5, Cass County, Minn, at Walker, Minn., for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public school facilities at Walker, Minn., as authorized by the act of July 1, 1940 (54 Stat. 707, 708): Provided, That in lieu of recoupment of the amount appropriated, as authorized by this section, all Indian children of such district shall be admitted to such schools without further cost to the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of rebuilding and resurfacing the road from Onigum Agency, Minn., running south to State Highway No. 34, known as the Onigum Road. That in consideration of the amount appropriated, as authorized by this section, the Board of County Commissioners, Cass County, Minn., shall assume the responsibility of maintaining said road from the date of completion of such rebuilding and resurfacing as provided for herein.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an additional sum of $80,000 to be available to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of cooperating with Independent School District No. 5, Cass County, Minn., at Walker, Minn., for the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of public-school facilities at Walker, Minn., as authorized by the act of July 1, 1940 (54 Stat. 707, 708), and the act of July 24, 1947 (61 Stat. 414): Provided, That, in consideration of the amount heretofore appropriated and the amount which may be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section, all Indian children residing in such district shall be admitted to the schools of the district without further cost to the United States for instructional, operation, and maintenance purposes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8610) relating to the activities of temporary and certain other employees of the Bureau of Land Management.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill eliminates certain strict provisions of the law which prohibit certain persons from dealing with public-land matters. It eliminates one of these limited, part-time employees. In other words, at the present time the law is so construed that a firefighter, who simply would be employed in an emergency 2 or 3 days, cannot even take up a homestead or cannot even file upon the public domain. He cannot even take lands of any kind. We eliminate from that provision these limited, temporary, part-time, when actually employed without compensation, employees, but we do provide in there definitely that it does not prevent the Secretary of the Interior from issuing appropriate regulations to limit the activities of employees of the Department.

Mr. RICH. There is nothing in this legislation that is going to open the door for everybody to get something out of the Government for nothing?

Mr. PETERSON. The gentleman is right.

Mr. RICH. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 452, Revised Statutes (43 U. S. C., sec. 11), shall not apply to any person because of his employment as a temporary, limited, part-time, WAE (when actually employed), or WOC (without compensation) officer, clerk, or employee of the Bureau of Land Management.

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 190, Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99), and of title 18, United States Code, sections 281, 283, and 284, shall not apply to any member of an advisory board of the Bureau of Land Management.

SEC. 3. This act shall not be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, under existing law, to regulate the activities of any officer, clerk, or employee of the Department of the Interior or of any practitioner in proceedings before the Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the calendar may include the next number, Calendar No. 536 (H. R. 7934).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 7934, to reduce and revise the boundaries of the Joshua Tree National Monument in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUBER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us something about this bill?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The bill is a realinement of the boundaries of the Joshua Tree National Monument. It has the approval of the Park Service and all interested services. It removes approximately 250,000 acres from the public domain and puts this land back in private ownership or public ownership, whichever was the case before the monument was created. It involves no money.

Mr. HUBER. Well, what is the reason for removing it?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The first alinement covered, by Executive order, a certain number of acres. As the years have gone by, this second realinement becomes necessary to run the southern line of the monument along the aqueduct instead of on one side of the aqueduct and the other. It removes a privately owned area with a large iron mine which cannot therefore be controlled by the Park Service. It removes a section in the northern part of the monument, dotted with privately owned claims, all of this with the approval of the Park Service, and it does not affect the original area for the flora and fauna of which the monument was set aside. There was no reason it should have been included in the first place, except the Park Service did not have the knowledge at that time to enable it to set the more permanent line.

Mr. HUBER. What will become of this land? Will it become the property of the State of California?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. It reverts. It goes back to private or public ownership.

Mr. HUBER. Will it be sold?

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUBER. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON. It retains the status it had before the monument was created?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct.

Mr. PETERSON. These areas that belonged to private citizens then still belong to private citizens. Those that were public domain are still public domain. A lot of the area had some little mines.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is one of the reasons those sections are being removed. They were dotted with private ownership.

Mr. HUBER. We bought the land from those private property owners in the first place——

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. No. They still owned it inside the monument.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joshua Tree National Monument, in the State of California, established by Proclamation No. 2193, of August 10, 1936 (50 Stat. 1760), hereafter shall comprise the following-described area:

SAN BERNARDINO MERIDIAN

Township 1 south, range 5 east, sections 22 to 27, inclusive, and sections 34 to 36, inclusive; township 2 south, range 5 east, portion of east half lying north of the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct but excluding therefrom that portion of the Long Canyon Camp and dump area in section 27; township 1 south, range 6 east, sections 19 to 36, inclusive; township 2 south, range 6 east; township 3 south, range 6 east, portion lying north of the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct but excluding therefrom that portion of the Deception Camp and dump area in section 14, that portion of the West Deception Camp and dump area in section 10, and the portions of the East Wide Canyon Camps and dump areas in sections 5 and 6; township 1 south, range 7 east, partly unsurveyed; township 2 south, range 7 east; township 3 south, range 7 east, portion lying north of the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct but excluding therefrom that portion of the Fan Hill Camp and dump area in section 20; township 1 south, range 8 east, partly unsurveyed; townships 2 and 3 south, range 8 east; township 1 south, range 9 east, sections 5 to 9, inclusive, sections 16 to 23, inclusive, and sections 26 to 35, inclusive; township 2 south, range 9 east, sections 2 to 11, inclusive, and sections 14 to 36, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 3 south, range 9 east; township 4 south, range 9 east, sections 1 to 6, inclusive, and sections 11 to 14, inclusive; township 2 south, range 10 east, sections 25 to 36, inclusive, unsurveyed; township 3 south, range 10 east, partly unsurveyed; township 4 south, range 10 east, sections 1 to 18, inclusive, sections 22 to 26, inclusive, and sections 35 and 36; township 5 south, range 10 east, section 1; township 2 south, range 11 east, sections 25 to 36, inclusive, unsurveyed; townships 3 and 4 south, range 11 east, partly unsurveyed; township 5 south, range 11 east, sections 1 to 18, inclusive, sections 22 to 27, inclusive, and sections 34, 35, and 36; township 6 south, range 11 east, portion of sections 1, 2, and 3 lying north of north transmission line right-of-way which is adjacent to the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct; township 2 south, range 12 east, section 13 and sections 23 to 36, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; townships 3 and 4 south, range 12 east, partly unsurveyed; township 5 south, range 12 east, sections 1 to 34, inclusive, partly unsurveyed, and portions of sections 35 and 36 lying north of north transmission line right-of-way which is adjacent to the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct; township 6 south, range 12 east, portions of sections 2 to 6, inclusive, lying north of north transmission line right-of-way which is adjacent to the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct; township 2 south, range 13 east, sections 1 and 2 and sections 7 to 36, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 3 south, range 13 east, sections 1 to 18, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 5 south, range 13 east, sections 6, 7, 18, and 19, unsurveyed; township 1 south, range 14 east, sections 33 to 36, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 2 south, range 14 east, partly unsurveyed; township 3 south, range 14 east, sections 1 to 18, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 1 south, range 15 east, sections 31 to 35, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 2 south, range 15 east, sections 2 to 36, inclusive, partly unsurveyed; township 3 south, range 15 east, sections 1 to 12, inclusive, partly unsurveyed, and section 18, unsurveyed; township 2 south, range 16 east, sections 18, 19, 30, and 31, unsurveyed; and township 3 south, range 16 east, sections 6 and 7 unsurveyed.

SEC. 2. All lands in Federal ownership situated between the exterior boundaries of the Joshua Tree National Monument as proclaimed on August 10, 1936, and the exterior boundaries as herein set forth are hereby opened for mining and further mining entries under the general mining laws of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 5, strike all of line 5 and insert in lieu thereof the words "6 east, sections 1 to 30, inclusive, that portion of section 31 lying north of the north right-of-way line of the Colorado River aqueduct, and sections 32 to 36, inclusive; township 3 south, range 6 east, portion lying north."

Page 2, line 11, following the words "range 7 east", strike the words "partly unsurveyed," and insert in lieu thereof the words "sections 1 to 4, inclusive, and 9 to 15, inclusive, unsurveyed, section 16, sections 19 to 23, inclusive, section 24, unsurveyed, and sections 25 to 36, inclusive."

Page 2, line 23, strike the numeral "6" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5."

Page 3, line 12, following the word "aqueduct", insert the words "but excluding therefrom the aggregate deposit in section 3."

Page 3, lines 15 and 16, strike all of lines 15 and 16 and insert in lieu thereof the words "township 5 south, range 12 east, sections 1 to 24, inclusive, and sections 26 to 34, inclusive, partly unsurveyed, and portions of sections 25 and 35 lying."

Page 3, line 20, strike the words "2 to 6, inclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 10."

Page 3, line 22, following the semicolon after the word "aqueduct", insert the words ", but excluding therefrom the Bumpani's aggregate deposit in section 4."

Page 4, line 14, strike all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2. All public domain lands heretofore included within the Joshua Tree National Monument which are eliminated from the National Monument by this act are hereby reopened to location, entry, and patenting under the United States mining laws and public land laws."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME DURING WHICH ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS MAY BE MADE

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3639) providing for an extension of the time during which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States may be made.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I uiderstand this is only a 3-month extension.

Mr. ASPINALL. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time during which labor may be performed or improvements made, under the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, on any unpatented mining claim in the United States, for the period commencing July 1, 1949, is hereby extended until the hour of 12 o'clock meridian on the 1st day of October 1950, if the claimant of such mining claim shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office wherein the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian on the 1st day of July 1950, a notice of his desire to hold such mining claim under this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, following the words "United States", insert the following words", including Alaska,".

Page 1, line 8, strike the comma (,) and insert in lieu thereof a colon (:).

Page 1, line 8, strike out all of line 9 through line 3, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "Provided, That assessment work or improvements required for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1951, may be commenced immediately following 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1950."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing for an extension of the time during which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States, including Alaska, may be made, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein certain statements and excerpts and other relevant material.)

FOURTEEN YEARS UNDER THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT, SIGNED BY PRESIDENT FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT 14 YEAR AGO TODAY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, today is the fourteenth anniversary of the enactment into law of the antiprice-discrimination-act which has become familiarly known as the Robinson-Patman Act. Fourteen years ago, the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, at a White House ceremony, signed the bill which independent business has termed its Magna Carta. This ceremony was attended by Senators and Representatives who had been active in support of the bill and who had contributed greatly to its passage by the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Prior to June 19, 1936, when President Roosevelt signed the Robinson-Patman Act, a long series of events had transpired which clearly indicated the need for strengthening the antitrust laws, particularly in the field of unfair price discrimination: rebates, allowances, unjustified commissions, brokerages, preferential treatment, and other forms of price discrimination. Large-scale buying and selling involving many forms of discrimination had forced independent manufacturers and merchants into a dangerous competitive corner from which there was no escape under the laws then in existence.

UGLY EXAMPLES OF PRICE DISCRIMINATION

Evidence of price discrimination in all of its ugly phases was readily available. A select committee, of which I had the honor of being chairman, was appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate the trade practices of big-scale retail and wholesale buying and selling organizations. The hearings as a result of the appointment of this committee, among other things, pointed to the necessity of additional legislation which would provide an equal opportunity in the market place for small and independent business in the United States. It was recognized that, if national chain stores were permitted to expand and grow through the malicious and unfair methods utilized at that time, in a very short period the independent business institutions of our country would be totally destroyed. Cutthroat competition at every level of distribution was driving thousands of independent businessmen out of business every year.

Independent manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers were all subjected to the discriminatory tactics of the large buyers and sellers. There was unrest among small and independent business and a frustration amounting to desperation as year after year competitive conditions grew worse and worse. The growth of national retail chains had been phenomenal during the 10 years preceding 1935. The chains were deliberately selling below cost in certain localities to drive independent merchants out of business while in other localities where independents had been driven out, leaving the field largely to the national chains, prices of the necessities of life were far beyond their normal value.

EXAMPLES OF NATIONAL CHAIN-STORE TACTICS

The hearings brought to light the tactics of The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., about which we have heard a great deal lately because of the Department of Justice action under the Sherman Act. It was shown in the hearings that the A. & P. received approximately $8,000,000 in the form of discriminatory advertising allowances, discounts, rebates, brokerage, and so forth, from its suppliers during 1934. Its total business for that year amounted to approximately $840,000,000 with a net profit, after depreciation and Federal taxes, of $16,709,000. Thus the unjustified rebates received during the year 1934 amounted to more than half of A. & P.'s total net profits for that year. The $8,000,000 in itself was sufficient to pay all the dividends declared on the common stock that year, of which 75 percent was owned by the Hartford boys. A. & P. received, in 1933, from one manufacturer alone, the General Foods Corp., a total of $360,000 in the form of advertising allowances, which amounted to 5 percent of its total purchases from General Foods. It received approximately $100,000 in allowances from Standard Brands, Inc., in addition to a 10-percent discount which amounted to nearly $150,000 yearly.

All of these allowances and discounts were not earned but could be had by A. & P. because it was a tremendous purchaser of food products and could blackjack the manufacturers to the tune of $8,000,000 or more yearly. The list of A. & P.'s discriminatory tactics is too long to include in a 1-hour speech, because the whole hour would be taken up by A. & P. alone.

First National Stores was another one which, the hearings disclosed, enjoyed preferential treatment to the disadvantage of its small competitors.

S. H. Kress & Co., the Kroger Grocery chain, Liggett Drug, the National Tea Co., Safeway Stores, United Drug, Walgreen, and many others which were brought under the microscopic examination of the committee were all found to play the price-discrimination game in all of its unfair and predatory aspects.

It was quite apparent that the millions and perhaps billions of dollars which yearly went into the pockets of the giant national chains was in reality an equal discrimination against the consumers of this country. Somebody had to pay for the preferential treatment accorded the large buyers. These predatory interests, despite many claims to that effect, did not pass savings on to the consumer but used such unearned income to drive their smaller competitors out of business so that the consumer markets, pricewise, could be controlled. We all know that a controlled market is a high-priced market. We all know that, when prices are fixed and controlled, the consumer pays not only in price but in quality and in service rendered.

One of the outstanding cases of price discrimination was in the automotive field. In a contract between Sears, Roebuck & Co. and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. it was found that in the 11 years of the life of the contract Sears, Roebuck received preferential treatment amounting to $41,000,000. This $41,000,000 represented a consideration given to Sears at the expense of Goodyear's independent tire dealers. This investigation was conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, which found that it was a private deal between the presidents of the companies and that not even the directors of the Goodyear Co. were aware of this infamous contract. In addition, the investigation revealed a payment to Sears, Roebuck of a secret rebate of $80,000 plus 18,000 shares of Goodyear stock.

Here is the pay-off. Within 60 days after the approval of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936, Goodyear's president announced to its stockholders that the contract had been canceled although it had 5 more years to run, because they could not justify the price under the Robinson-Patman Act, which the contract extended to the Sears Co. Shortly thereafter, the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co., which supplied the Atlas subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey, announced that due to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act they could not justify the preferential treatment given the Atlas Co.

EVENTS LEADING TO THE INTRODUCTION OF ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL (H. R. 8442) AND ITS PASSAGE BY THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS (PUBLIC LAW 692, 49 STAT. 1526)

The American Retail Federation was formed in April 1935 with participation by leading national chain-store systems and other mass distributors for the joint promotion of their interests. The formation of the federation occurred shortly before the invalidation of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 by the Supreme Court on the grounds that there was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. This action of the Supreme Court of course invalidated the NRA codes which had given great impetus to the growth and formation of trade and industry associations.

Recognizing the significance of the giant national chains and other mass distributors forming themselves into a federation, the House of Representatives created a special committee to investigate the federation—House Resolutions 203 and 239; April and June 1935. This special committee was given the power "to investigate the trade practices of individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in big-scale buying and selling of articles at wholesale or retail, and their associations."

This special committee conducted hearings beginning June 5, 1935, and extending through February 15, 1936, in which the evidence taken included a mass of testimony and exhibits revealing the extent and flagrance of discriminatory prices and allowances wrung from manufacturers and other selling sources by mass-buying distributors, through the sheer force of their size, to the prejudice of their smaller competitors buying from the same sources.

Examples of this discrimination I have referred to previously.

As a direct result of these hearings, I introduced H. R. 8442, which eventually became the Robinson-Patman Act. One of the early advocates of the bill and, in fact, one of its most coherent sponsors was the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, a trade association of independent wholesale grocers, with membership in more than 40 States of the Union. This association, through its general counsel, Mr. H. B. Teegarden, submitted to me for consideration the proposals of the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association. One of the stalwarts who bent every effort and gave generously of his time and talent, looking toward enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, was this fine association's present vice president and secretary, Col. R. H. Rowe. Colonel Rowe was constant in his attendance during the whole movement, and I relied upon him greatly then as I do now. The work of Mr. Teegarden in pressing forward the proposals of the association and in working for the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act deserves special mention. Mr. Teegarden had made proposals in draft form and had presented them to his association in the spring of 1935. Thus the initial remedies to cure the evils discovered during the investigation of the American Retail Federation were offered by this association.

Mr. Teegarden is and has always been a patriotic American who has served his country well, and he is today in the service as a valued public servant of the Securities and Exchange Commission. There is no man whose judgment in the field of antitrust law I regard more highly, and I am glad to have this opportunity to pay tribute to my friend, whom I affectionately call "Judge" because of his profound legal knowledge and judicial temperament.

I was happy to accept the proposals of the association through its representatives and to inform them that it was my intention to sponsor and introduce in the House a bill embodying their proposals, which I did on June 11, 1935. A few days later, on June 26, the distinguished majority leader of the Senate, the late beloved Senator Joe Robinson, introduced the same bill.

SMALL BUSINESS GETS BEHIND ROBINSON-PATMAN ANTI-PRICE-DISCRIMINATION BILL

Small-business institutions all over the country saw in this bill an opportunity to translate sound economic principle into regulatory law in a way that might achieve for the business world a broad stride toward the American ideal of equality of opportunity. This could be done, the sponsors of the bill and its small-business adherents were positive, without denying to the public the benefit of those differences in individual business efficiencies and economies which must always be given recognition and which always underlie any sound conception of the "ideal of equality of opportunity." That viewpoint was always predominant in discussions of the bill by its proponents before committees of the House and Senate and on the floor of the House.

In the days when the Robinson-Patman bill was under discussion, a great deal was said about the cutthroat pricing techniques used by the big against the little to drive the smaller institutions out of business and take over their markets. This was competition of the tooth-and-claw variety. This is the sort of competition that pseudo-exponents of free enterprise always espouse. The Robinson-Patman Act admittedly, even by its opponents, has eradicated many of the evils in our market places. It is true that one of the important aims of the proponents of this act was to protect the weak against the strong, particularly with respect to the use of oppressive buying and selling tactics. This act was designed not only to protect the weak against the strong but in a measure to protect the strong against the stronger units in trade and commerce. It affords protection, and that was the aim, through all distribution channels. It was a measure essentially designed to build and conserve rather than to tear down and despoil. Although in its infancy, as we measure the 14 years since President Roosevelt signed the act, I believe it has become a robust infant and that time has shown it to be a law which brings order out of chaos and a measure of tranquillity into the lives and businesses of those who desire to compete fairly and to serve their customers generously.

These days, I might say by way of interpolation, those who destroy our antitrust laws dwell upon two words which have very little meaning. At least they have very little meaning as used. These words are hard competition and soft competition. Those who would destroy our antitrust laws say we must have hard competition. They believe in competition which allows a great corporation to go out and destroy its competitors.

Soft competition is, these exponents of hard competition say, the protection which the Robinson-Patman Act gives to free and independent enterprise in this country. This theory of competition is, to my mind, utterly ridiculous. The Robinson-Patman Act does, in fact, make it hard for the giant national chains and big business with predatory instincts to destroy their competitors. In that sense the Robinson-Patman Act is hard competition because it serves as a bulwark against the destruction of competition. In my opinion it is the essence of hard competition. Without this act, it is my belief that it would be pretty soft for the big fellows, and had this act not been in effect, the disappearance of small business would have been more nearly an actual accomplishment than it is at this time.

The very fact that the act has been under such close and constant attack during the past 2 years is proof that the predatory interests of our country are determined to scuttle it and return to their variety—the tooth-and-claw variety, the destroy-your-competitor variety—of soft competition.

SMALL BUSINESS, CONGRESS, AND THE PRESIDENT

It is not necessary at this time to relate in detail all of the actions of the Committees on the Judiciary in the House and the Senate, nor to dwell on the amendments and the compromises which took place in the consideration of the bill by the Congress. It is of interest, however, to remind the House of the small-business support which the Robinson-Patman bill accumulated while it was under consideration in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

In the closing period of debate and action on the Robinson-Patman bill, the small-business proponents of the bill conceived the idea of calling a general meeting of small-business men in Washington from all over the United States. This enterprise proved to be a dramatic episode—one long remembered by all who participated in the meeting which was held in Constitution Hall on March 4, 1936.

It was a new independence day and was heralded throughout the length and breadth of the land as independence day for independents. This meeting brought together more than 2,000 representative small-business men from all sections of the country. These small-business men called on their Senators and Representatives in support of the bill as they had a right to do. They petitioned their Senators and Representatives to support the anti-price-discrimination bill, and I might add they were genuinely serious and objective in their support. They were constituents from back home—home-town merchants, home-town manufacturers, home-town businessmen. They were the same home-town representative citizens who elected the Eighty-first Congress and who for more than 2 years have been appealing to Congress to preserve the Robinson-Patman Act to preserve the Anti-Price-Discrimination Act and not destroy it.

But, to return to the account of the meeting in Constitution Hall, where there 2,000 independent businessmen met on March 4, 1936, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was in the White House. By invitation, the late Senator Robinson addressed these 2,000 fine, independent businessmen, and by invitation I also had the honor and the privilege of addressing that meeting.

This meeting, like most gatherings in the public interest, was not without its detractors. The independent businessmen at the meeting were photographed by the press and these photographs were circulated in many newspapers, and many members of the free press hailed it as a great day for independent business in the United States. But opponents of the Robinson-Patman bill, as represented by the predatory chains and their cohorts, described the meeting in derogatory terms and tried to undermine public opinion as to the purpose and the sincerity of the businessmen who were gathered together in that meeting.

Out of this meeting came a delegation of the proponents of the anti-price-discrimination bill with instructions to request President Roosevelt's favorable consideration of the bill. Three of the several members of that delegation so appointed are still active, vigorously so, in support of the Robinson-Patman Act and of our antitrust laws generally.

They are still dedicated to the proposition of equality of opportunity in our business world. These three men, each prominent in his field of endeavor, were Dr. John W. Dargavel, executive secretary of the National Association of Retail Druggists; Col. R. H. Rowe, vice president and secretary of the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association; and Mr. George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business. This delegation, endowed with the faith of the businessmen in attendance at Constitution Hall said that if and when the Robinson-Patman bill became law, they would feel that they had arrived at a new start in their business lives; that protection would have been set up against the vicious, secret pricing policies of the predatory interests in the production and distribution field—pricing policies which were extended to so few and denied to so many.

With this buoyant spirit the delegates met with the late President Roosevelt on March 5, 1936, at 11:45 a. m. I am happy that it came my way to sponsor this fine delegation and to arrange for its reception by the President. It was a meeting in which the President showed a clear understanding of the issues involved. The President was sympathetic toward his audience and recounted being called upon for help, while Governor of the State of New York, with respect to price-discrimination techniques and certain vicious practices utilized by some of the larger distributing institutions of that State. The best proof of the late President Roosevelt's agreement with the objectives sought by the sponsors of the anti-price-discrimination bill is that he signed it 14 years ago today. Significantly, the President signed the bill 1 day after the final adoption of the conference report by the Senate, on June 18, 1936. The House had previously adopted the conference report, on June 15, 1936. It is well to recall at this point that the House passed the bill by a vote of 290 to 16, while the Senate passed it without even bothering to call the roll.

BENEFITS OF THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

Testimony as to the benefits which small business has received since the enactment of the anti-price-discrimination law is voluminous. Most manufacturers and distributors at all levels testify to the beneficial results which have been obtained under this act. Colonel Rowe, of the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, recently said:

> The benefits of the Robinson-Patman Act to small business in the food-and-grocery field have been immense. After its passage, all sorts of schemes were tried to evade its provisions, but these provisions have been consistently sustained by the Federal Trade Commission and the courts. There are still some sporadic cases where new schemes of evasion are attempted, but those sooner or later are stepped on by the Federal Trade Commission.
>
> There is now a general pattern of compliance with the Robinson-Patman Act by the food industry. Many of the food manufacturers who originally opposed the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act now favor it. It gives them protection against the coercion of the mass purchaser for discriminatory prices and other unfair concessions.
>
> Under the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act as originally passed, the independent wholesale and retail grocers have room to live and breathe and compete on fairly equal terms with mass distribution organizations.
>
> The efficient wholesale grocer and the efficient retail grocer working together as a team can and do equal or excel in many cases any other form of distribution, in price and other consumer satisfactions.
>
> Without the Robinson-Patman Act they could not do so. No matter how great their efficiency, they could not overcome the effect of price discriminations against them at the very start of the competitive race.

Dr. Dargavel has told me on a number of occasions that, had the Robinson-Patman Act not become law, he "seriously questioned whether the more than 30,000 independent retail druggists comprising his association could have successfully fought the inroads of the national chain operators in the drug field. The mass purchasing power of the chains, which was the big stick held over the heads of manufacturers to obtain preferential discounts, allowances, and rebates, more often than not meant cutthroat pricing at the retail level," he said, adding, "it has been my experience that, once independent druggists are eliminated in any area dominated by chain stores, prices to consumers automatically become higher. Once the chains gain dominance in any section of a city or town, the consumer is the loser. National chain stores do not and will not perform the essential and personal services which are a part of the tradition of the neighborhood independent retail druggist. I have said many, many times that only by keeping the Robinson-Patman Act intact and only by vigorous enforcement of that act can the independent survive, whether he be manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or in whatever line of business he may be engaged."

Mr. Burger, of the National Federation of Independent Business, recently commented:

> The action of independent business as represented at Constitution Hall 14 years ago, plus the action of the President of the United States, and the constructive action of the late Senator Robinson and of Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN in instituting this legislation have been the lifeblood and the way of keeping open the door of the free-enterprise system and, more important, independents being maintained both at the production and distribution level.
>
> I have watched the operation of the law for 14 solid years, and all in industry well know the fundamentals of the law and its objectives. They know what can be done and can't be done; it doesn't take any Philadelphia lawyer to define what the law means, and it will be a sorry day for the future of the free-enterprise system and independent business if there is any juggling or amending of this important legislation which is a renewed birthright for independent business of this Nation.
>
> Let me conclude by saying that after 14 years' close study of the Robinson-Patman Act I am convinced there is nothing wrong with the law. No amendments are needed—clarification, etc.—but what is needed is for the Congress to insist that the law be enforced without fear or favor and the administrating agency, the Federal Trade Commission, be supplied with the necessary funds by the Congress so that the job of enforcing this law can be 100-percent perfect.
>
> Big-business men are well aware of the importance of this law, and many of them shiver at night wondering what will happen to them if they are found in violation of the law.
>
> One industry in which I have been greatly interested is the rubber-tire industry. The enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act in that industry is the sole protection of the independent tire dealer. The monopolistic interests in the rubber-tire industry I predict may be found, sometime in the near future, attempting to eliminate distributors and dealers who are attempting to bring about enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act, because it is my belief that such monopolistic interests do not favor fair, competitive conditions in the industry.

I have quoted these three gentlemen at this point because of their close association with the passage of the act and because they were among those present at the White House to plead for President Roosevelt's support of the anti-price-discrimination bill. As I have said, these gentlemen are still active and have recently been engaged in one of the bitterest legislative struggles in my memory to save the act for which they fought so hard when under consideration in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT

The Robinson-Patman Act, in point of years, is fairly young in the antitrust field. It always requires an appreciable amount of time to test out the effect and worth of any law however well it may have seemed to be understood during the period of its enactment. The Federal Trade Commission, which has been charged with the duty and responsibility of enforcing this law, has brought a number of actions which have been upheld by the courts.

TRIPLE-DAMAGE ACTIONS A STRONG WEAPON OF ENFORCEMENT

The usefulness of the Robinson-Patman Act to victims of discriminatory price practices is greatly enhanced by the provision—section 4 of the Clayton Act—enabling them to sue for triple damages, plus cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. Moreover, a final judgment or decree in a criminal or equity suit brought by the United States is, with some exceptions, prima facie evidence in a triple-damage action brought by a victim of price discriminations forbidden by the Robinson-Patman Act. This makes it somewhat easier for the victim to prove his triple-damage suit in those cases where the United States has already successfully prosecuted an action against the wrongdoer.

As pointed out in the progress report—first session of the present Select Committee on Small Business, of which I have the honor to be chairman, the treble-damage action has the virtue of treating antitrust violations as economic offenses, which is what many large corporate wrongdoers prefer to call their unlawful acts. In doing so, it does not seek to brand offenders as criminals or to send them to jail. However, it does provide an economic penalty of sufficient measure to deter wrongdoers.

Moreover, the treble-damage action invites the victim himself to initiate proceedings by giving him an economic and financial incentive for doing so. In a sense, the penalty is self-enforcing. It does not require the decision of any Government official to set in motion the wheels of justice. The victim sets them in motion himself by commencing the treble-damage action.

The treble-damage action seeks to make the victim whole for the damages done to him, and in effect attempts to compel the wrongdoer to surrender illegally-acquired profits.

This is an altogether democratic procedure, and it is an altogether just procedure.

Not only is the victim entitled to treble damages, but to the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. Attorney's fees and cost of litigation are no small item in fighting some large chain outfit engaged in violating the Robinson-Patman Act. It is altogether salutary, therefore, that, in addition to damages, the victim be entitled to the cost of suit, including attorney's fees.

The treble-damage provisions are such that they afford a protection to an increasing number of persons in all lines of business. Sales Management magazine for May 20 told of the success of a salesman in an action of this sort. I quote from Sales Management:

COURTS

A salesman can sue his company under the Robinson-Patman Act and get triple damages. There's been a recent award by the Chicago District Court.

The salesman worked on commission as the distributor of Max Factor Hollywood cosmetics. He sold both to chains and to independents.

The company cut prices to the chains, in part taking the reduction from his commissions, which were based on dollar volume. The salesman claimed damage on two counts:

1. The direct loss of commissions.

2. The discrimination in favor of the chains reduced his sales to independents.

The court agreed on both counts. In handing down the decision, the judge said that the Robinson-Patman Act is broad so that anybody who is hurt can bring suit.

There is general agreement among most analysts that the Robinson-Patman Act is a necessary and increasingly important part of our antitrust legislation and policy. Of course, because of its value to small and independent businesses attempts are frequently made to reduce its effectiveness, both in the field of enforcement and in the field of legislation. The predatory interests are finding more and more that it pays not to run afoul of the provisions of the act. The enforcement of this act will be immeasurably strengthened by the President's veto last Friday of the O'Mahoney basing-point bill.

An article in Sales Management, February 15, 1950, was entitled "What Ever Became of Mr. Robinson and Mr. Patman?" The title itself was inconsiderate since we all are regretfully aware that the beloved Senator and majority leader from Arkansas passed away many years ago. It is my good fortune, for which I am thankful, that I can stand in the well of this House and commemorate the fourteenth anniversary of the signing of the Robinson-Patman Act and point out to some degree the benefits which small and independent business has derived from the passage of the act. Another who has gone before us but who should be remembered is the late Senator Mills Logan of Kentucky, who performed valiant service in securing the passage of the act. I am sure that both Senator Robinson and Senator Logan are with us today in spirit. The principles of fair play incorporated in the Anti-Price-Discrimination Act were their principles—the principles of the Golden Rule.

Of course the title of the article to which I refer did not take into consideration the fact that Congressmen and Senators have nothing to do with the enforcement of the laws which they enact. I shall not take the time of this House to dwell on the charge of the author of the article, Mr. James C. Cumming, vice president of John A. Cairns & Co., Inc., a New York advertising house, but the whole tenor of the article was to the effect that the Robinson-Patman Act was not being obeyed; in fact, that in many instances it was being flagrantly violated. Mr. Cumming implied that the Robinson-Patman Act was a "dead letter" insofar as the antitrust laws were concerned. Admittedly, there are a number of undetected violations of this Act as well as of other acts on the statute books.

As I stated earlier, in point of years, the Robinson-Patman Act is in its infancy, and the agency which is charged with the enforcement of this Act as well as other parts of the Clayton Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act has been unable to keep up with all violations. In this sense Congress has a responsibility, because appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission have been constantly under fire, and it has not for years had what I believe to be sufficient appropriated dollars to carry out all phases of its work.

However, in comparison with law-enforcement records generally, the Robinson-Patman Act has a very respectable record of enforcement. Since its enactment decisions have appeared in 26 out of the 62 volumes of Federal Supplement and in 26 out of the 80 volumes of Federal Reporter, second, which report decisions of our Federal district and circuit courts of appeals. Five major decisions of the United States Supreme Court have been devoted to it, in four of which that Court sustained its enforcement. In the fifth, the Court pointed the way to a different form of proceeding in which judgment for triple damages in the amount of $180,000 plus fees and costs for the violation involved was later obtained in the court below. Even in the State courts, in 10 instances arising in Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Florida, Illinois, and Washington, have dealt with its violations as furnishing grounds for defense against other suits brought by the violator.

Let us look at some of these decisions and, preliminary thereto, at the different modes of enforcement authorized for the act. Because of your interest, I should like to read you comment on and extracts from each decision. However, there are so many and my time is short. I shall ask unanimous consent to include them in the RECORD at this point. Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent to include at this point extracts from and comment on a number of cases brought under the Robinson-Patman Act as well as portions of the Clayton Act.

The Robinson-Patman Act in its principal provisions is an amendment to section 2 of the Clayton Act, and accordingly succeeds to the enforcement sanctions authorized for that act. Four such channels of enforcement are provided by law:

1. Proceedings by the Federal Trade Commisison leading to an order to cease and desist from the practices held in violation of the act, enforceable by decree of a United States Circuit Court of Appeals (Clayton Act, sec. 11).

2. Suits in equity to enjoin violations of the act, brought by the United States attorneys under direction of the Attorney General, in United States district courts (Clayton Act, sec. 15).

3. Suits in equity to enjoin violations of the act, brought also in United States district courts by private persons and concerns threatened with loss or damage from such violations (Clayton Act, sec. 16).

4. And as I have noted previously triple damage suits, brought also in United States district courts by private persons and concerns, for damages to their business or property by reason of violations of the act, in which case the law directs that they be awarded three times the damages actually sustained, plus court costs and attorneys' fees (Clayton Act, sec. 4).

TRIPLE-DAMAGE SUITS

These triple-damage suits have constituted the bulk of the suits under the act in the district courts. Among the more notable of these are the following:

Russellville Canning Co. v. American Can Co. (United States district court, Arkansas, 1949 (87 F. Supp. 484)), in which Judge Miller assessed actual damages at $125,000, warranting a judgment for $375,000 plus costs and attorneys' fees.

Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. (United States district courts, Florida, 1949 (87 F. Supp. 985)), in which Judge Parker found actual damages at $60,000, basing a judgment for $180,000 plus costs and fees.

These two cases involved three varieties of discrimination:

1. Quantity discounts of 1 to 4 percent on annual purchases of cans aggregating $500,000 to $7,000,000, and 5 percent on annual aggregates over $7,000,000. Less than 2 percent of American's customers could qualify for either of the discounts, and but two or three, out of its total of two to three thousand customers, for the 5-percent discount.

2. The use of freight equalization on certain points to favor shipments to some of plaintiff's competitors.

3. The grant of a runway allowance to one of plaintiff's competitors, based on a runway connection that happened to exist between one of American's plants and one of the competitor's plants, but which American could not grant on equal terms to plaintiff and its other customers.

In these two cases the courts also emphasized that the mere difficulty of determining the precise amount of damages in such a case does not prevent their determination by reasonable estimate, that where a seller has charged a higher price to one customer than to one or more of his competitors for like goods, and this difference cannot be justified as by underlying differences in cost, this in itself shows that the discrimination has had an adverse effect upon competition and has been injurious to the business of the customer charged the higher price, and establishes his actual damages in at least the amount of this discrimination. Where in addition it has caused him to suffer loss of business or injury to his competitive position or good will, the court and jury may consider as evidence such things as a comparison of the levels of his business and profits before and after the discrimination, and the rate of growth or decline of his own business as compared with that of those favored by the discrimination, and on that basis reach an estimate of what in precise amount his damages have been.

It is also noteworthy that American Can Co. is an old offender against section 2 of the Clayton Act, even before its amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act. In Ladoga Canning Co. v. American Can Co. (44 F. (2d) 763, cert. denied 282 U. S. 899), it suffered judgment against it for a total of $105,000, including a $15,000 attorneys' fee, for similar discriminations. In George Can Camp & Sons Co. v. American Can Co. (278 U. S. 245), the Supreme Court held that similar violations had there laid it liable to injunction. Still another decision appears against it in a triple damage suit by Gibson Canning Co. (in 1 F. Supp. 242). With judgments against it aggregating nearly half a million dollars, in three suits alone, and with these judgments increasing rather than decreasing in size since the Robinson-Patman Act, it would seem opportune for this concern to awaken to the conclusion that the act is not a dead letter.

In Elizabeth Arden Sales Corporation v. Gus Blass Co. ((C. C. A. 8, 1945) 150 F. (2d) 988), the latter concern recovered triple damages against Arden at the rate of $10 a week for 101 weeks, total $3,030, plus fees and costs, based on the fact that, in violation of both sections 2 (d) and 2 (e) of the Clayton Act (added by the Robinson-Patman Act), over that period of time, Arden had paid only half the weekly salary of a personal demonstrator for its products in plaintiff's store, whereas it had paid the full salary of such a demonstrator in another store competing with plaintiff's in the same city.

In Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power Co. v. Fitch et al. ((district court, Kentucky, 1941) 37 F. Supp. 728; (1946) 63 F. Supp. 989; affirmed 136 F. (2d) 12), the court found actual damages of $58,788.01, and awarded judgment for triple damages in the amount of $176,364.03 to the power company, against Nashville Coal Co., based on brokerage allowances which the coal company has secretly paid Fitch personally on coal purchased by him in behalf of the power company, of which he was at the time president, even though he had kept the allowances for himself and had not turned them over to the power company.

In American Cooperative Serum Association v. Anchor Serum Co. ((district court, Illinois, 1941) 38 F. Supp. 313; affirmed with modification, 153 F. (2d) 907), the court found actual damages of $4,439.31 and awarded triple damages of $13,347.93, for volume discounts below its published schedule granted by Anchor on hog-cholera-serum sales to its county farm bureau customers which enabled them to sell to their customers at 65 cents per cubic centimeter, as against plaintiff company's price of 75 cents per cubic centimeter to the same customers. The schedules were published under marketing agreements with the Department of Agriculture under the Anti-Hog-Cholera-Serum Act of 1935, but the decision was on the ground, not that discounts violated that act but that they were in volation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Other triple-damage suits for violations of this act, with decisions in procedural stages, so far favorable to the plaintiff, include:

Midland Oil Co. v. Sinclair Refining Co. ((district court, Illinois, 1941) 41 F. Supp. 436), in which the refining company is charged with discriminatory prices in sales of its gas and oil to a customer who is also a customer of the Midland company. The court refused to dismiss the suit on defendant's motion, holding that defendant was in interstate commerce even though plaintiff was not, and that plaintiff might therefore have relief against defendant's injuries done in that commerce.

Louisiana Farmers Protective Union v. Great A. & P. Tea Co. ((from U. S. district court, Iowa) (C. C. A. 8, 1942) 131 F. (2d)), a suit for triple damages aggregating over $8,000,000 plus fees and costs, for discriminatory and other practices in restraint of trade in the purchase and distribution of strawberries grown by the union's members. The lower court had dismissed the suit, without leave to amend; but the circuit court of appeals held that the complaint stated the essential elements of a good cause of action, and plaintiffs must be given opportunity to perfect it and substantiate it by evidence.

Barnes Coal Corporation v. Retail Coal Merchants' Association (from United States district court, Virginia, 43 F. Supp. 309; C. C. A. 5, 128 F. (2d) 645), a triple-damage suit for violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, which the district court had dismissed as barred by the Virginia statute of limitations. The appellate court held that the lower court had used the wrong statute and that the action was still good, sending it back for further proceedings.

Atlanta Brick Co. v. O'Neal ((United States district court, Texas, 1942) 44 F. Supp. 39), for triple damages for price discriminations in the sale of brick. The court denied defendant's motion to dismiss, thus holding the action good upon the facts alleged.

Weinberg v. Sinclair Refining Co. ((United States district court, northwest, 1942) 48 F. Supp. 203), for price discriminations in the sale of gas and oil. Here, too, the court denied the defendant's motion to dismiss.

Stewart-Warner Corporation v. Staley ((United States district court, Pennsylvania, 1941) 42 F. Supp. 140), in which Stewart-Warner brought suit in equity against a debtor in reorganization, to which Staley, as trustee for the debtor (Universal Lubricating Systems, Inc.) filed a counterclaim for damages in excess of $2,000,000, charging in his third count that plaintiff had discriminated in price between purchasers of lubricating equipment, injuring and preventing defendant's competition in the sale of such equipment to General Motors and other auto dealers, as well as to various farm, industrial, and aeroplane machinery manufacturers, compelling defendant to abandon a trade with them that had lasted through 1934–37. The court denied plaintiff's motion to dismiss the counter claim, holding that it stated a good cause of action under the antitrust laws.

ENFORCEMENT THROUGH THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Court decisions on review of orders of the Federal Trade Commission for the enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act appear in the circuit courts of appeals, with reviews by the Supreme Court of the United States. Among them we find:

Biddle Purchasing Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 2, 1938) 96 F. (2d) 687, cert. denied, 305 U. S. 634), sustaining the Commission's order against Biddle's collection of brokerage from selling manufacturers on its purchases for its subscribing grocery stores. Biddle was an independent corporation, unaffiliated with any of the buyers or sellers concerned, but sold its services to the stores for which it bought at subscription rates of $25–$50 per month, and passed back to them the brokerage which it received from the sellers pro rata to the buyer's purchasers. The court held it was acting on behalf of its buyer subscribers, and was therefore forbidden by the act to receive brokerage from the sellers.

The Commission moved to enforce this order further in a case of the same name (117 F. (2d) 29 (1941)) by application to the court for citation in contempt based on alleged violations of the order since the court had affirmed it. The court granted a motion for a bill of particulars.

Oliver Bros. v. F. C. C. ((C. C. A. 4, 1939) 102 F. (2d) 763), condemning brokerage collected under conditions similar to those in the Biddle case on purchases for wholesalers of auto, electric, radio, mill, machine, plumbing, steam, and hardware supplies scattered over the United States. Here, too, Oliver Bros. was an independent house, the purchasing wholesalers subscribed for its services at $25 per month up, and it passed back its brokerage collections to them proportional to their purchases.

Great A. & P. Tea Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 3, 1939) 106 F. (2d) 667; cert. denied 308 U. S. 625). As part of the history of this case, A. & P., the Nation's largest grocery chain, with some 14,800 retail stores, was organized in six geographic divisions, each with a purchasing director, and in numerous subunits for each division, each such unit with a warehouse and also having a purchasing director, also with several central purchasing offices in key cities, each with a purchasing agent. Prior to June 19, 1935—the date of the Robinson-Patman Act, all of these purchasing representatives in buying for A. & P.'s needs for any of its stores collected and received brokerage from the sellers the same as the latter paid to their own brokers on their sales to others, which these representatives paid over to A. & P.

With the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, however, A. & P. ordered these purchasing representatives to accept no more brokerage, but directed them instead to negotiate their buying on one of the following bases:

1. At net prices to reflect a reduction from the seller's price levels to others by the amount of the brokerage otherwise payable;

2. Subject to quantity discounts, payable monthly, in amounts equal to the brokerage otherwise payable; or, if sellers were unwilling to contract on either of the above bases; then

3. Sellers to set up escrow accounts for the amounts which would be so due, pending the determination of the legality of such payments under the Robinson-Patman Act.

The court affirmed the Commission's finding that all such allowances were illegal under section 2 (c) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

Webb Crawford Co. and Daniel Brokerage Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 5, 1940) 109 F. (2d) 268; cert. denied, 310 U. S. 638): Here, the three men who were at once the controlling stockholders, all the directors, and the principal officers of Webb Crawford Co., a wholesale grocery house, formed a partnership, the Daniel Brokerage Co., which acted as selling brokers for numerous manufacturers and sellers of grocery lines to numerous wholesale grocery houses including Webb Crawford Co., whose purchases through it represented but 10 percent of its total business. Although it concededly acted only for the seller in these transactions, the Commission held, and the courts affirmed, that the brokerage commissions which it collected from the sellers were illegal under the Robinson-Patman Act on sales which it made to Webb Crawford Co., since it was admittedly subject to the control of that house by reason of their common ownership.

Quality Bakers of America v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 1, 1940) 114 F. (2d) 393): Here Quality, the brokerage house, acted as purchasing agent for some 70 member wholesale bakeries, scattered through the Nation, for flour and other food materials from some 200 sellers of such lines, on which it collected brokerage from the latter, half of which it credited to the member buyers whose purchases had produced them, the other half to its general revenues from the net balance of which remaining it paid an 8 percent dividend to its members. Such brokerage was held forbidden, since Quality, regardless of any value of its services to the sellers, was in fact a purchasing agent for its members, and the act forbade it from thus attempting to serve two masters.

E. B. Muller v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 6, 1944) 142 F. (2d) 511): Here the two respondents (including Heinrick Franck Sons, Inc.), both of them controlled by David McMorran, had a monopoly of the granulated chicory production and trade in the United States, their only competitor for a small sector of the trade being R. E. Schanzer, Inc., of New Orleans. To crush this competition, Franck sold at 11 cents per hundredweight below cost in the New Orleans market for the 6 months ending June 30, 1936, and at cost or slightly below for the 8 months ending March 31, 1937, and elsewhere at higher prices sufficient to yield a general profit. Muller's business as a whole showed net losses of 18 cents per hundredweight in 1936, and 8 cents per hundredweight in 1937, such losses showing up as less outside the New Orleans market where Schanzer's competition was not confronted. Such pricing was held discrimination in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Why the Department of Justice has never proceeded against this Nation-wide and practically absolute monopoly, notorious since 1919, is one of the inscrutable questions of government. In that year David McMorran, then together with his father controlling owners of Muller, purchased the Franck stock at public auction from the Alien Property Custodian, after a hearing and order by the Federal Trade Commission which imposed as a condition that he dispose of his holdings in Muller and resign as its officer and director. His gesture to satisfy the condition consisted in selling the Muller holdings to his father, to his attorney, and to a personal friend, buying it all back by 1924, together with that which his father had independently owned in the name of his wife, but with money which he furnished her for that purpose. The wife is a mere figurehead in the management of the companies, and David McMorran dominates both companies. These facts are all recited in the above decision.

A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 7, 1944), 144 F. (2d) 221); F. T. C. v. Staley Mfg. Co. ((1945) 324 U. S. 746): Here the Circuit Court of Appeals set aside, but was reversed by the Supreme Court, which affirmed and ordered obeyed a Commission order against the so-called basing-point system of pricing used by the Staley Co. in its sales of glucose, holding that this system resulted in different prices to different competing purchasers located on different price basing points, bearing no relation to any differing costs involved in the sales compared, and that such pricing was accordingly contrary to the nondiscrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Corn Products Refining Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 7, 1944); 144 F. (2d) 211); affirmed by Supreme Court, 324 U. S. 726, affirming the Commission's order and holding illegal similar basing-point prices on glucose as used by this respondent. The Commission also found other discriminations in use:

1. In leaving old prices available to favored customers longer than to others after the announcement of a coming price advance.

2. In discounts granted to favored customers on byproducts, such as gluten feed and meal, starch and starch byproducts, which served to attract customers away from respondent's competitors.

3. In advertising done for Carter Candies ($750,000 worth in 1936–39), a large glucose and dextrose customer, but not offered proportionately for other customers, in violation of section 1 (c) of the act (sec. 2 (c) of the Clayton Act as so amended).

Samuel H. Moss v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 2, 1945) 148 F. (2d) 378 cert. denied 326 U. S. 734; rehearing denied 326 U. S. 809): These decisions affirmed a Commission order against discriminatory prices granted to some of respondent's customers in the District of Columbia. Respondent showed only that it charged prices low enough "to get the business," but showed no supporting differences in cost. The Commission and courts held that its burden was to show that, if doing it to meet competition, it charged a price only low enough to meet competing prices, but no lower.

After the Supreme Court's decision, the Circuit Court of Appeals further denied a motion by respondent to modify the Commission's order. (155 F. (2d) 1016 (1946)).

Modern Marketing Service v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A 7, 1945), 149 F. (2d) 970): This, like the Webb Crawford case, was a proceeding against brokerage allowances by the sellers to a brokerage concern formed by personnel identified with the buyers, who received the proceeds of its brokerage collections in the form of advertising allowances, trade-mark leases, etc. It embraced as respondents:

As selling concerns which paid the brokerage: Diamond Match Co., Morton Salt Co., Quaker Oats Co., Ralston Purina Co., Wesson Oil and Snowdrift Sales Co., and Procter & Gamble Distributing Co., and as buying concerns sharing in the benefits of the brokerage payments: S. M. Flickinger Co., Juillard Cockcroft Corp., Laurans Bros., West Coast Grocery Co., H. G. Wooten Grocery Co., Nash Finch Co.

The above buying concerns were also the stockholders owning Red and White Corp., through which, prior to the Robinson-Patman Act, they had made their purchases, and which, in the guise of broker, had collected commissions from the sellers on such purchases and paid its proceeds over to such buyers. After the act, about October 1, 1936, Modern Marketing Services was organized and manned by officers and employees of Red and White, and succeeded to its purchasing functions and brokerage collections thereon. Red and White leased to Modern Marketing its brands, trade marks, etc., for $30,000 a year, and Modern Marketing granted advertising allowances to the members concerns who purchased through it. Thus, out of a total of $320,658.56 in brokerage receipts in 1937, Modern Marketing, after defraying the expenses of its business, paid to Red and White its leases rental of $30,000, and to its stockholders, the above concerns for which it had rendered purchasing services, a total of $135,712.85.

The Court sustained the Commission's finding that Modern Marketing was agent acting in fact in behalf of the buyers, and that such brokerage allowances were accordingly in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act (Clayton Act, sec. 2 (c)).

F. T. C. v. Herzog ((C. C. A. 2, 1945) 150 F. (2d) 450): The Commission instituted this proceeding to enforce its order against Herzog's acceptance of 5 percent commissions from sellers on its purchases of fur garments for its own account and as agent for some 80 other purchasers; retailers and department stores located in several States. The order had been issued upon the Commission's complaint and respondent's answer thereto admitting the allegations, including their capacity as agents for the sellers. Respondent, in answer to the court action, now claims that since the order it has acted only as agent for the sellers, and that they are accordingly independent brokers not subject to the Robinson-Patman Act. The Court remanded the case to the Commission to take evidence on the questions of fact as to the nature and extent of the violations since the Commission's order.

Southgate Brokerage Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 4, 1945) 150 F. (2d) 607; cert. denied 326 U. S. 774): Here the brokerage company did a regular brokerage business for the sellers concerned, which the Commission's order did not disturb. But it also did a large independent distributing business, about 60 percent of its total, in the course of which it collected on much of its purchases from manufacturers and other sources of supply, brokerage commissions or allowances or discounts in lieu thereof. The Court sustained the Commission's finding that these were illegal under the Robinson-Patman Act.

Elizabeth Arden, Inc. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 2, 1946) 156 F. (2d) 132): Here the Court sustained the Commission's order against the grant of advertising allowances, in violation of section 2 (e) of the Clayton Act (added by the Robinson-Patman Act), in the form of personal demonstrators paid by Arden and stationed in the stores of some only of its customers to demonstrate its products and promote their sales to such stores' customers.

The Court here cited the decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, against the same concern, in Elizabeth Arden Sales Corp. v. Gus Blass Co. ((C. C. A. 8, 1945) 150 F. (2d) 988), in which the Gus Blass Co. had recovered triple damages based on the difference of $10 a week, for 101 weeks between the half-salary which Arden had paid for this concern's demonstrator, and the full salary which it had paid to a competitor in the same city. (Total damages, $3,030 plus fees and costs).

Atlas Portland Cement Co. v. F. T. C. (C. C. A. 7, 1946), Cement Institute v. F. T. C. (157 F. (2d) 533); reversed and the Commission's order affirmed in three hundred and thirty-three United States, page 683.

The order here sustained by the Supreme Court was against the use of the basing-point system of pricing in the cement trade, resulting, as in the Staley case above, in different prices by the same seller to different competing customers located in different basing-point territories, with no related differences in underlying costs, and amounting therefore to price discriminations in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Morton Salt Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 7, 1947) 162 F. (2d) 949); reversed and the Commission's order sustained (334 U. S. 37). Here the Supreme Court sustained a Commission order against price discriminations among the salt company's customers, resulting from the following price schedule:

To buyers in less than carload lots, $1.60 per case.

To buyers in carload lots, $1.50 per case, but to buyers of 5,000 cases or more per year, $1.40 per case, and to buyers of 50,0000 cases or more per year, $1.35 per case.

Only five customers had ever qualified in the 50,000 case bracket, while less than 1 percent of them in number fell in the less than carload lots bracket; but the company made no showing of corresponding underlying differences in cost. The Supreme Court sustained the Commission's finding of discrimination, contrary to the Robinson-Patman Act, as to all the discounts.

Standard Oil Co. v. F. T. C. ((C. C. A. 7, 1949), 173 F. (2d) 210). Here Standard Oil sold gas to four jobber-retailer dealers in the Detroit area at 1½ cents a gallon lower than to other retail dealers in that area, which enabled them to resell to their retail dealer customers at one-half to 1 cent per gallon less than their competing retailers had to pay. This was held in violation of the price-discrimination clause of the Robinson-Patman Act (sec. 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as so amended).

There is no provision for criminal proceedings to enforce the Clayton Act or its amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act. Section 3 of the latter act contains a criminal clause, but that section is not made an amendment to the Clayton Act, and consequently does not succeed to the other remedies afforded generally by the Clayton Act.

In the criminal proceeding under the Sherman Act, however, for conspiracy to restrain and monopolize portions of the food trade (U. S. v. N. Y. Great A. & P. Tea Co. ((United States district court, Illinois, 1946), 67 F. Supp. 626); ((C. C. A. 7, 1949) 173 F. (2d) 79), in which A. & P. and several of its subsidiaries, certain of its officers, also Carl Byoir, its public relations counsel, and Business Organization, Inc., a corporation through which Byoir conducted such public relations, were all convicted, defendants sought to introduce evidence of the measures they had taken in their alleged attempt to comply with the Robinson-Patman Act. This was rejected on the ground that it was not that act that they were charged with violating. Both the lower and the appellate court, on the other hand, describe interestingly and at length the complete A. & P. hierarchy of top holding and subsidiary companies, its operating divisions, warehouses, and their purchasing agencies, and the various and successive techniques used by A. & P. to get a lower price than its competitors:

1. Before the Robinson-Patman Act, by the insistence that sellers pay it from 1 percent to 5 percent brokerage on all its purchases from them, "except on brokerages received from meat packers, which was outlawed in 1934 (under the Packers and Stockyards Act; Trunz Pork Stores v. Wallace, ((CCA 2) 70 F. (2d) 688), this system continued until 1936, when it was made illegal by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A., sects. 13, 13 (a), 13 (b), 21 (a)). In 1935, gross revenue from this source amounted to $2,500,000."

2. After the Robinson-Patman act—

(a) By demanding reductions in price from suppliers by the amount of the brokerage formerly payable; outlawed by the Federal Trade Commission order sustained by the third C. C. A. in Great A. & P. Tea Co. v. F. T. C. (106 F. (2d) 667), above.

(b) Thereafter by direct buying, coupled with refusal to buy from anyone who sold through a broker, either to itself or to anyone else, in attempt to drive the brokers from the field, thus also cutting off the supply of smaller wholesalers and retailers who depended upon them for their supplies.

(c) By the creation of a wholly owned subsidiary, the Atlantic Commission Co., to buy its needs of fruit, vegetables, and produce, acting also as selling and buying broker for the rest of its trade, and receiving on all its dealings the usual brokers fees, which went to A. & P. as its sole owner. After abandoning the collection of commissions on its purchases for A. & P., this company also used the techniques above described as used by A. & P. in its purchases of other lines.

(d) Cash buying, with payment in advance, at point of shipment, and the usual lower rate, than term buying paid on delivery with risks to that point borne by the shipper, but in this case loaded by contract onto the cash seller instead.

(e) Purchases on a "sales arrival" basis, under which the shipment was made on consignment, and on its arrival A. & P. or its subsidiary ACCO wired the shipper its price offer on a take it or leave it basis but, in the case of perishable products, leaving the shipper in practical effect helpless to seek another buyer if dissatisfied with the price. This method was favoritely used in times of falling market, to place on the shipper the risk of price changes between shipment and arrival.

(f) Sales by ACCO to other jobbers at the carload price, but with agreement that it might buy back for A. & P. less than carlot portions at the same price rate, thus enabling A. & P. to get less than carload lots shipments at the carload price; also to sell to jobbers and collect the commission thereon, simultaneously rebuying less than carload lots portions thereof for A. & P., thus not only getting them at the lower carload rate, but also getting the equivalent of a commission rebate on them.

These and other such practices were described and reviewed by the court, not, however, as constituting violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, with which defendants were not charged, but as incidents and aids in its conspiracy and scheme to restrain trade and promote its attempt to acquire a monopoly on food products.

PRIVATE SUITS FOR INJUNCTION

There have been no successful private suits, and but few of them in any case, for injunction against violations of the Robinson-Patman Act amendments to the Clayton Act—perhaps for the convincing reason that ordinarily the same evidence that would sustain such a suit will also sustain a suit for triple damages, from which the plaintiff will stand to recover not only thrice the amount of his losses, but reimbursement also for his counsel fees in connection with the litigation, whereas in an injunction suit, even if successful, he will not.

GOVERNMENT SUITS FOR INJUNCTION

Neither have there been any Government suits for injunction against such violations. "Why," does not so readily appear. Responsibility for its enforcement is laid by the Clayton Act as heavily upon the Attorney General as upon the Federal Trade Commission. Where in section 11 it directs the Commission to launch its proceedings leading to a cease-and-desist order against violations found, in section 15 it directs in equally imperative terms that "it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations." In former years the Department of Justice frequently launched injunction proceedings based in whole or in part on the Clayton Act, and they still do so as to section 3 (restrictive leases or sales requiring the other party not to deal with a competitor of the first), section 7 (acquisition of stock control in a competitor to the injury of competition between the two), and section 8 (interlocking directorates in banks and trust companies exceeding defined limits in size) of the Clayton Act. This alone is sufficient answer to the dictum of Mr. Justice Jackson in Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. (330 U. S. 743) that—

"It [the Robinson-Patman Act] indicates, too, that the Federal Trade Commission is the appropriate tribunal to hear in the first instance the complicated issues growing out of grievances against a quantity discount practice of a seller"; also, "The economic effects on competition of such discounts are for the Federal Trade Commission to judge. Until the Commission has determined the question, courts are not given guidance as to what the public interest does require concerning the harm or benefit of these quantity discounts on the ultimate public interests sought to be protected by the act. It would be a far-reaching decision to outlaw all quantity discounts. Courts should not rush in where Congress feared to tread."

The obvious answer is that Congress in its tread did not fear to declare, in section 15 of the Clayton Act, that it should be the duty of the Attorney General to enforce the act by injunctive proceedings in equity, equally with the Federal Trade Commission by cease-and-desist orders under section 11, equally also with leave to private parties to recoup their injuries through triple-damage suits under section 4. The Robinson-Patman Act says nothing whatever about machinery for its enforcement. It merely amends section 2 of the Clayton Act, and succeeds to the provisions of law for the enforcement of that section as well as of the rest of the Clayton Act.

In every antitrust suit, civil or criminal, that the Government has brought since the enactment of the Sherman Act, the courts have had to deal with complex questions of the economic effect of the conspiracies and practices charged upon business and markets of competitors in the field, frequently upon a Nation-wide magnitude not approached by any of the Robinson-Patman Act cases above reviewed. Why Mr. Justice Jackson should so suddenly see the courts staggered by such a task in suits under that act is difficult to discern. Certainly they cannot escape it when a private party sues for his triple damages or for his private injunction for violations of the act. He is not obliged to go first to the Federal Trade Commission and get their determination upon the facts before he can bring his suit in court.

Yet the Government has brought no injunctive proceeding for the separate enforcement of section 2 of the Clayton Act since its amendment in 1936 by the Robinson-Patman Act. Why they have laid off since its provisions have been thus strengthened is yet to be explained.

That the Goverment has not in the past felt impelled to await determinations of the Federal Trade Commission before proceeding directly for the enforcement of provisions of the Clayton Act is apparent from the following long list of cases in which they have done so, either separately or in conjunction with charges of violation also of the Sherman Act.

GOVERNMENT SUITS FOR INJUNCTION AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF OTHER PORTIONS OF THE CLAYTON ACT

United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co. (filed October 18, 1915, United States district court, Missouri), based on tying clauses in defendants' leases of machinery, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act. Preliminary injunction granted (227 Fed. 507); defendants' motion to dismiss overruled (234 Fed. 127); final decision, making the injunction permanent (264 Fed. 138); affirmed by the Supreme Court (258 U. S. 451 (1922)).

U. S. v. A. Schader's Son, Inc. (filed August 31, 1922, United States district court, New York), based in part on price discriminations and tying sales in the sale of brass fittings used on automobile tires and tubes, in violation of sections 2 and 3, Clayton Act. Final injunction decree granting full relief entered July 14, 1923.

U. S. v. Lower Producers Co-operative Association of New York, Inc., et al. (filed December 15, 1925, United States district court, New York), charging violations of the Clayton Act as well as of the Sherman Act. Consent decree fully enjoining the practices complained of, entered January 15, 1926.

U. S. v. Ward Food Products Corporation, et al. (filed February 13, 1926, United States district court, New York), to enjoin violations of section 7, Clayton Act, through stock acquisitions in competing chain grocery stores and other companies engaged in the transportation of milk and other dairy products, ice cream, and similar frozen products. Consent decree entered March 4, 1926, granting full relief.

U. S. v. National Gum & Mica Co., et al. (filed February 18, 1927, United States district court, New York), based on acquisitions of stock in competing companies engaged in the manufacture of adhesive compounds (vegetable pastes and glues), in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered May 27, 1927, requiring defendant to dispose of its stock in General Adhesive Manufacturing Co., and granting further relief sought by the Government.

U. S. v. Gillette Safety Razor Co., et al. (filed August 4, 1927, United States district court, New York), alleging a combination and conspiracy with the United, Schulte, and Liggett chain-store systems in restraint of trade in safety razors and blades, also price discriminations in violation of section 2, Clayton Act. Consent decree against the practices complained of, entered the same day.

U. S. v. N. V. Amsterdamsche Chininefabriek et al. (filed March 29, 1928, United States district court, New York), alleging violations of the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act and the Wilson Tariff Act, in the importation and sale of Cinchona bark and quinine derivatives in the United States, including charges of price distrimination contrary to section 2 of the Clayton Act. Consent decree entered March 2, 1929.

U. S. v. General Outdoor Advertising Co. Inc. (filed July 23, 1928, United States district court, New York), based in part on an illegal interlocking directorate in violation of section 8, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered during the course of the trial, May 7, 1929.

U. S. v. Bates Valve Bag Corporation (filed January 4, 1929, United States district court, Delaware), charging the imposition of restrictions as to the use and purchase of valve bags upon the users of Bates filling machines, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act. Motion to quash service upon certain defendants denied (39 F. (2d) 162). Consent decree entered January 30, 1931, declaring the contracts null and void, and perpetually enjoining the further operation of the combination.

U. S. v. Fox Theatres Corporation, et al. (filed November 27, 1929, United States district court, New York), based on the acquisition by Fox Film Corp. of a controlling stock interest in Loew's, Inc., in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered April 15, and supplemental decree July 10, 1931, requiring divestment of this control of Loew's, Inc., and appointing disinterested trustees to administer the divestment. Trustees discharged March 11, 1935, on completion of the divestment.

U. S. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., et al. (filed November 27, 1929, United States district court, New York), charging Warner Bros.' acquisition of stock control of First National Pictures, Inc., in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Dismissed June 5, 1934, at instance of the Government.

U. S. v. International Business Machines Corporation (filed March 26, 1932, United States district court, New York), charging the use of tying agreements, in connection with the lease of defendants' tabulating machines, requiring lessees either to use the tabulating cards made by defendant, or to pay an increased rental for the machines, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act. Decision declaring the tying clauses illegal and void (13 F. Supp. 11), and decree perpetually enjoining further enforcement of the agreement entered December 25, 1935. Affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, April 27, 1936 (298 U. S. 131).

U. S. v. Republic Steel Corporation, et al. (filed February 7, 1935, United States district court, Ohio), against the proposed merger of Republic with McKinney Steel Corp. and its subsidiaries, as in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Merger declared legal (11 F. Supp. 117), and petition dismissed June 14, 1935.

U. S. v. Wm. G. Mather et al. (filed February 7, 1935, United States district court, Ohio), against Mather and six other persons, and 10 competing steel companies, charging interlocking directorships among various of the companies in violation of section 8, Clayton Act. Following resignation of most of the interlocking directors from their multiple boards, decree of dismissal entered without prejudice, December 2, 1935.

U. S. v. Columbia Gas and Electric Corporation (filed March 6, 1935, United States district court, Delaware), charging a conspiracy to restrain trade, under the Sherman Act, and the acquisition of the securities of Pan Handle Eastern Pipe Line Co., a utility competing in the production and sale of natural gas, in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered January 29, 1936, enjoining the combination and requiring divestiture of the securities, and appointing a trustee to effectuate the latter.

U. S. v. Hartford-Empire Co. (filed December 11, 1939, United States district court, Ohio) against 10 corporations manufacturing glassware or controlling patents on glassmaking machinery, also a trade association of glass manufacturers, and 101 individuals, charging agreements in restraint of trade, including unreasonable restrictions upon the production and distribution of machinery in violation of the Clayton Act. After trial, decision awarding comprehensive relief (46 F. Supp. 541). Affirmed with modifications by the Supreme Court (323 U. S. 386), with clarifying opinion (324 U. S. 570).

U. S. v. Masonite Corporation et al. (filed March 11, 1940), charging restraints under the Sherman Act, also the licensing of Masonite's patents for the making of hardboard upon licensees' agreement not to make competing forms of hardboard, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act. Dismissal below (40 F. Supp. 852) reversed in the Supreme Court, which held the agreements an illegal enlargement of the patent monopoly (316 U. S. 265); rehearing denied (316 U. S. 713). Final injunction decree entered October 21, 1942.

U. S. v. Johns-Manville Corporation et al. (filed June 24, 1940, United States district court, Illinois), charging the use of patent rights to force contractors to purchase mineral wool only from the defendants, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act, and trade agreements among the defendants in violation of the Sherman Act. Motion to dismiss denied, but the Government required to amend to state separately its claims under the Sherman and Clayton Acts (37 F. Supp. 291). Dismissal without prejudice entered on the Government's motion, August 15, 1944.

U. S. v. Pullman Co. (filed July 12, 1940, United States district court, Pennsylvania), charging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, and that the Pullman Co. required the railroads to deal exclusively with it, in violation of section 3, Clayton Act. Decision for the Government below (50 F. Supp. 123 (1943)); elaborated in 53 F. Supp. 908, 55 F. Supp. 985. Sale of the Pullman stock to the railroads approved (64 F. Supp. 108 (January 4, 1946)). On appeal by the Government to the Supreme Court, affirmed by an equally divided court (330 U. S. 806).

U. S. v. American Optical Co. (filed September 16, 1940 United States district court, New York), charging a conspiracy to fix prices under the Sherman Act, also the tying of sales of unpatented goods to their sales of patented goods, against section 3, Clayton Act. At request of the War and Navy Departments, the trial was adjourned, October 26, 1942, for the duration of the war.

U. S. v. American Petroleum Institute (filed September 30, 1940, United States district court, District of Columbia), against 22 major and 344 secondary oil companies, alleging a conspiracy under the Sherman Act, also violations of sections 2 and 3, Clayton Act. Forty-eight defendants dismissed, January 2, 1942, 70 on July 16, 1946, and 23 on July 19, 1946. No further report of proceedings.

U. S. v. General Motors Corporation (filed October 4, 1940, United States district court, Illinois), against General Motors and General Motors Acceptance Corp., alleging a conspiracy to coerce automobile dealers to finance car sales through the acceptance corporation, in illegal restraint of trade under section 1, Sherman Act, and practices in connection therewith in violation of sections 2, 3, and 7, Clayton Act. Case continued to allow defendants to take depositions from dealers throughout the United States.

U. S. v. General Electric Co. (filed January 27, 1941, United States district court, New Jersey), charging, under sections 1 and 2, Sherman Act, 3 of the Clayton Act, and 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act, a conspiracy and practices in aid thereof in restraint of trade in incandescent electric lamps, glass bulbs, tubing, cane, argon gas, and various equipment and electrical machinery in connection with the manufacture thereof.

On May 15, 1941, Hygrade Sylvania Corp. filed a cross-claim against defendants General Electric and Corning Glass Works for triple damages in the amount of $3,750,000.

Consent decrees entered against Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Corp., April 10, 1941. Trial against the remaining defendants began June 22, 1942, but adjourned for the war, February 10, 1943, at request of the Army and Navy Departments, resumed March 11, 1946. Meantime, consent decree entered against Corning Glass Works, March 7, 1946. Finally dismissed as to remaining defendants, October 31, 1946.

U. S. v. Alba Pharmaceutical Co., Inc. (filed September 5, 1941, United States district court, New York), charging a conspiracy with several German corporations to restrain trade in pharmaceutical products, and including practices in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered September 5, 1941.

U. S. v. Schering Corporation (filed December 17, 1941, United States district court, New Jersey), against four corporations and five of their officers, engaged in the manufacture and sale of hormones and hormone products, charging an illegal conspiracy under the Sherman Act, and in connection therewith practices in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered December 17, 1941.

U. S. v. Swiss Bank Corporation (filed December 17, 1941, United States district court, New Jersey), charging defendant with acquisition of stock control of an American corporation in behalf of a Swiss company which also was parent to another company, which was in competition with the acquired company, in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Consent decree entered December 17, 1941, requiring divestiture of the acquired company.

U. S. v. Whitehead Brothers Co. (filed January 7, 1942, United States district court, New York), charging a conspiracy in restraint of trade in bentonite (an unpatented product of natural clay used in the foundry industry), in violation of the Sherman Act, effectuated partly through restrictive patent licenses relating to its use in mixture with foundry sand, so as to require licesees to purchase all their bentonite from the defendants, in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act. Consent decree entered January 7, 1942.

U. S. v. Associated Press (filed August 8, 1942, United States district court, New York), against Associated Press, 18-member newspaper owners, its 18 directors, and all the remaining members of Associated Press as a class, charging its bylaws as amounting to an agreement for the exclusion of competitors from its news service, illegal under the Sherman Act, also its acquisition of all the stock of a news-picture service corporation, as in violation of section 7, Clayton Act. Decision for the Government under the Sherman Act, and for Associated Press under the Clayton Act, rendered October 6, 1943 (52 F. Supp 362); affirmed by the Supreme Court (326 U. S. 1).

U. S. v. Parker Rust Proof Co. (filed February 1, 1943, United States district court, Michigan), charging a conspiracy in restraint and monopoly of trade in chemical rust-proofing and priming materials, illegal under the Sherman Act, and in connection therewith tying clauses in its patent licensing agreements requiring its purchasers not to use or deal in like products of other manufacturers, in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act. Decision after trial, denying relief except to declare illegal defendant's agreement with American Chemical Paint Co. and enjoining enforcement of the patent rights secured thereby (61 F. Supp. 805).

U. S. v. Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. (filed May 23, 1945, United States district court, Ohio), against 9 manufacturers, 16 of their officers, and a trade association, for conspiracy to restrain and monopolize the production and sale of flat glass, illegal under the Sherman Act, and in connection therewith practices in violation of sections 2, 3, and 7 of the Clayton Act. Final decree against Corning Glass Works entered August 22, 1946. Still pending as to remaining defendants.

U. S. v. International Salt Co. (filed July 26, 1945, United States district court, New York), charging the use of restrictive patent lease agreements requiring lessees to purchase their salt from defendant or relinquish the patented devices. Government's motion for summary judgment granted November 21, 1946.

U. S. v. Consolidated Car Heating Co. (filed December 27, 1945, United States district court, New York), charging violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act, through defendant's use of restrictive patent license agreements for the use of its patented electric casing machine (used in making dentures from metal alloys), requiring licensees to purchase also from defendant exclusively all their requirements of various unpatented dental equipment and supplies. At last report, set for trial March 14, 1947.

U. S. v. Owens-Illinois Glass Co. (filed April 17, 1946, United States district court, California), under the Sherman Act and section 3, Clayton Act, charging the use of tie-in clauses in leases of defendant's vacuum closing machinery (used principally in packing coffee in glass containers), of which it manufactures 75 percent of the Nation's total supply, requiring lessees also to use only the glass containers and closures manufactured by defendant. Consent decree entered September 18, 1946.

U. S. v. Linde Air Products Co. (filed May 2, 1946, United States district court, Illinois), under the Sherman Act and section 3, Clayton Act, charging illegal tie-in clauses for the use of collateral products in licensing use of defendant's arc welding process.

U. S. v. White Cap Co. (filed May 14, 1946, United States district court, Illinois), under the Sherman Act and section 3, Clayton Act, charging the illegal leasing of container-sealing machinery only on condition that lessee food packers use only vacuum caps of its manufacture, of which it furnishes 85 percent of the supply used in packing vegetables, fruits, coffee, jams, and other food products. Pending.

U. S. v. Patent Button Co. (filed July 29, 1946, United States district court, Michigan), under the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act, charging that defendant, in leasing its automatic fastening machinery, requires lessors also to use only buttons and fasteners of defendant's supply. Pending.

Similar tie-in clauses were charged in U. S. v. Scovill Mfg. Co. (filed July 29, 1946, United States district court, Connecticut); U. S. v. Standard Register Co. (filed July 30, 1946, United States district court, District of Columbia); U. S. v. American Can Co. (filed August 27, 1946, United States district court, California); U. S. v. Continental Can Co. (filed August 27, 1946, United States district court, California); U. S. v. Magnaflux Corp. (filed December 11, 1946, United States district court, California); U. S. v. Bendix Home Appliances, Inc. (filed December 13, 1946, United States district court, New York); U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. and Standard Stations, Inc. (filed January 2, 1947, United States district court, California).

FUTILITY OF REMEDIES OUTSIDE THE LAW

Mr. Speaker, referring again to the Sales Management article, which concludes "that the Robinson-Patman Act as it stands today is as unenforceable as the Volstead Act," Mr. Cumming then poses the question whether the allowances, and so forth, against which it is directed are in fact good business practice and answers it with "a definite and unqualified No."

And in explaining this answer, Mr. Cumming unconsciously reviews and demonstrates the whole reason and rationale for the enactment of this law. They are vicious business practices, but the seller, unsupported by the prohibitions of law, is powerless to resist the demand for them by his mass-buyer customers.

"Once you enter into a cooperative agreement," says Mr. Cumming, "you are at the mercy of your retailers. You can rave and rant and swear when you get the tear sheets with the bills attached, but you'll pay them. You'll decide, finally, that it's cheaper to pay them than to lose the account. But you'll wish that you could get your advertising back in your own hands and under your own control."

"What's more, you will get it back there unless competition forces you to continue your cooperative deals."

And he asks, "How, then, can this bad practice be cleared up once and for all so that you won't be forced to do something you don't want to do? There's no use saying, 'There ought to be a law.' There already is a law, and that certainly has not solved the problem."

In other words, Mr. Cumming has no quarrel with the numerous cases, above reviewed, in which this law has been successfully enforced against the specific violations involved. He only wishes that every violation might be caught and dealt with accordingly, which differs not a whit from man's perennial dream as to the enforcement of every law that he thinks is a good thing.

He apparently despairs of this, however, and proceeds to some suggestions for clearing up this evil from the inside. "Newspapers can help," he says, but then admits that that would not go far, for the obvious reason that newspapers, like buyers and sellers, in the absence of legal restrictions, shape their policies and regulations in the pattern that they find most profitable. They, too, have their big customers whose accounts they cannot afford to lose. And he finally reaches the naive conclusion:

"Actually, however, the only final solution of the problem is for both retailers and manufacturers to wake up and realize that it's plain, downright good business for both to keep their own advertising standing firmly on its own feet. No matter what the horse-race boys may tell you, it's a basic business truth that you don't get something for nothing."

In other words, the only real cure for evil is for wrongdoers to wake up and realize that wrongdoing does not pay. Yes, if they only would. But who but a child reaching for the moon has any hope that they are likely to do so within the reach of living vision?

Nor is it a basic truth that you don't get something for nothing in the realm of preferential discounts forced from the seller by his mass-buying customers. Wrongdoing does pay, so long as there is no superior power to arrest its devastations against the weak. This Mr. Cumming in fact discerns when he alludes to the fact that the recipient of the advertising allowance so often falls short when it comes to rendering the advertising services for which the seller has ostensibly paid him. And this is reflected in the court's recital of A. & P. practices, in its decision on the criminal conviction of that company and its affiliates (U. S. v. N. Y. Great A. & P. Tea Co. (67 F. Supp. 626); affirmed 173 F. (2d) 79, reviewed above).

A. & P. always avoided binding themselves to anything specific in return for the allowances and discounts which they wrung from the sellers. As to quantity discounts, they "were reluctant to and seldom did bind themselves to buy specific quantities (district court's opinion, p. 646). By the language of its discount form, A. & P. agreed only to buy "a large quantity of merchandise," and in view of such purchases of these "large quantities," the manufacturer agreed to allow the stated discount. And in 1939, its counsel advised that the statement that a discount was given because of "large quantities" was "definitely misleading."

Likewise, as to advertising allowances, A. & P. avoided binding itself to do any specific kind or quantity of advertising in return for the allowance agreed upon. As to its standard agreement clause for advertising allowances, the court remarks:

"Obviously this permitted indefinite flexible performance, and, from the record, the contract was phrased thus loosely intentionally. The director of purchases of central warned 'we will advertise the product in keeping with the support we feel it is entitled to'. (A rule that would be satisfied by advertising it only as far as A. & P. thought would serve its own marketing advantage.) Mylott wrote August 6, 1941, 'we do not think (we) should be pinned down to any specific sized ad.' Earlier, April 6, 1927, Bofinger stated 'we never agree to any specific support until we have exhausted all possibilities of effecting a deal otherwise.' Gundrey, in October 1940, said 'our agreements are drawn broadly, with no specific performance required but some general support is a legal requisite to justify acceptance of the allowances. * * * if you see the minimum is given, everything should be satisfied'" (Opinion, pp. 649–50).

And this little they gave, mark, only to satisfy what they deemed to be the requirements of the Robinson-Patman Act, not to avoid violating Mr. Cumming's imagined law of nature that "you don't get something for nothing." As to that little, at least, apparently A. & P. didn't consider the act a dead letter. As to its dealings with the soap companies, it said, April 11, 1939:

"We have no obligations to the soap companies and no more cooperation should be given them than necessary in order to qualify for whatever allowances it is felt to be good business to earn" (opinion, p. 650).

The obvious explanation is, of course, that A. & P. wrung from its sellers whatever price and allowance concessions lay within the mass-buying might of its bargaining arm, and had no interest in the name given them or the pretense of return rendered for them except as it might appease the censorious eye of the law. The Court in the above case relates at length the tactics of power that A. & P. employed in pursuit of this end.

"As early as 1927," relates the Court, page 638, "at the request of John Hartford for an expression on pushing A. & P.'s own brands, the minutes recite that the time has arrived for making a 'demonstration in order to safeguard the arrangements which we now have with national manufacturers. * * * national manufacturers * * * will be anxious to keep their arrangements with us attractive so that we would not consider it necessary to go into their lines. * * * coffee would be the best commodity to start out with and White House milk next.

* * * * *

"In March 1927, Canada Dry had withdrawn from sales to A. & P. because of the latter's alleged price cuts in Indianapolis. John Hartford said that an organization with 15,000 stores was too big to be dictated to, and A. & P. decided to select one of its own competing products, advertise it extensively and price it attractively, to demonstrate that it could establish a competing product. Canada Dry returned to the A. & P. fold and it was announced in 1928 that A. & P.'s emphasis on its private brand had achieved its purpose (opinion, pp. 638–639).

* * * * *

"In February 1926 it was decided that more favorable relationship with the great millers could be established by purchasing A. & P.'s entire requirement of flour on an allowance basis through one source, 'thereby taking advantage of our buying power' (opinion, p. 639).

"The effect of correspondence with Ralston Purina Co. was that A. & P. would have to have a lower price for corn flakes or it would enter into manufacture of cereal itself. * * * Ralston finally offered an additional allowance of 10 cents per case or a total of 17½ cents and A. & P. did not build its plant.

* * * * *

"The Government suggests that concentration of purchases of salmon resulted in price preference to A. & P. of from 5 to 10 cents per case. Other instances of the alleged misuse of A. & P.'s buying power are cited but the ones discussed are illustrative" (opinion, p. 639).

FURTHER AIDS TO ENFORCEMENT

As to what additional measures would promote fuller enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act, certainly the resumption by the Department of Justice of its enforcement responsibilities through the direct prosecution of suits in equity for injunction, stands foremost.

1. It is more speedy in results than Federal Trade Commission procedure. It ends directly in a decree, violation of which is immediately punishable as contempt. Commission procedure ends only in a cease-and-desist order which, before it can be enforced, must be made the basis of a further court proceeding ending in a decree ordering obedience to it.

2. It is more flexible as to remedial measures available to enforce a decree against the violations involved. The Commission, at the conclusion of its proceeding, can only forbid their repetition. A court of equity, in an injunction decree, can incorporate whatever measures it deems necessary and appropriate to effectuate achievement of the objective of its decree. Thus, in the famous Packers Consent Decree of 1921, against Armour, Swift, Morris, Cudahy, and Wilson, the Nation's five largest meat packing concerns (sustained in Swift & Co. v. U. S. (276 U. S. 311); U. S. v. California Cooperative Canners (279 U. S. 553); and U. S. v. Swift & Co. (286 U. S. 106)), the Court did not stop merely with forbidding in terms the continuance of the methods and practices described in the complaint as those by which the defendants were restraining trade and promoting the acquisition of a monopoly in food products. It incorporated affirmative measures in aid of that end. It required them to dispose of their holdings in public stockyard companies and stockyard market newspapers, and appointed trustees to hold the stock until it should be disposed of. It ordered them to cease carrying grocery products in their meat route cars, and forbade them to engage at all in marketing or selling grocery products at wholesale or retail, or to operate any retail meat markets. It required Swift & Co. to dispose of its stock in Libby, McNeil & Libby, and appointed a trustee to hold that stock, too, until it could be disposed of. In Standard Oil Co. v. U. S. (221 U. S. 1), and U. S. v. American Tobacco Co. (221 U. S. 106), the Court not only declared illegal and ordered the discontinuance of the monopolies there found to exist; it ordered them dissolved and required specific plans to that end to be submitted to it for its scrutiny, amendment, and final approval.

3. Such proceedings, if concluded by decree against the defendants would, under section 5 of the Clayton Act, be available as prima facie evidence of such violations in triple-damage suits brought by injured private parties to recoup their own damages. This, however, does not apply where such suits are concluded by consent decrees before any evidence is taken. This has been done in innumerable antitrust cases in the past, and it is knowledge borne by experience in that field, that defendants in antitrust suits by the Government are always anxious to conclude it with a consent decree in order to put an end to the controversy before any evidence is brought to light that would be available to private litigants under the triple-damage provision.

Hence, it would seem also in aid of enforcement, to avoid concluding such suits by consent decrees. The argument of the Department of Justice in support of this practice is that such decrees afford the Government all and sometimes more relief than it could hope for after litigation. But this overlooks that the fundamental purpose of the antitrust laws is the preservation of wholesome competition, and that those who suffer most from violations are the injured competitors, whose only possibility of recovery is to be found in the triple-damage proceedings. Congress, in its express enactment of section 5 of the Clayton Act, showed its intention to help such people by placing at their disposal the aid of antitrust decrees at suit of Government, as prima facie evidence in their suits to recover their private losses. It does not serve this purpose of Congress to conclude Government suits by consent decrees. If the Government has the evidence upon which to prosecute successfully, it should prosecute to adversitive decree; if not, it is an injustice to the defendants to take a decree against them at all. The argument of saving the costs of the litigation to the Government is one that sacrifices the interests of those really injured.

Also, it is well settled that the object of Congress in authorizing triple-damage suits in addition to other procedure against violations of the antitrust laws was to afford this additional stimulus to the bringing of actions for their violation, and thus to promote their enforcement as a measure in the public interest. Again, it lends poor cooperation with that purpose for the Department of Justice to make such ready use of the consent decree for the conclusion of its antitrust litigation.

PROOF OF DAMAGES IN TRIPLE-DAMAGE SUITS

Recent decisions of the courts, however, if and when their significance becomes adequately known to the business world, and widely enough appreciated among the legal profession which serves them, have contributed markedly to facilitate the successful prosection of triple-damage suits by injured competitors.

Thus in Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. (330 U. S. 743), though holding that the can company's violations of the Robinson-Patman Act could not be raised in defense against its suit on a note given by its customer for cans purchased, Mr. Justice Jackson in his majority opinion declared point blank: "For despite petitioner's plaint on the difficulty of proving damages, it would establish its right to recover three times the discriminatory difference without proving more than the illegality of the prices. If the prices are illegally discriminatory, petitioner has been damaged, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, at least in the amount of that discrimination" (opinion, p. 757). This was given effect by the district court in Florida in the subsequent suit by Bruce's Juices for its triple damages, pursuant to the above suggestion of the Supreme Court, Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. (87 F. Supp. 985), in which the court found actual damages in the amount of $60,000, to be tripled to a judgment of $180,000 plus fees and costs; also by the district court in Arkansas in Russellville Canning Co. v. American Can Co. (87 F. Supp. 484), in which actual damages were found in the amount of $125,000, to be tripled in judgment to $375,000, plus fees and costs. (The opinion in this case, incidentally, was by Judge Miller, who, in the Congress that enacted the Robinson-Patman Act, was a member of the House Judiciary Committee that held hearings upon it, and later chairman of the House steering committee on the bill.)

The courts in the above two cases also held that damages in such cases may be found, not alone in the amount of the discrimination granted, but additionally for resulting injury to plaintiff's business and property due to loss of business, loss of competitive position, and injury to its good will. Answering the objection that such damages are not allowable because impossible of accurate computation—impossible of proof, for example, that other causes did not also contribute to such loss of business, etc., and in what amount—the court cited decisions of the Supreme Court to the contrary in Story Parchment Paper Co. v. Patterson Parchment Paper Co. (282 U. S. 558); and in Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures (327 U. S. 251).

In the latter case, the Court cited its earlier decisions in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co. (273 U. S. 359); also in the Story case, above, and said:

"There, as here, the suits were for damages caused by restraints imposed by defendants, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, on the operation of the business of the complainant in each case. In the one case, the defendant, in an effort to extend its monopoly, refused to sell to the plaintiff goods which had regularly been a part of his stock in trade. In the other, the defendants, competing sellers, engaged in destructive price competition with the plaintiff in execution of an unlawful conspiracy. In the first case, the plaintiff sought to establish his damage by comparing his profits before and after the unlawful interference with his business. In the other, the plaintiff sought to show his damage by proof of the difference between the amounts actually realized from his business after the conspiracy became effective, and what, but for the conspiracy, would have been realized by it from sales at reasonable prices, the evidence of which was the amount by which his current prices were higher before the conspiracy than after, and by the extent to which the value of plaintiff's business property had declined after the conspiracy had begun to operate."

And the Court continued:

"In each case we held that the evidence sustained verdicts for the plaintiffs, and that in the absence of more precise proof, the jury could conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs. In this we but followed a well-settled principle. See Hetzel v. B. & O. R. R. Co. (169 U. S. 26, 33, 39). The tortious acts had in each case precluded ascertainment of the amount of damages more precisely, by comparison of profits, prices and values as affected by the conspiracy, with what they would have been in its absence under freely competitive conditions. Nevertheless, we held that the jury could return a verdict for the plaintiffs, even though damages could not be measured with the exactness which would otherwise have been possible."

The Court added this note of caution, though inapplicable to the case before it:

"In such a case, even where the defendant by his own wrong has prevented a more precise computation, the jury may not render a verdict based on speculation or guesswork. But the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly. In such circumstances juries are allowed to act on probable and inferential as well as upon direct and positive proof (Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co. supra (282 U. S. 561–564); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., supra (273 U. S. 377–379)). Any other rule would enable the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim. It would be an inducement to make wrongdoing so effective and complete in every case as to preclude any recovery, by rendering the measure of damages uncertain. Failure to apply it would mean that the more grievous the wrong done, the less likelihood there would be of a recovery.

"The most elementary conceptions of justice and public policy require that the wrongdoer shall bear the risk of the uncertainty which his own wrong has created. See Package Closure Corp. v. Sealright Co. (C. C. A. (2d) 141 F. (2d) 972, 979). That principle is an ancient one (Amory v. Delamirie (1 Strange 505; 93 Eng. Reprint 664)), and is not restricted to proof of damage in antitrust suits, although their character is such as frequently to call for its application" (opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Stone, pp. 263–265).

These pronouncements were also given effect in the Bruce's Juices and Russellville Canning Co. cases, cited above.

LEGISLATION TO NULLIFY CEMENT DECISION AND THE ROBINSON-PATMAN AND FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACTS

Mr. Speaker, during the 2 years since the Supreme Court decision in the Cement case—April 26, 1948—the large business interests of our country have spent enormous sums of money for propaganda and for lobbyists in efforts to nullify the cement decision and to alarm businessmen who honestly conduct their businesses within the framework of the antitrust laws and court decisions thereon. We all know that Congress has been beseiged to pass legislation which would perpetuate artificial pricing systems which many of us have believed would be destructive to our antitrust laws, to small business, and to the consuming public.

Many bona fide small-business organizations fought this legislation unceasingly. In this fight they were joined by the Nation-wide membership of farm, labor, and consumer organizations. It is not my intention to recount here the arguments pro and con which have continued unremittingly since the cement decision. It is sufficient to say at this time that the proponents in Congress of the O'Mahoney bill, S. 1008, and of its predecessors were motivated by sincere considerations and that the opponents were equally convinced of the damaging character of this legislation to our antitrust laws. What was intended to clarify by way of legislation would up in confusion and obscurity.

May I say that the President of the United States, in returning without his approval the bill S. 1008, has rendered a great service to trade and commerce in our country and distinguished service in the public interest. May I also commend and praise the organizations which fought this measure to the final hour. These organizations represent a cross section of the finest in our American way of life and exercised their right to petition Congress and the President for what they believed was right. These organizations fought for small business, and they fought for the consumer interests. I desire at this point to name each of them and each of their representatives who gave so generously of time and talent to preserve and strengthen our economy and free enterprise in the United States:

Wallace J. Campbell, Cooperative League of the United States.

George Nelson, International Association of Machinists.

Rankin P. Peck and Robert E. Freer, former Chairman of FTC, National Congress of Petroleum Retailers.

Angus McDonald, National Farmers Union.

J. T. Sanders, National Grange.

C. M. McMillan, National Candy Wholesalers Association.

Donald Montgomery, Congress of Industrial Organizations.

George H. Frates and John W. Dargavel, National Association of Retail Druggists.

George J. Burger, National Federation of Independent Business.

Watson Rogers, National Food Brokers Association.

R. H. Rowe and Harold O. Smith, Jr., United States Wholesale Grocers' Association.

W. W. Marsh, National Association of Independent Tire Dealers.

The State representatives of the National Association of Retail Grocers in particular rendered valiant service. The National Association of Retail Grocers adopted a resolution against S. 1008, and the association's general counsel, Tyre Taylor, visited the White House with our group named above, asking the President to veto the bill.

These men and their organizations, I am sincerely convinced, contributed greatly to the saving of the Robinson-Patman Act as well as the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S VETO OF S. 1008, THE SO-CALLED BASING-POINT BILL

President Truman, by his veto of S. 1008, has rendered small and independent business a great favor because he has saved the Robinson-Patman Act. President Roosevelt signed the act into law, and his distinguished successor, President Truman, has rendered equal service by vetoing the bill which would have destroyed the law.

It is gratifying also, in reading the President's veto of S. 1008, to find reaffirmation of his interest and deep concern as to the position of small business in our economy. At the beginning of his message, the President said, in disposing of the clarification issue:

> It is obviously desirable for laws to be as clear as possible. After careful study, however, I am convinced that the bill would not achieve the clarification which is desired.

This was followed further in the message by language which bespoke his faith in our antitrust laws. The President said:

> When further amendments of the antitrust laws are needed to meet new problems, they should be enacted in a form which clearly preserves the basic purpose of these laws—the protection of fair competition and the prevention of monopoly.

The President said, at another point in his message:

> Opponents of the bill in both Houses of Congress have said that these same sections (secs. 2 and 3) would have the practical effect of nullifying the Robinson-Patman Act, with its protections against ruthless price discrimination and that in the light of these conflicting interpretations, many years of complex litigation would be required to give the provisions of S. 1008 clear and specific content.

With respect to the Robinson-Patman Act, the President reiterated:

> The Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, prohibits a number of specific, injurious trade practices. In particular, this law protects small enterprises against ruthless price discrimination.

The President, by this statement, emphasized the basic premise and the basic principle of the Robinson-Patman Act, and he has done so at a time when this act, which has protected small business for 14 years, is under its greatest attack by giant industrial price-fixers who realize that the Robinson-Patman Act stands in the way of complete domination of the market place at every phase of distribution.

Further on in his message, the President says:

> S. 1008 might jeopardize the Commission's ability to stop unfair discriminations.

That is a true statement and has been one of the greatest fears of small business and of consumers. If the Federal Trade Commission is shorn of its power to enforce the antitrust laws, these laws have no meaning and no effect. When that happens, if it ever does, free competition and free enterprise will have received a death blow.

There are many other pertinent and forceful phrases in the President's message which are worth the time and trouble for all of us to study and reflect upon. I desire, however, to make one last reference to the message and to quote one more passage which to me sums up the dangers which were inherent in this bill. The President said, forcefully:

> On the basis of the present evidence * * * I am convinced that no * * * change is necessary, and that in attempting to affirm what is already true, the bill goes further and would hamper, instead of help, the preservation of fair competition.

On this occasion, it is gratifying to place in the RECORD congratulatory telegrams and letters from many of the representatives of the organizations who have been in this fight. Some of these telegrams, as you will see, are in appreciation of the President's action in vetoing S. 1008, and others in commemoration of the fourteenth anniversary of the Robinson-Patman Act. Following these messages, I also desire to insert the full text of the Robinson-Patman Act.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17, 1950.
The Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:
Our heartiest appreciation to you for your leadership in the successful fight against S. 1008.

A. J. HAYES,
President, International Association of Machinists.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1950.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:
Tire dealers all over America thank you for your support against S. 1008.

L. S. SANDERS,
President, National Independent Tire Dealers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1950.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building:
Congratulations on your leadership opposing S. 1008 and leading to veto. Please accept appreciation of our members.

C. M. MCMILLAN,
Executive Secretary, National Candy Wholesalers Association, Inc.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN:
Congratulations on your great victory. The Farmers' Union is deeply appreciative of your efforts in combating monopoly. We feel that your fight against S. 1008 both on the floor of the House and at the White House and in the offices of Cabinet members and advisors to the President largely contributed to the veto.
Best personal regards.

ANGUS MCDONALD.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1950.
Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building:
Tie another pennant to your wonderful fight for nearly 2 decades to protect independent business of this Nation. You singlehanded took up the issue in the first instance opposing the basing point legislation and you are to be congratulated on a well-earned victory and it is my hope that independent business of this Nation will never forget the leader in their behalf. The Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN, again congratulations.

GEORGE J. BURGER,
Vice President in Charge, Washington Office, National Federation of Independent Business.

DETROIT, MICH., June 16, 1950.
Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building:
Congratulations on your great fight against S. 1008 becoming law. This may well be the foundation to turn the tide against complete monopolistic engulfment of our economy.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC.
RANKIN PECK, President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17, 1950.
Hon. WRIGHT A. PATMAN,
House of Representatives:
With deep and heartfelt gratitude the National Association of Retail Druggists compliments you for your courageous leadership and splendid fight re S. 1008.
Congratulations.

GEORGE H. FRATES,
Washington Representative, National Association Retail Druggists.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1950.
Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building:
Today is an eventful day, as it is the fourteenth anniversary of the signing of a law, the Robinson-Patman Act, which was a rebirth for the free-enterprise system and, more important, the protection of independent businesses of this Nation. It is my hope and prayer that the Congress will be insistent on the fullest enforcement of the act to the very limit, that there will be no weakening of the act and that the agency entrusted with the enforcement will really enforce the law. You are to be congratulated for the magnificent job you did in instituting this necessary legislation 14 years ago.

GEORGE J. BURGER,
Vice President in Charge, Washington Office, National Federation of Independent Business.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1950.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:
Our thanks to you and the Congress on this fourteenth anniversary of the Robinson-Patman Act for this shelter for small business.

L. S. SANDERS,
President, National Association of Independent Tire Dealers, Inc.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1950.
The Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives:
On this fourteenth anniversary of the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act we again send our congratulations to you for your sponsorship of this bill in the beginning and for your continued good work in upholding the provisions of this law. With very good wishes for your continued service to the American people in Congress for a long time to come.

WATSON ROGERS,
President, National Food Brokers' Association.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17, 1950.
Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives:
On the fourteenth anniversary of the Robinson-Patman Act the National Association of Retail Druggists sends this message to tell you of its deep appreciation for your valiant sponsorship of small business.

GEORGE H. FRATES,
Washington Representative.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC.,
Detroit, Mich., June 17, 1950.
The Honorable WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.
DEAR REPRESENTATIVE PATMAN: We note that Monday, June 19 is the fourteenth anniversary of the enactment into law of the Robinson-Patman Act.
On behalf of the service station operators of America we wish to congratulate you for your fight to keep this law on the books over this period of time.
With best personal wishes.
Sincerely yours,

RANKIN P. PECK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1950.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN,
New House Office Building:
Felicitations and congratulations to you on this, the fourteenth anniversary of the Robinson-Patman Act of which you were the original proponent. For your zeal and farseeing statesmanship in being instrumental in placing the Robinson-Patman Act on the statute books and for your courageous and unremitting opposition to S. 1008 which was instrumental in obtaining the President's veto of that bill—a veto that saved the Robinson-Patman Act from destructive hands.

UNITED STATES WHOLESALE GROCERS ASSOCIATION,
R. H. ROWE,
Vice President and Secretary.

DANVILLE, ILL., June 19, 1950.
Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN,
House Office Building:
Congratulations on the fourteenth birthday of the Robinson-Patman bill. Also the splendid work you did in securing the veto of Senate bill 1008. I have been told what a marvelous job you did. In appreciation and with best regards,

WILBUR R. ORR.

[Public—No. 692—74th Cong.]

H. R. 8442, an act to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 13) and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. title 15, sec. 13), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: Provided, however, That the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation and hearing of all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or immient deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

"(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

"(c) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

"(d) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

"(e) That it shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

"(f) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section."

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall affect rights of action arising or litigation pending, or orders of the Federal Trade Commission issued and in effect or pending on review, based on section 2 of said act of October 15, 1914, prior to the effective date of this amendatory act: Provided, That where, prior to the effective date of this amendatory act, the Federal Trade Commission has issued an order requiring any person to cease and desist from a violation of section 2 of said act to October 15, 1914, and such order is pending on review or is in effect, either as issued or as affirmed or modified by a court of competent jurisdiction, and the Commission shall have reason to believe that such person has committed, used or carried on, since the effective date of this amendatory act, or is committing, using or carrying on, any act, practice or method in violation of any provisions of said section 2 as amended by this act, it may reopen such original proceeding and may issue and serve upon such person its complaint, supplementary to the original complaint, stating its charges in that respect. Thereupon the same proceedings shall be had upon such supplementary complaint as provided in section 11 of said act of October 15, 1914. If upon such hearing the Commission shall be of the opinion that any act, practice, or method charged in said supplementary complaint has been committed, used, or carried on since the effective date of this amendatory act, or is being committed, used or carried on, in violation of said section 2 as amended by this act, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts and shall issue and serve upon such person its order modifying or amending its original order to include any additional violations of law so found. Thereafter the provisions of section 11 of said act of October 15, 1914, as to review and enforcement of orders of the Commission shall in all things apply to such modified or amended order. If upon review as provided in said section 11 the court shall set aside such modified or amended order, the original order shall not be affected thereby, but it shall be and remain in force and effect as fully and to the same extent as if such supplementary proceedings had not been taken.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to be a party to, or assist in, any transaction of sale, or contract to sell, which discriminates to his knowledge against competitors of the purchaser, in that, any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge is granted to the purchaser over and above any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service charge available at the time of such transaction to said competitors in respect to a sale of goods of like grade, quality, and quantity; to sell, or contract to sell, goods in any part of the United States at prices lower than those exacted by said person elsewhere in the United States for the purpose of destroying competition, or eliminating a competitor in such part of the United States; or, to sell, or contract to sell, goods at unreasonably low prices for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 4. Nothing in this act shall prevent a cooperative association from returning to its members, producers, or consumers the whole, or any part of, the net earnings or surplus resulting from its trading operations, in proportion to their purchases or sales from, to, or through the association.

Approved, June 19, 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRIMBLE). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

MAGIC FORMULAS IN AGRICULTURE

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, when I was a boy in a small New Hampshire town, when the automobile was in its infancy, the silent movies had only reached the larger cities, and radio and television were still undreamed of, we used to go to medicine shows. Between the acts of the old-fashioned drama and corny vaudeville, a loudly dressed gentleman with a glib tongue would come out in front of the curtain and tell us about his wonderful magic elixir which would cure everything from falling hair to chilblains, and which, through the kindness of his heart, was available to us for only 50 cents a bottle. How we used to fall for it! The hard-working farmers and townsfolk would reach down in their pockets and buy a sweetened and colored concoction which would do their ailments no good and actually result in harm, because it kept them from seeking the wise counsel of a real doctor or heeding their own common sense. This is not strange, however, because we are all prone to buy magic formulas that promise a quick and easy cure and save us from facing hard and disagreeable facts.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the Congress, I have been listening to farm plans for the last 4 years, and again and again I have recalled the medicine shows of my childhood. To be sure, we have the sensible, down-to-earth approach of Kline of the Farm Bureau, Goss of the National Grange, and many other practical farm leaders who have lived with and studied this problem all their lives. On the other hand, we have the magic formulas—the colored and sweetened concoctions of glib-tongued politicians who are more interested in capturing the farm vote than they are in the future stability of agriculture. All kinds of schemes, plans, and panaceas are offered us. It behooves us to consider them carefully. The farm problem is not only of interest to farmers, but it reaches into the kitchens and onto the dining tables of every family in the land, because it affects food and living costs. Our farm policy will be one of the hottest issues in the next political campaign and it ought to be.

The first thing that every citizen and every farmer must do is to stop looking at the colored medicine bottles and try to diagnose what ails us. We must face the facts and get the right cure, even though the treatment may not be as pleasant and palatable as the sweetened elixir.

Let us see what ails us. During World War I our agriculture expanded enormously and farmers prospered. Other nations were not producing, vast armies had to be fed, food was scarce, and prices were high. After the war, when other countries began to produce we could not use our own surpluses and our farm economy collapsed. We stood by and watched it collapse because we did not realize that 50 percent of our people are either farmers or dependent on farm economy, and we also failed to appreciate that the farmer cannot control his production as the industrialist controls his, and is helpless when prices begin to fall. The bankruptcy of our farmers was one of the factors that plunged us into the great depression. Finally, when it was nearly too late, we created the Commodity Credit Corporation and placed a price floor under farm products. We also indulged in various other experiments, including acreage control, paying farmers not to produce, and so on.

When World War II came we again had to support the allied world and feed vast armies from American farms. To stimulate production we raised our support prices on many necessary commodities to 90 percent of parity and even higher. Remembering the experience of 20 years before, we promised the farmer that if he would expand his plant and carry us through the crisis we would not leave him helpless after the war was over but would continue supports for 2 years at least, and then reduce them gradually. No one asserted or dreamed that we would keep up the wartime-price supports permanently. The war is now over and the 2-year period has long since ended. Accordingly, the Eightieth Congress provided for flexible price supports that would gradually reduce the Government subsidies but would still keep a price floor under farm products to protect the farmer from disaster.

Then the medicine men stepped in. They told the farmer he was being betrayed. They promised him that the income he had enjoyed through the war years would and could be continued. A majority of the farmers, at least those of the Middle West, swallowed their elixir and voted them into office. They repealed the Aiken bill of the Eightieth Congress and continued high, wartime price supports.

What is the result? We have vast surpluses. If you read a recent article in Life, you know something about the commodities that the Government has purchased and stored away.

We have sufficient wheat to bake 12 loaves of bread for every man, woman, and child in the world; sufficient corn to make all the cornstarch, corn sugar, corn syrup, and corn oil that the United States will use in the next 5 years; sufficient butter to bake a birthday cake for every child under 15 in the United States for the next 10 years; sufficient cotton to produce 54 dresses for every woman in the United States; sufficient prunes to give every Member of Congress a dish for breakfast until approximately September of the year 3239.

Congress has added $2,000,000,000 more to the billions that the Commodity Credit Corporation already had with which to buy more surpluses. Much of this surplus is spoiling while there are still hungry people in the world and even in our own country. Prices are kept high to the housewife. We have been sowing to the wind and we will reap the whirlwind.

Sooner or later these magic formulas spell certain disaster for the farmer. They are like an alcoholic stimulant that speeds up and exhilarates the system and then leaves it lagging and depressed, or like a crutch that is snatched away after one has learned to lean upon it. My own potato farmers and poultrymen in New Hampshire are realizing this during these recent days. The Government insisted on placing a high support price on potatoes and later on eggs. The result was inevitable. All over the country everybody who had a half acre of ground began raising potatoes or going into the poultry business. Surpluses increased. Now the subsidies paid potato growers and egg producers have aroused popular indignation and become a national scandal through no fault of the potato farmers or the poultrymen. Uncle Sam, so kind and benevolent awhile ago, now is snatching away this support, which will leave these producers much worse off than they would have been if they had never had it. What is true of these commodities will eventually happen in other commodities if we continue a high price support, which gives to the producer a period of unnatural prosperity and attracts others into the business. It earns for him the undeserved enmity of consumers and citizens everywhere and then he finally learns the bitter lesson that the Government giveth and the Government taketh away.

What are we going to do about all this? More magic formulas are being presented. Medicine Man Brannan has sold his formula to many, including the President. His scheme is pretty vague, but in general it calls for continuing to stimulate production, letting folks buy it for whatever it will bring, and paying the farmer his income from the Treasury. Of course, Mr. Brannan says he does not know how much this will cost, but everybody agrees the cost will be terrific. Let me remind you that it does not make much difference whether the housewife pays a high price for her butter and beef or gets it cheap and pays the balance to the tax collector. Furthermore, the Brannan plan contains 15 pages of penalties, fines, and imprisonments for farmers who fail to obey the orders of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Much has been said about the fines and penalties section. Is it not true that no one would be penalized under that provision except those who were guilty of fraud?

Mr. COTTON. Technically, that may be so in the case of imprisonments, but the fact remains that under the Brannan plan the farmer has to report to the Department on every step that he takes or intends to take, every acre he plants, and has to comply with the orders of his Government in all his operations. If he fails to report or makes a mistake in his report or fails to obey the orders of the Secretary he is penalized in his price support and in all of the benefits to which he is entitled by law. He most certainly is traveling a difficult and complex path which will require expert assistance to enable him to protect himself from Government prosecution.

A farmer would have to fill out a report as often as he changes his shirt. He could not plant an acre without the consent of some Federal bureaucrat. He would surrender all of his freedom to become a ward of the Government.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not true that that is required under existing laws?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Not to that extent.

Mr. COTTON. Not to that extent, nowhere near to that extent. The necessity of control travels hand in hand in exact proportion with the benefits ultimately received, and if the farmer gets his income direct from the Treasury as advocated by Mr. Brannan, the necessity of close controls, close reporting, much investigation, much prosecution, must follow as night follows the day.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The Commodity Credit Corporation is buying about three or four hundred millions worth of food a year, acquiring, transporting, storing, disposing of perishable commodities. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to get the Government out of that business by adopting the principle that is advocated by Secretary Brannan?

Mr. COTTON. I most certainly believe that we should get the Government out of that business. That is the import of my speech here to day. I will indicate in just a moment, if the gentleman will bear with me, how I suggest that we get out of that business; but it is not by resorting to the Brannan plan. We will never get out of it that way.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman stated that there were many different ways in which the housewife pays direct to the tax collector. I think he would like to add to that the high cost of administration, would he not?

Mr. COTTON. I certainly would and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Texas has said that the 15 pages of penalties in this bill all relate to fraud. The gentleman from New Hampshire now addressing us has had long experience with this form of legislation; does the gentleman remember any bill prior to this or since this, other than the one advanced by the Truman administration, which proposes that it is necessary to have 15 or 17 pages of penalties in order to keep the farmers of this country honest?

Mr. COTTON. No. We have never had a bill or proposal that carried such penalties. The reason is that never before have we had a plan offered that included such complete supervision of the farmer by his Government.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. The gentleman from New Hampshire indicated in his reply to the gentleman from Texas that he wanted to get the Government out of the farm business. Does the gentleman think we should take him out from one program operated by the Government only to dump him into such a fantastic scheme as the Brannan plan?

Mr. COTTON. The gentleman's question is well phrased. The answer is "No."

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Is it not true that the bill is replete with provisions by which the Secretary of Agriculture can change the rules of the game, but no provision is made for a change in the penalties. Is not that true?

Mr. COTTON. That is precisely true. It is also true he has been changing the rules of the game since he first proposed his plan, because the original bill has been replaced with new and different proposals every step of the legislative road we have traveled.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not true—I assure the gentleman it is true—that under the Brannan plan no one would be penalized except for fraud. I think the gentleman from New Hampshire will agree that if a farmer is guilty of fraud he should be penalized.

Mr. COTTON. The gentleman from New Hampshire will agree that anyone who is guilty of fraud should be penalized, but the gentleman from New Hampshire believes that the farmers of this country are fundamentally honest. The gentleman from New Hampshire during the years he has been practicing law has seen numerous instances of citizens being subjected to cost, to expense, to long litigation, to all kinds of misfortune in an attempt to prove to some snooper of the Government that they were guiltless of fraud. He does not want the farmer to spend the rest of his life proving that he is not deceiving his Government.

Mr. Speaker, we have other plans presented. There is much good in many of them. There are those who wish to take the supports away from grain and place them under livestock to encourage the feeding of grain to animals, thus reducing surpluses, improving the national diet, and conserving soil. There are those who favor a two-price system, under which a farmer gets his guaranteed price for American consumption but sells for use abroad at a lower price. There are those who find the solution in food stamps for low-income groups, more school-lunch programs, and new industrial lunch programs. There are those who want to give away our surpluses abroad as a part of our foreign-aid program. There are those who want an insurance plan under which the farmer pays in good years for protection when prices are down. There are those who believe that the solution lies in new industrial uses of farm products. Many of these suggestions have merit and may prove helpful. None of them, however, reaches the real root of the problem.

To find that real solution we must remember the lessons we have learned in two wars and one depression, face the facts, and deal with them with courage and common sense, even though it means some discomfort and sacrifice.

What have we learned?

Twenty years ago we learned that we cannot desert the farmer and leave him to face bankruptcy when prices decline and surpluses accumulate. Therefore, we know that we must continue to maintain a reasonable price floor under farm products.

In the years since we have learned that if we guarantee the farmer a profit we stimulate production, flood the market, and either the consumer, the farmer, or the taxpayer has to pay—usually all three of them. Experience has further taught us that control and regimentation travel hand in hand with supports and subsidies, and that the extent of that control is in exact proportion to the benefits conferred.

Very recent experience should teach us that when we attempt to guarantee a high income for the farmer, we array all the other segments of our population against him. The storm clouds are gathering, and the mutterings can already be heard. All over the Nation consumers, workers, businessmen are complaining against present price support. The farmers, representing 18 percent of our population, cannot afford to lose the good will of all the rest. In anger against our present policy, the consumers of the Nation are likely to rise and strip the farmer of all those just and reasonable safeguards that he has gained through years of struggle. Many farm organizations and leaders realize this danger and are seeking to avert it, but thus far they have been powerless against the vote hunters.

These are some of the reasons that compel me to differ somewhat from the majority of my colleagues on the Committee on Agriculture and other Members of the House on both sides of the aisle who are struggling to prevent or postpone the reduction of farm price support. I believe that in their concern for agriculture they are forgetting to look at our whole economy—that they see the trees rather than the forest—and I believe further that their policy in the end will be as destructive to the farmer as to the rest of the Nation.

The common-sense course seems obvious. It lies in a flexible price support which can be maintained high enough to protect the farmer from disaster and failure, but permits his profits to be determined by his own initiative and efficiency in producing. This plan is not a cure-all for every ailment nor a panacea for every pain. There is no such plan. It is, however, the nearest that Government can come to fulfilling its proper function for the benefit of the various segments of its people. It will not solve all the farmer's problems, but it will afford him reasonable protection and keep him free and unshackled to solve them for himself. At the same time it will not impose unjust hardships upon the consumer or the taxpayer.

The present scale of wartime price supports must be reduced. That is the medicine we must take. Everyone of us in his heart knows it. The Seventy-seventh Congress that provided wartime supports knew it, or it would not have written into the law that they should expire a reasonable time after the war. The Eightieth Congress knew it, or it would not have enacted the Hope-Aiken law providing for flexible supports to start after 1 year. The Eighty-first Congress knows it, or we would not have provided for flexible supports to start after 2 years. Why not take our medicine now, not next year or the year after? Why not tell the farmer the truth now—not after election?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to commend the gentleman from New Hampshire for this masterful address which he has given the House. It is one of the finest speeches I have heard since I have been in Congress. I know it takes courage for the gentleman to say those things. We all know they are true, just as the gentleman has said, and I think he has made a great contribution to our thinking on this subject.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CROOK. I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman's address. Some things I agree with very wholeheartedly. Now, I come from the great Hoosier Commonwealth of the State of Indiana, and I look back during the Hoover administration when that great State looked like the grapes of wrath hit it, and whether this be called snooperism or by some other name, I will have to frankly admit that under these conditions that may be condemned the farmer of this country has had more prosperity in the last 15, 16 and 17 years than he has ever had in the history of this country. And, I am for him. I am for everything that is for prosperity for the farmer, and if we have been too objective, because we are trying to help him, I do not know what in the world we can do for him.

Mr. COTTON. I will say to the gentleman, in the first place, that the farmer himself has some distinct ideas on that point, as have been expressed by many farm leaders. I agree with the gentleman that we should protect the farmer, and I have so indicated in what I have had to say, but I am suggesting that when, in our anxiety and our great solicitude for the farmer, we reach out too far and ask more for him, if you please, than he is asking for himself, we are likely to cause him to lose all of those benefits which have been justly granted to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Without assuming that such a thing will occur, I should like to submit this question to the gentleman, who is an authority on this subject. Assuming that the Congress of the United States would pass legislation which would bring the farmers to a point where they would organize themselves in such a manner as to impose collective-bargaining agreements upon the consumer of foods, fats, and fibers as the industrial worker and the industrial machine have brought collective-bargaining agreements on the consumers, thus putting the operators of farms and farm labor all in a position to actually charge and receive a price for their labor comparable to that in industry, under those conditions would it be necessary for the so-called price-support programs which the farmers now participate in?

Mr. COTTON. Well, I would suggest to the gentleman that probably no legislation which Congress could pass, and no combination of circumstances, would ever bring about a situation where the farm producers of the country, either would or could proceed in the manner that labor proceeds. That is not to criticize labor. The farmer has his farm. If he does not produce on it his farm deteriorates; the property becomes useless; his income ceases. He is compelled to produce, and compelled to sell his produce for whatever he can get, which is the fundamental reason why we should jealously preserve and maintain for him a reasonable price support.

The eventuality the gentleman from Michigan mentions for those reasons is beyond my ability to visualize. I cannot conceive that the farmer could organize and bargain collectively by reason of the difference between his production, his responsibility, and his problems, and those of other people who have no investment and who can indulge in collective bargaining and demand their price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, but may I say to the gentleman that 30 years ago I do not believe there were very many people in industry and I do not believe there were many consumers of manufactured products who at that moment could have conceived that a single individual labor leader today could reach up and pull the bell cord of production and stop the flow of national and social income here in the United States, as has happened in connection with steel and coal and transportation and automobiles, and so on down the line.

It is not a question of what we can conceive. We face the question, as the gentleman has well pointed out, where the farm people are now stigmatized in the mind of a city consumer because the city consumer feels that he is specifically taxed for the purpose of paying a subsidy on foodstuffs produced by the farmer, yet that same city consumer never thinks of the subsidy he has paid for manufactured goods under the provisions of the collective-bargaining agreements.

How long will the taxpayers of the country submit to being taxed specifically one billion, five billion, twelve billion dollars per year for the purpose of paying a subsidy, so-called, or for the purpose of putting a so-called floor under farm prices? That is the question we have to face in this country. It is before us this very moment. That is the reason for this discussion.

My second question is, If the farmers did so organize and if they did set such a price on the foods, fats, and fibers, what price does the gentleman think city consumers would probably today pay for foodstuffs as compared to the price they are now actually paying? Would it be much higher or would it be much lower, in his opinion; I say, if the farmers did so organize?

Mr. COTTON. If it were possible for the farmers to organize, and if it were possible for the farmers to exact from the consumer or through the middleman sufficient pay for the actual work and labor they perform, the consumer unquestionably would be paying, in my opinion, all that he pays today, and even more.

In my opinion, the farmers have had less consideration through the years than almost any other group in our economy. I desire that the farmer shall have every consideration that his Government can give him. I insist, however, that we are not doing him a kindness by maintaining an abnormally high support price. By so doing we encourage poor agriculture, give to the slothful and inefficient farmer aid to remain in business to compete with the farmer who is efficient in producing and who guards and preserves his soil, and create a surplus both of farm produce and popular ill will which in the end will militate against all our farmers, especially the good ones. That is why the farm organizations are almost unanimously against rigid, high price supports and for flexible supports and almost unanimously against the Brannan plan.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD in the form in which I have it here, in typewritten and printed form, my remarks showing a schedule prepared by the Library of Congress giving the profession or vocation of the 531 Members of the House and Senate, and also quoting a very brief press report which appeared in the Saginaw News of Saginaw, Mich.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE FOR ENFORCEMENT OF ACTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government has grown to such huge proportions in the past 20 years that I believe that it is necessary—now—for the Congress to establish a committee for the constant and continuing investigation of the activities of the administrative branch. Big government must be policed, if the rights and liberties of the citizens are to survive. Big government when not policed, can be as destructive to our economy as big monopolistic business or any other form of bigness when not policed. These are my sincere convictions. They are entirely nonpartisan and nonpolitical. I am therefore introducing a resolution for the appointment of a special committee to carry out this much-needed task. It might be known as the Committee for Enforcement of Acts of Congress.

There should be little objection to the text of the resolution, as it is substantially the same one as that submitted by the then Senator Truman on February 13, 1941, that resulted in the so-called Truman committee. There are a few minor changes such as an increase from five to seven members and an increase in the initial appropriation, both of which I feel to be justifiable.

Congress is charged with the task of legislating and writing the laws. The enactment of a law or a statute is a serious, deliberative chore that is conscientiously carried out by the Congress. Yet hardly a week passes, that every Congressman is not confronted by some instance of administrative action that is either a deliberate evasion, or a legalistic interpretation to void the specific statute or the intent of the Congress. To all this should be added inconsistencies in policies and instances of out-and-out malfeasance and misfeasance on the part of the employees of a government that has grown too big and is not under present conditions subject to proper supervision.

A short time ago I disclosed a deal with Communist Russia involving three Government departments, Agriculture, Defense, and State, whereby Government-owned cotton was bartered for soybeans through a Wall-Street-controlled exporter who acted as the middleman in the deal. There has been no official denial or justification, though according to my information it reeks with fraud and fantastic profits at the expense of the taxpayer. A spokesman for the Agriculture Department is quoted as saying that my report of the trading of cotton valued at $7,300,000 for soybeans worth only $4,300,000 was exaggerated because I had taken the value of American soybeans and the freight was cheaper from Manchuria to Japan than from this country. Historically, Manchurian soybeans have always been cheaper than our product and are shipped half way around the world. I am also sure that there is not such a great difference in freight. It should be noted that no details were given—no attempt to justify the dealing with the Communists. In the absence of further information, I retract nothing and assert that it still is a foul-smelling mess.

This however is not the only barter trade—it was merely the first one announced. There was a previous one, in which cotton was bartered to the George H. MacFadden & Bro. Co., the second largest cotton broker in the country, for chromite ore that they had somehow acquired. Agriculture then sold the chromite to the Munitions Board for the national stockpile. The details of this particular barter deal are unknown and it is probably just coincidence that the Government owned cotton, a cotton broker owned chrome, and that Russia is one of the world's principle producers of chrome. I am also informed that other barter deals are under consideration.

There are other phases of the operations of the Department of Agriculture that are worthy of passing attention. I would like to recall for the Members that on a legalistic interpretation Secretary Brannan ruled that the Commodity Credit Corporation could pay freight on surplus potatoes for use as cattle feed, but not to welfare agencies where they would be used for human consumption. Also, in the statute books is a clear provision authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to request a study by the Tariff Commission to determine if any imports are adversely affecting the producers of any agricultural commodity. If it is so found, the President is authorized and has the clear authority to set quotas and change tariff rates—in effect, to stop the imports. I am informed there has been but one instance in which Secretary Brannan has acted—tree nuts. Among the instances where he failed to take any action was the dumping of Canadian potatoes, which it is estimated cost the taxpayers at least $20,000,000. Despite huge surpluses and price-support commitments Secretary Brannan has taken no action to stop the imports of dried beans when we have over a years' supply on hand and a new crop less than 3 months away, nor of dried eggs from Communist China, while we are buying dried eggs under a price-support program and storing them in a cave in Kansas. Then in the instance of the price-support program for dairy products, the recommendations of the industry which were based on long-established trade practices were ignored. Under the new plan the Government now owns and has in storage over 90 percent of the country's current butter supply.

Members of the House have repeatedly over the past 10 weeks called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Customs to a provision of the Tariff Act of 1930 that clearly and specifically authorizes and directs them to bar the entry of products of slave or forced labor. It has also been pointed out that an Assistant Secretary of State, had testified before the UN that the State Department had evidence of forced labor in Communist Russia and in other Communist dominated countries. A demand was made that the imports from these countries be banned and the answer is that they are investigating. The State Department while not retracting the testimony of one of its officials takes the position that this country is not being hurt. The country may not be hurt seriously as yet—but it is taking a "pushing around" from the bureaucrats who decide which of the laws that the Congress passes they will enforce.

Recently the farmers in the Coachella Valley, Calif., became curious as to how the funds appropriated for their still uncompleted reclamation project were spent. They retained a firm of auditors who discovered that the Bureau of Reclamation of the Interior Department had made charges in excess of $400,000 that were not only completely unrelated to the project but were not provided for by the contract or in the appropriation. As these projects are self liquidating and the costs of the project is returned to the Government by the water users, we find a group of bureaucrats not only ignoring the mandate of the Appropriations Committee but actually taking it upon themselves to tax a group of citizens. The findings of the private auditors were subsequently confirmed by an investigation of the Appropriations Committee. If this is an example of what is happening on one small reclamation project—what might be disclosed on the larger projects?

Big government, it should be noted, has some strange ideas as to bigness in others—particularly business. I do not intend at this time to go into the philosophy or the merits of the antitrust laws. But there should be room for consistancy in their application. Several years ago the Department of Justice caused to be indicted the three largest retail food chains. The charges in principle were practically identical as to all three companies. One company, the A. & P., fought the case through the courts and was found guilty. The other two companies pleaded nolo contendere and paid their fines. The Department of Justice then filed suit to break up the A. & P. into seven companies, which action is now pending. No similar action has been started, or, so I am informed, contemplated in the instance of the two other chains.

Probably the outstanding example of the need for a continuing investigating committee as I have proposed, rests in watching the strange activities of the State Department and its junior partner, the Economic Cooperation Administration. Their free-trade activities have already caused serious damage in many fields with mounting unemployment, closed factories and mines. The situation over all is an alarming one, with the watch industry reduced to but two companies in the country; a crab cannery closed in the State of Washington; idle fishing boats on the east coast; lead mines closed in the West; copper and coal mines threatened with closings; flour mills closed or working but part time; hat and shoe industries beginning to feel the impact of cheap-labor competition; the fur-farming industry practically wiped out—and this all but a partial list. Practically every section of the country is feeling the effect.

The few examples that I have cited do not constitute a complete list, but were merely intended to show the widespread need for a committee to maintain a watch on the administrative branch of the Government. I do not believe that such a committee would be a needless or unnecessary overlapping with the already standing committee but rather would supplement and make easier their tasks. The Congress can legislate, but how can the executive branch and the bureaucats be compelled to enforce and carry out the laws enacted? Publicity will help. With authority granted by this resolution, I believe a better job of policing big Government may be achieved. The people are entitled to at least this additional protection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I want to commend the gentleman on making a suggestion that certainly appeals very much to me personally and that is long overdue. I believe that without any intent on the part of the administrative agencies they find themselves growing so rapidly and so far separated from us that it would be a very healthy and wholesome thing if the gentleman's recommended resolution were to be adopted and put into effect.

The gentleman referred to an incident in my district which, of course, naturally interests me personally. The gentleman is correct in his statements regarding that and I have no doubt that there are many similar instances.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. D'EWART. Is it not true that, under the Reorganization Act, it is the duty of the policy committees of the House to review and examine the efforts of the executive department to carry out the policies established by the policy committees of the Congress and the Congress?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my understanding. But let us take the Committee on Public Lands on which both the gentleman from Montana addressing the question to me and I serve; as the gentleman knows, that committee is constantly—and I am not complaining about this one very important specific committee matter in connection with the legislation being proposed and being acted upon—where in the world would that committee ever find any time to make surveys and studies as to what extent the Federal Government is carrying out the intent of that committee in proposals which it submits to the House?

Mr. D'EWART. I can agree with the gentleman from Michigan, but I believe that if we had on our committee a competent engineer and a competent accountant it would be a great help in following through policies we establish and see that they are carried out according to the intent of our committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is now referring to irrigation and reclamation projects. I agree with the gentleman 100 percent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I should like to say for the RECORD that I am pleased the gentleman has introduced this resolution, because certainly I believe it is time that we do something about many things that are going on in this Government of ours to which the gentleman has just referred. I should like to ask the gentleman this question, knowing full well that he has more knowledge of the monetary problems that confront America and the world today than any other Member of Congress: Does he not feel that there is great danger in the way our currencies are being debauched, that sooner or later if we continue this spending program it will not be long until we have such inflated currencies that almost anything that we do will be of no avail? Now what would the gentleman say about debauching the currency as we are today doing?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The deficit financing policy which has been followed for many years is the base of the phony so-called prosperity which we now think we have with us. That is, the great volume of dollars. Men will go around and say: "Look at that. I have more money in my pocket than ever before." But they overlook the fact that as a result of deficit financing those dollars buy less, so far as I know, than they would have at any previous time in the past 75 years. It is cheap money, it is false prosperity and will eventually destroy the savings of all the people of this country.

These excess dollars are based on credit or debt. They are not based on production—therefore they are phony. Why not issue trillions of dollars of debt and let everyone have a billion dollars each and really be dollar rich. Well, of course, that would be economic suicide with a vengance. But as it is now going, it is like creeping paralysis and for the moment feels so good everyone wants just a little bit more of the stimulation.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

GI FARM TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Speaker, a recent order of the Veterans' Administration has resulted in what I consider to be a great injustice to a number of vetrans who have been participating in the farm training program. You are all familiar with that program which provides subsistence to GI's while they are learning to be farmers.

At the outset of the program a large number of GI's throughout the country wanted to participate in the program and made their wishes known to the Veterans' Administration. They wanted to learn, in specific instances, how to be dairy farmers and poultry growers. They laid their plans before the Veterans' Administration and were informed that the term "farm" in the legislation would include dairy farming and poultry raising. They were encouraged to participate in the program.

Quite a number of GI's, on the strength of the advice they received from the Veterans' Administration, entered into contracts for the purchase of small plots of ground, made down payments, and obligated themselves to purchase the property over a period of time. They received subsistence payments pursuant to law. Then, after the lapse of as much as 2 years' time, they were informed by the Veterans' Administration, and without notice, that they would no longer receive subsistence payments. The Veterans' Administration had apparently redefined the meaning of the term "farm" to exclude dairy farming, poultry raising, and fur farming.

It is my opinion that this ruling is manifestly unfair to those GI's who have started to learn these particular types of farming with the approval of the Veterans' Administration. I have accordingly written to Mr. Carl Gray, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, requesting a reconsideration of the ruling. A copy of my letter follows:

JUNE 19, 1950.

Mr. CARL R. GRAY, Jr.,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,
Veterans' Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GRAY: I have received many complaints recently from veterans who will be cut off the on-farm training program as the result of the VA's R and P No. 10413 of May 5, 1950, defining a farm under Public Law 377. As a result of this definition all trainees engaged in poultry raising, dairying, mink farming, etc., will not receive subsistence after June 30.

Public Law 377 defines a farm as follows: "Such farm shall be of a size and character which (1) together with the group instruction part of the course, will occupy the full time of the veteran, (2) will permit instruction in all aspects of the management of a farm of the type for which the veteran is being trained, and (3) if the veteran intends to continue operating such farm at the close of his course, will assure him a satisfactory income under normal conditions."

Webster's Collegiate Dictionary defines a farm as "any tract devoted to agricultural purposes; hence a plot or tract of land devoted to the raising of domestic or other animals; as, a chicken farm." I fail to understand how the word "farm" could be construed, either in ordinary usage, or under the provisions of Public Law 377, to exclude veterans engaged in dairying or poultry raising.

Public Law 377 was approved on August 6, 1947, nearly 3 years ago. Many of these veteran trainees asked the VA to inspect a tract of land before they purchased it to determine if it would qualify for on-farm training. They were assured of a certain number of years training, running as high as 4 years. Relying on the promise of the VA, many of them assumed financial obligations and purchased small farms with the expectation that the VA would keep its promise. Now, with their subsistence cut off at the end of June by the wholly unexpected order of May 5, they face financial ruin and may lose all they have invested in work and cash during the last 2 or 3 years. Why did it take the VA nearly 3 years to come up with a narrow, legalistic definition of a "farm" and thus deprive these veterans of further on-farm training?

The VA's definition of a farm is particularly discriminatory against the veterans in my district because poultry raising and dairying are among the principal industries in that area. There are few large farms such as are found in eastern Washington or the Midwest. Therefore, there are few veteran farmers in this area if we accept your definition. If poultry raising and dairying are not farming, there are not enough on-farm trainees to make up a minimum class of 12 in most communities. Even those who are farmers by your definition will be deprived of further training because there won't be enough in most communities to make up a class.

With these facts in mind, I am certain you can see the injustice that is being done thousands of on-farm trainees throughout the Nation. I feel that the very least the VA can do is to permit the present on-farm trainees to complete the periods of time promised them when they started.

If the VA cannot or will not correct this injustice, it shall be my purpose to introduce legislation to carry out the plain intent of the Eightieth Congress in providing this farm training for veterans. This legislation will define the term "farm" in language which will not be subject to misinterpretation.

Very truly yours,

THOR C. TOLLEFSON,
Member of Congress.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARMERS

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, it amused me a while ago to listen to some of the Members who are so consumed with fear that the American farmer is going to have his reputation ruined because of price supports. You know, the farmer had something promised to him from 1920 clear on up to 1933. All during that 12-year period we lived on promises. That was all we got. We were on mighty thin rations and the American farmer got awfully thin trying to live on them.

When the American farmer could not do anything about it, and the administration then in power refused to do anything about it, he became bankrupt, and this situation then extended to all other fields of endeavor in the United States, ending with the great depression of 1932. Now when the promises that the administration we are living under at the present time are being kept, certain folks begin to be afraid that we are going to have our reputation ruined as American farmers. Back in the nineteen-twenties the American farmer had everything ruined, even his reputation. If that was not ruined it was terribly disfigured. He lost his reputation, his credit, and in many cases his home.

A gentleman said here a while ago that parity is all right, but we should not extend the thing too far, we should not carry it to extremes.

What is parity for farm prices? Nothing in the world except a price for farm products that will give the farmer an equal buying power with other segments of American life and industry. Parity means justice and fair play. Is 90 percent of justice too much for the American farmer to receive? The fear that so many people have of the Brannan plan leads me to believe that they are not afraid that the Brannan plan will not work, but they are afraid that maybe if it is allowed to be tried on even a trial run, that it may demonstrate that it will work, and if it does it will solve the problems of agriculture. I know it is hard to justify even 90 percent of parity when the industrial workers of the United States are taxed to support farm prices and at the same time it raises their grocery bills when they do it, but we know and they know that their jobs and their pay checks depend in great measure on the farmer's minimum wage which is his price-support program. We must support farm prices or we will throw this country into another tailspin that will end in a depression like we had in 1932, and I, for one, do not want to go through a thing like that again. I would like to see the Brannan plan tried, at least, on some of the perishable commodities. Of course it is the Democratic Party that is sponsoring this legislation but there is nothing strange in that. That party has sponsored all the good legislation that has been enacted since the beginning of the present century.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WALTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a commencement address he made at the Moravian Seminary.

Mr. CAMP asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a copy of the report on House Joint Resolution 480.

Mr. RAMSAY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter written by Fred H. Gaston, Alpine, Tex., in reference to House Resolution 323.

Mr. POAGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a quotation by Walter E. Long.

Mr. MACK of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial from the Illinois State Register and Journal.

Mr. PATTEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. MANSFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address of Col. Melvin J. Maas, USMCR, given at the First Postwar Convention, MCROA, on May 5, 1950.

Mr. RAINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in one to include a statement in reference to the United States engineers and in the others a newspaper editorial.

Mr. HOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. TAURIELLO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in reference to the Churchill Tabernacle at Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. KEOGH (at the request of Mr. TAURIELLO) was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address by Congressman CHESTER C. GORSKI at Colgate University.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a speech delivered by Mrs. Hiram C. Houghton.

Mr. ANDERSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. POTTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. HÉBERT (at the request of Mr. LARCADE) was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks on the bill S. 3358.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. TACKETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a proclamation from the Governor of Arkansas.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in four instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. MILLER of Maryland (at the request of Mr. BEALL) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

SENATE BILLS AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Bills and a concurrent resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 192. An act to confer jurisdiction on the courts of the State of New York with respect to civil actions between Indians or to which Indians are parties; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 382. An act for the relief of Wong Suey Wing; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 841. An act for the relief of Michele Bartolomeo Marchisio; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 960. An act to provide for the acquisition, construction, expansion, rehabilitation, conversion, and joint utilization of facilities necessary for the administration and training of units of the Reserve components of the armed forces of the United States for fiscal years 1951, 1952, and 1953, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 1208. An act for the relief of Pasch Bros.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1304. An act for the relief of Nicolae G. Caranfil and his family; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1320. An act for the relief of Mrs. Barbarita Romero; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1779. An act for the relief of Phil Meyers, also known as Gil Meyers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1884. An act for the relief of Rev. Lambros Economakos; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2016. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Proctor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2077. An act for the relief of Francisco Gonzalez Perez; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2095. An act for the relief of Frederick L. Goggans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2264. An act for the relief of Juliana Sosa de Solis; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2346. An act for the relief of Kuo Chin Lu; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2403. An act for the relief of Curt Edward Friese; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2608. An act for the relief of Dr. Kun Ken Hu; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2658. An act to establish rearing ponds and a fish hatchery in the State of Kentucky; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 2991. An act for the relief of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3520. An act to strengthen the common defense by providing for continuation and expansion of Western Hemisphere production of abaca by the United States; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 3571. An act to continue the authority of the Secretary of Commerce under the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 3771. An act to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. Con Res. 95. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 714. An act for the relief of Pieter Cornelis ten Wolde and family;

H. R. 1038. An act for the relief of William Richard Geoffrey Malpas;

H. R. 1609. An act for the relief of Arne Gordon Westly;

H. R. 2226. An act for the relief of Victor C. Kaminski (also known as Victor Kaminski);

H. R. 2705. An act for the relief of Martin Kenneth Ikeda;

H. R. 3009. An act for the relief of Dr. Ali Reza Bassir;

H. R. 3018. An act for the relief of Camilla Fabris;

H. R. 4532. An act for the relief of Dr. Ta Fu Wu;

H. R. 4903. An act for the relief of Krikor G. Guiragossian;

H. R. 5355. An act for the relief of Mindel Malek;

H. R. 5541. An act for the relief of William Lawrence Tan;

H. R. 6589. An act for the relief of Mitsue Miyamoto;

H. R. 6747. An act for the relief of Helga Holleb;

H. R. 6756. An act for the relief of Arthur Chen Shu Jee;

H. R. 6787. An act for the relief of Mrs. Kyoko Nakamura Kornhauser;

H. R. 6880. An act for the relief of Mrs. Kioy Narumi Murakami and Keiko Narumi;

H. R. 6894. An act for the relief of Mrs. Nobuko Eto Heard;

H. R. 7035. An act for the relief of Hisako Sakata Ikezawa;

H. R. 7047. An act for the relief of Mrs. Tomo Nonque Rosevear;

H. R. 7096. An act for the relief of Mrs. Maria Salome Holland;

H. R. 7292. An act for the relief of Erio Louis Tomita and Fumiko Tomita;

H. R. 7363. An act for the relief of Suzuko Yagi and Anne Yagi; and

H. R. 7889. An act to postpone the application of the Classification Act of 1949 to certain employees of the Selective Service System.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on June 15, 1950, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5920. An act to provide for payment of amounts due mentally incompetent personnel of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service; and

H. R. 6743. An act to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, and title IV of the National Housing Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 20, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1502. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize the detail of officers of the Armed Forces to any duty or position with the Department of Commerce in connection with the work of promoting civil aviation"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1503. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill entitled "A bill to authorize the President to appoint Col. Henry A. Byroade as Director of the Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State, without affecting his military status and perquisites"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. SPENCE: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. R. 8569. A bill to strengthen the common defense by extending for 5 years the authority for the Texas City tin-smelter operation; with amendment (Rept. No. 2270). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. SPENCE: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. R. 8597. A bill to permit national banks to give security in the form required by State law for deposits of funds by local public agencies and officers; without amendment (Rept. No. 2271). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SPENCE: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. R. 8737. A bill to continue for a temporary period certain powers, authority, and discretion for the purpose of exercising import controls with respect to fats and oils, and rice and rice products; without amendment (Rept. No. 2272). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ASPINALL: Committee on Public Lands. S. 3336. An act to provide for the organization of a constitutional government by the people of Puerto Rico; without amendment (Rept. No. 2275). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ASPINALL: Committee on Public Lands. S. 3635. An act to enable the governments of Alaska, of Hawaii, of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands to authorize public bodies or agencies to undertake slum clearance, urban redevelopment, and low-rent housing activities including the issuance of bonds and other obligations, to amend the low-rent housing enabling statutes for Alaska and Hawaii, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2276). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HARRIS: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 2887. A bill to amend the Architects' Registration Act for the District of Columbia in order to safeguard life, health, and property, and to promote the public welfare; with amendment (Rept. No. 2277). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 7146. A bill to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of materials on the public lands of the United States," so as to provide that moneys received from the disposal of material from reserved school section lands in Alaska shall be credited to the Territory; with amendment (Rept. No. 2278). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 7675. A bill to authorize the addition of certain land to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, in the State of Tennessee; without amendment (Rept. No. 2279). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 7709. A bill to provide for the acquisition, investigation, and preservation of lands to commemorate the historic Fort Caroline settlement, St. Johns Bluff, Fla.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2280). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 7977. A bill to authorize the city of Buffalo, Wyo., to make additional uses of certain lands, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2281). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee: Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. H. R. 8195. A bill to rescind the order of the Postmaster General curtailing certain postal services; without amendment (Rept. No. 2282). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 8366. A bill to supplement the act of June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2029), relating to the Castillo de San Marcos National Monument, in the State of Florida; without amendment (Rept. No. 2283). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8710. A bill to provide for the improvement of stadium facilities at the Eastern Senior High School in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 2284). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. SPENCE: Committee of conference. S. 3181. An act to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2285). Ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. PETERSON: Committee on Public Lands. S. 2397. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands in the State of Minnesota to Signa M. Lodoen and Nels R. Lodoen; without amendment (Rept. No. 2273). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming: Committee on Public Lands. H. R. 7916. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to execute an oil and gas lease on a certain tract of land in Park County, Wyo.; without amendment (Rept. No. 2274). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MANSFIELD:

H. R. 8871. A bill to promote the rehabilitation of the landless Indians of Montana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. McGRATH:

H. R. 8872. A bill to amend Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 with respect to certain mothers of veterans; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. PATMAN:

H. R. 8873. A bill granting the consent of the Congress to the negotiation of a compact relating to the waters of the Red River by the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PATTEN:

H. R. 8874. A bill to authorize the sale of lands to the city of Flagstaff, Ariz.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. DOYLE:

H. R. 8875. A bill to provide for payments to certain disabled veterans who sold their homes in order to move from Van Nuys, Calif., to Long Beach, Calif., for the purpose of receiving care and treatment at the Veterans' Administration hospital at Long Beach, Calif.; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. CLEMENTE:

H. Con. Res. 223. Concurrent resolution providing for the exercise of the veto to prevent Communist China from becoming a member of the United Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FORAND:

H. Res. 654. Resolution for the relief of Mrs. Jean E. Charon; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. TAURIELLO:

H. Res. 655. Resolution creating a select committee to conduct an investigation and study of the meat industry of the United States to determine the causes and effects of the abrupt increases in the price of meat; to the Committee on Rules.

H. Res. 656. Resolution to provide funds for the expenses of the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 655; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

H. Res. 657. Resolution for the appointment of a special committee for the enforcement of acts of the Congress; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOYKIN:

H. R. 8876. A bill for the relief of Lon Weaver; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. D'EWART:

H. R. 8877. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to certain allottees on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. KING:

H. R. 8878. A bill for the relief of John Reginald Leat; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

H. R. 8879. A bill for the relief of E. J. Warden; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOLLEFSON:

H. R. 8880. A bill for the relief of Cecil D. Rose; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2203. By Mr. CANFIELD: Resolution adopted by the Monday Afternoon Club of Passaic, N. J., favoring the development of voluntary health insurance and opposing the compulsory approach; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2204. By Mr. GOODWIN: Memorial of the Massachusetts Legislature, for the President to reinstate certain amputee veterans as permanent employees of Post Office Department, and one memorializing Congress to enact legislation exempting fishing tournaments from provisions of the Federal postal lottery law; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

2205. Also, resolution of City Council of Malden, Mass., that the Federal Government take the necessary steps to stop importing of Russian crab meat into this country for sale; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2206. By the SPEAKER: Petition of George W. Parson, M. D., president, Texas Heart Association, Dallas, Tex., urging the board of directors of the American Heart Association to reexamine its position with reference to its approval of the expenditure of Federal funds under the National Heart Act and the establishment of the National Heart Institute under the Federal Security Agency; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2207. Also, petition of George W. Cox, M. D., State health officer, Texas State Department of Health, Austin, Tex., opposed to Reorganization Plan No. 27 in its entirety; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we thank Thee for the sweet refreshment of sleep, restoring the frayed edges of care; for the fresh vigor of a new day; and for all the beckoning glory of June enchantment. Across all the toiling hours before us, O Thou Great Companion of our souls, keep our hearts with Thee as once more our faces are set toward vexing social problems which tax our utmost to solve.

May we take heed of all the judgments of those who share with us the responsibilities of statecraft, and gather gratefully and patiently whatever truth they hold. But teach us still to test all things by our own conscience, and always to do the right as Thou dost give us to see the right. And, in these days that try men's souls, strengthen our weakness, curb our ill tempers; bring courage for cowardice and invincible faith for blighting cynicism. In the decisions here to be made in crucial days ahead, make us worthy of these demanding times that call aloud for wisdom and character. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, June 19, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask unanimous consent that the time consumed in the calling of the quorum be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents of the bill (H. R. 6000) which is the unfinished business before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded and that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the time between now and 4 o'clock p. m. is divided equally between the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me to make a half-a-minute statement?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois for that purpose.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to announce that immediately following the disposition on tomorrow of the conference report on H. R. 1243, to amend the Hatch Act, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bill 6826, providing for continuation of the Selective Service Act. That is an exceedingly important measure, because it has the deadline of the 24th of June midnight, and unless the Congress passes that bill between now and that time it will be necessary, according to those who are familiar with that measure, to have the boys who have registered during the past 2 years reregister. That will create a tremendous amount of work throughout the country for the draft boards. It will result in a great amount of confusion and chaos. So on tomorrow we are going to hold a night session with the hope that we can conclude action on that bill before the Senate adjourns or recesses.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will there be any time today allotted for insertions of various matters into the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can be done only if one of the Senators now having control of the time yields to other Senators for such purpose, unless a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect is entered into.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suggest that we proceed with the business in hand. Probably there will be an opportunity afforded within a short time to present routine matters for the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Subsequently,

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

APPOINTMENT OF COL. HENRY A. BYROADE AS DIRECTOR OF BUREAU OF GERMAN AFFAIRS

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the President to appoint Col. Henry A. Byroade as Director of the Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State, without affecting his military status and perquisites (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT ON CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on cooperation of the United States with Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease for the month of April 1950 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DETAIL OF OFFICERS OF ARMED FORCES TO DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the detail of officers of the Armed Forces to any duty or position with the Department of Commerce in connection with the work of promoting civil aviation (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Armed Services.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the the files of several departments and agencies of the Government which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the executive council of the Dental Society of the State of New York, New York City, protesting against the approval of Reorganization Plan No. 27 of 1950, providing Cabinet status for the Federal Security Agency; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

A resolution adopted by San Gabriel Post, No. 442, the American Legion, at San Gabriel, Calif., protesting against the closing of the Birmingham General Hospital in Van Nuys, Calif.; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Resolutions adopted by Harman and Allen Auxiliary No. 8306, of Catawissa, and the Catholic Woman's Club, of York, both in the State of Pennsylvania, and the American Association of Industrial Nurses, of New York, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing compulsory health insurance; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A resolution adopted by Daniel Webster Lodge No. 24, Free Sons of Israel, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 3102 and House bill 7396, providing Federal aid to States to make more adequate provisions for the education of physically handicapped children; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

A letter in the nature of a petition from the Hamilton Park Adult Recreation Club, Chicago, Ill., signed by Warren Lamson, president, praying for the enactment of House bill 6000, the Social Security Act amendments of 1950, as it passed the House of Representatives; ordered to lie on the table.

WORLD PEACE—REPORT OF WISCONSIN ANNUAL METHODIST CONFERENCE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received from the secretary of the Wisconsin Annual Methodist Conference, Rev. Norman S. Ream, a copy of a report adopted by the committee on world peace of the conference. I believe that this report, although debatable, will be of tremendous interest to my colleagues because it voices the sentiments of countless clergymen throughout the country and of their flocks.

On many occasions I have voiced sentiments similar to several of the expressions in this report. For example, I have urged the calling of an international conference to consider the problem of world disarmament, and have urged direct face-to-face meetings between the leaders of the great powers. In addition, it has been my pleasure to vote for the point 4 program.

I believe the report of the committee on world peace of the Methodist church of my State will be of interest to my colleagues, although many of the report suggestions are highly controversial. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the text be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the report was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON WORLD PEACE

Today's civilization is staggering on the edge of war. More men are under arms and more wealth is being poured into armaments than at any other time in history except during actual war itself. The energies and resources of the nations are devoted to turning out ever more terrible weapons of destruction. This cannot long continue without mankind being plunged into an armed conflict that will blight the earth and destroy the people.

I. PRINCIPLES OF PEACE

The church cannot remain silent but must speak the mind of Christ without compromise, calling the nations to set their feet on the path of peace, to develop a broad policy for peace based on good will rather than a negative program of containment based on force. Such a policy should rest on two basic factors:

1. Reconciliation rather than recrimination as the fundamental principle in world relationships.

2. Effective world organization as a means of using the world's tremendous resources to build rather than to destroy.

We call on our Nation's leaders to abandon the idea that the only way to end the cold war is to win it, and to realize that the only way to win the cold war is to end it. We urge the President and the State Department to end their refusal to cooperate with Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, in his efforts to bring the east and west together again. The position evidenced by our Nation's leaders borders on intransigence and is rapidly losing us our position of moral leadership in the eyes of the Europeans and the Asiatics.

We ask our Government to seek patiently and sincerely for the reopening of negotiations with Russia at the highest leadership levels. We realize that Russian policy and attitudes make cooperation with her difficult. We remember, however, that Christ has not called us to love only those who love us, but to be also persistent in good will toward those who raise barriers against us.

II. DISARMAMENT

As a first step in a bold program for peace, let our Nation join with others in calling for a world-wide disarmament conference, seeking specifically the cooperation of the U. S. S. R. in the issuance of the invitation. The arms burden bears with crushing weight on the people's back, draining our natural resources and misusing our human resources.

To give force to the call for this world-wide conference, our own Nation should abolish its program of peacetime military conscription which was adopted in the midst of confused counsel, and is contrary to Christian teachings and American tradition. We would thus evidence in a real manner our sincerity in this matter of disarmament. In addition, our Government should act in whatever way is necessary to remove all profit making from war.

III. ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL

We ask that new efforts be made to find a basis for international control of atomic energy within the framework of the United Nations. There is no virtue in holding dogmatically to the Baruch proposal when it is unalterably opposed by the U. S. S. R. Our leaders should appoint a new group to draft a fresh proposal concerning atomic energy control, such a group to contain no person who is a member of the national administration or the military forces.

In the meantime we should abandon our efforts to create a hydrogen bomb. It is utter folly to seek a weapon which may destroy us all simply because other countries may be seeking it, also. There is no teaching or action of Christ which can conceivably be interpreted to mean we are to seek the power of destroying others lest they destroy us first. Rather we are told to "fear not those who would kill the body" but fear only "Him who can destroy both soul and body." Certainly the present race for control of the weapons of destruction puts our very souls in peril.

IV. DEVELOPMENT OF BACKWARD AREAS

We urge our Nation to give significant support to the point 4 program of sending technicians and materials to underdeveloped and backward areas of the world. This program should have no connection with military purposes, but should be administered entirely through the appropriate UN agencies where no veto exists. Hunger and desperation furnish a fertile seedbed for communism and fascism. To combat such conditions through the point 4 program is not only part of the Christian imperative, but is absolutely necessary to create the condition in which democracy can flourish.

We call attention to the fact that, if the pending point 4 appropriation of $35,000,000 is authorized, we will still be putting more than $400 into armaments for every $1 allotted to this all-important work of helping the world's peoples to stand on their own feet. Such an apportionment would seem to indicate that we are neither as wise as serpents nor as harmless as doves.

V. WORLD ORGANIZATION

Peace is neither the synonym for a static situation nor for the absolute lack of conflict. In the final analysis, world peace is that condition in which change can take place without recourse to violence. Change is a basic requirement for a progressive and dynamic society. Where the forces for change meet the forces of inertia, conflict develops. If there is no other way for the conflict to be resolved, it will issue in violence. As pointed out by the last general conference of our church, democratic government furnishes the framework within which such change can take place peacefully. Conflicts are then resolved within the legislature rather than on the battlefield.

The United Nations is the first step toward an effective world organization. But it languishes and is near the point of perishing because it is still a league of sovereign nations based on mutual conflict rather than a government based on law. We urge our State Department and administration to work for transformation of the United Nations into a Federal World Government by giving it the power to enact, interpret, and enforce world laws to insure peace.

We feel that the hour is at hand for a great effort to effect a comprehensive settlement with the Soviet Union and, as a vital factor in such a settlement, a simultaneous UN Charter revision producing the world federation essential to lasting peace.

VI. OUR RESPONSIBILITY

Each local church should without fail have a group to keep that church informed on the vital issues of peace. We who serve the Prince of Peace cannot afford to let the powers of darkness win this struggle by our default. Minister and layman alike bear a grave responsibility for focusing the attention of the local congregation on this matter and stirring the people into action through sermon, study group, petition, contact with legislators, and through whatever other resource may be available. Peace is the will of God and peace must become the will of the Methodist people.

STATE FOREST PRACTICES—RESOLUTIONS OF BOARDS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF HUBBARD AND ITASCA COUNTIES, MINN.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, resolutions adopted by the Boards of County Commissioners of Hubbard and Itasca Counties, Minn., expressing opposition to the so-called Anderson bill, S. 1820, providing that each State set up its own forest practices subject to the acceptance of Federal policies.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Anderson bill, Senate File 1820, provides that each State set up its own forest practices subject to the acceptance of Federal policies; and

Whereas the State of Minnesota has a strong forest department and State timber management policy with respect to all publicly owned lands; and

Whereas the bill in question would extend the regimentation by the Federal Government, increasing expenditures and red-tape; and

Whereas we are opposed to any further usurpation of power from the local agencies

by the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this county board at its regular meeting in the courthouse at Park Rapids, Minn., on June 6, 1950, places itself on record in opposition to said bill and, further, that the United States Senators and Representatives from Minnesota are hereby requested to vote against same and use their influence to oppose said bill.

Whereas the Anderson bill, Senate File 1820, provides that each State set up its own forest practice policies subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; and

Whereas if the Secretary of Agriculture does not agree with the State plan, the Federal Department of Agriculture will then assume authority after a certain prescribed waiting period for the State to amend its policy to conform to a Federal pattern; and

Whereas the State of Minnesota already has a very good forestry policy and has laws giving the State administrative authority under a well established State timber management policy with respect to timber cutting on all lands except those owned by the Federal Government; and

Whereas the State of Minnesota has foresters and technicians who are not only as competent as those of the Federal Government or any other agency, but who are already familiar with local conditions; and

Whereas this bill, while cited as a Forest Practice Act for the management of privately owned forest lands, is feared to have as its main objective the eventual control by the Federal Government of all timber lands in the several States, thereby taking the administrative authority away from the State and local government agencies; and

Whereas this measure could well be confiscatory in scope and is an infringement on State rights with more regimentation by the Federal Government and the building up of more bureaucracies with untold expenditures and red tape, enforcing questionable forest practices: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this board of county commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., at its regular meeting in the courthouse in Grand Rapids, Minn., on June 6, 1950, does hereby express its opposition to said Anderson bill; be it further

Resolved, That the United States Senators and Congressmen from Minnesota are hereby requested to vote against the bill and to use their influence to prevent its passage.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 2809. A bill to provide for an agricultural program in the Virgin Islands; without amendment (Rept. No. 1845); and

H. R. 7155. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the States to enable them to provide technical services to private forest-land owners, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1846).

By Mr. GILLETTE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

H. R. 5679. A bill to authorize the transfer of certain agricultural dry land and irrigation field stations to the States in which such stations are located, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1847).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. Res. 291. Resolution to investigate the causes of gasoline price increases during the past 5 years and whether supplemental antitrust legislation is needed; without amendment (Rept. No. 1849); and, under the rule, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KNOWLAND:

S. 3797. A bill for the relief of Ivan Herben, his wife, son, and daughter-in-law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DONNELL:

S. 3798. A bill for the relief of Tomiko Tsuji and Mari Tsuji; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GURNEY:

S. 3799. A bill to authorize the sale of certain land of Jonas Owl King; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 3800. A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code, relating to the mailing of obscene matter; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUCAS:

S. 3801. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain portion of land to the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. SALTONSTALL:

S. 3802. A bill for the relief of Ladislav Dolansky and his wife, Marie; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAYDEN (for himself and Mr. McFARLAND):

S. 3803. A bill to provide the rehabilitation of the Papago Tribe of Indians and a better utilization of the resources of the Papago Tribe, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. BRIDGES:

S. J. Res. 188. Joint resolution to provide for a temporary embargo on certain products imported under the classification of "Manufacturers of wood, not specially provided for"; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WATKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance System, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6000, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT

[Mr. McMAHON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a commencement address delivered by the Vice President at the University of Connecticut, at Storrs, Conn., on June 11, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

OUR FARM PROGRAM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ANDERSON

[Mr. ANDERSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Our Farm Program," delivered by him before the Western Region Farm Bureau Conference, at Fort Collins, Colo., June 17, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

SEATING OF COMMUNIST CHINA IN THE UNITED NATIONS—STATEMENT BY SENATORS BRIDGES AND KNOWLAND

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Senator KNOWLAND and himself on the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, which appears in the Appendix.]

SPEECH AT WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION NOMINATING SENATOR WILEY

[Mr. TAFT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the speech at the Wisconsin Republican State Convention nominating Senator WILEY for reelection, and an editorial entitled "WILEY Endorsement Sets National Pace," published in the Janesville (Wis.) Daily Gazette of Monday, June 12, 1950, and excerpts from an editorial in the La Crosse Tribune of June 15, 1950, which appear in the Appendix.]

INDEPENDENCE BOND DRIVE—ADDRESS BY WILLIAM J. STOREY, MAYOR OF DOVER, DEL.

[Mr. WILLIAMS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address of the Honorable William J. Storey, mayor of Dover, Del., delivered on June 14, 1950, on the occasion of the launching of the Independence bond drive in Delaware, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRUMAN'S ABRUPT VETO OF BASING-POINT BILL AIDS LOCAL MONOPOLY—ARTICLE BY DAVID LAWRENCE

[Mr. WHERRY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Truman's Abrupt Veto of Basing-Point Bill Aids Local Monopoly," by David Lawrence, published in the Washington Evening Star of June 19, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

TARIFF POLICY UNCERTAINTIES SEEN UNSETTLING TO INDUSTRY—ARTICLE BY HOWARD HUSTON

[Mr. BREWSTER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Tariff Policy Uncertainties Seen Unsettling to Industry," written by Howard Huston, and published in the New York Journal of Commerce of June 20, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] for himself and other Senators.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 20 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, we are indeed deeply indebted to the able and distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the equally able and distinguished junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] for the enormous amount of intense study and the laborious effort represented in the bill which is now before the Senate.

The task to which they devoted themselves so zealously was one of vast magnitude and extreme complexity. The problem of social security is not one that can be brought to perfection by any quick or easy method. It is not concerned exclusively with charts or statistics. It has to do with the lives and the welfare of people throughout their lifetime. In its many-sided aspects it involves the plans and hopes of men and women to acquire a measure of peace of mind and comfort in their later years.

Mr. President, social security is of more interest to the people today than any other subject, except taxation, which has been discussed in this Chamber.

I know I am joined by all my colleagues in deep appreciation of the fair and impartial manner in which H. R. 6000, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee, was discussed by the leadership of the committee. Very carefully and very thoroughly they presented the features which remedy some of the existing defects in the present system. At the same time they placed emphasis upon the inadequacies which still remain to be worked out before the purposes we are trying to achieve can be attained.

Certainly we have before us a substantial improvement upon the present law. We are widening the coverage and offering a much more realistic schedule of old-age and survivor benefits in the light of present-day prices. These are valuable adjustments.

But there is another side. Like the original 1935 measure, the pending bill continues to be a stopgap—something to fill in until, somewhere along the line, there is created a basically sounder and firmer system of doing the job that must be done.

I refer, of course, to the kind of law which will stand on the three firm foundation pins of universal coverage, pay-as-you-go, and something reasonably close to genuine actuarial standards.

I shall vote for this bill in the clear recognition that it is still a stopgap—certainly a much improved stopgap—but yet a challenge for us to find something better.

Wholeheartedly I endorse the resolution offered jointly by the senior Senator from Georgia and the junior Senator from Colorado, for a continuing study of social-security problems to determine the best way to make the present system over into the fundamentally sounder one which all of us are determined the country must have.

As we all know, the bill which is now before the Senate, and which is an improvement over existing law, largely grew from the resolution adopted by the Senate on July 23, 1947, during the Eightieth Congress—a resolution jointly sponsored by the then chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. MILLIKIN] and the ranking minority member [Mr. GEORGE]—for an investigation into the social-security system. The experts appointed in accordance with that resolution assembled for the Congress basic new information which provided the stepping stones to this bill.

The new resolution (S. Res. 300), which is to be voted on this afternoon, calls for something much more important. It should enlist the support of all seeking to provide the best possible safeguards for our growing population of older citizens.

And, Mr. President, important as is the problem of our aging and aged today, tomorrow it will be infinitely more important. Today our population of men and women over 65 years of age is about eleven and one-half million. By 1975 there are expected to be about 19,000,000 in that category, and by the year 2000 even more.

These older people are men and women who have made their full contribution to the upbuilding and support of the Republic. They have given the country a new generation, have fought its wars, have raised its food, erected its homes, schools, and churches, taught its youth, and produced an infinite variety of our manufactured products. They have kept burning brightly the torch of our form of government and our way of life.

They are an indispensable link in the continuity of America.

For them, there must not—there shall not ever be—any "over the hill to the poorhouse" at the end of the road.

Nor must we be content with any stopgap, second-best system of social security. We must work constantly at the job of improving it. Most important, we must make the country behind it fully solvent and able to live within its means, for no system that we or anyone else can devise will be any stronger or safer than the soundness of the dollar and the solvency of the country back of it.

That is why the George-Millikin resolution is so important.

Everyone knows that the relief or public-assistance feature of social security was to be a temporary expedient. The idea was that as soon as the old-age and survivors insurance system was well established Uncle Sam would withdraw from the business of providing local assistance. That, it was felt, was a job entirely for the States and local communities. But things have not worked out that way under the stopgap law. Old-age and survivors insurance has been in existence for 15 years, and today more than 35,000,000 persons are under its coverage.

But, despite this, old-age assistance and other direct-relief programs—with matching Federal contributions—have continued to grow at such a rate that its beneficiaries over 65 years of age far outnumber those of the insurance system; and far more money is being spent to benefit persons under such relief than is received by those who made regular payments under the insurance system.

Public assistance is essentially a local function. It should be taken care of by the local community, with financial assistance from the State. The Federal Government should step in only in times of great emergency. We must remember that the stronger the old-age and survivors insurance program becomes the less burden there will be upon the States and local communities for relief.

What have we in the handling of the money today, Mr. President? A worker and his employer pay into the social-security insurance fund year in and year out. The money goes into the Federal Treasury. Uncle Sam dips his hand into the till, takes the money out, and spends it for the high-priced business of running the Government. He leaves an I O U in the till. It is a bond paying 2½ percent annually. At present, in the neighborhood of $12,000,000,000 has been removed, and the 2½ percent I O U's left instead.

That sounds good. The fund gets 2½ percent on its money in the safest investment in the world—United States Government bonds. But where does Uncle Sam get the 2½ percent interest? The same place he gets all of his money—by taxing the workers who paid the money into the social-security fund, in the first place, and also the workers who are not covered.

Where does the Government get the money to pay benefits as more and more persons reach the age of 65? Naturally, by taxing the same workers who are taxed to pay the interest on the bonds. So the man who goes on social security pays twice, plus interest, for his benefits. He pays in the original wage deductions. Then he is taxed to pay interest on the money the Government has borrowed from the fund. Then he is taxed to provide the money to pay him and others their social-security benefits. And, of course, the worker who is not covered by social security is taxed to provide funds to pay old-age insurance for those who are covered.

These inequities still remain in the improved bill now pending before the Senate. At the moment we must accept them until further study produces a sound social-security system.

It has been argued that the bonds of the United States, in which the social-security trust funds are invested, are the safest and soundest gilt-edged securities in the world.

I have no quarrel with that statement. I accept it fully and completely. But I should like to point out this difference: When a private corporation reaches the time when it is necessary to pay off its outstanding bonds, it does so out of earnings. We must remember that the Government has no earnings. When it becomes necessary to redeem the bonds, two courses are open. One is by new borrowing. The other is by additional taxes imposed upon all the people, including those who sacrificed a part of their earnings to establish the social-security fund.

Mr. WHERRY Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. WHERRY. Then I shall be very brief. In either of the events the Senator has mentioned, the payment has to be made through taxes, regardless of whether it is deficit spending or not. Is that correct?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; all of it is paid for by taxation.

Mr. WHERRY. So it has to be paid for by taxation; does it not?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; the Senator is correct.

What I believe in is a plan whereby everyone under 65 years of age supports the system, and then, when past the age of 65, becomes a beneficiary. I want the program to be on a pay-as-you-go basis—actuarily sound—in which a man pays once, not twice, for his benefits.

That is the goal toward which Congress must work. I am confident that the George-Millikin resolution will bring us a step closer to that goal.

If we do not seek a sound actuarial solution, we have no idea what this system, or any system, will cost us 20 or 30 or 50 years hence.

Today about 35,000,000 active workers pay into the fund; and only about 2,700,000 receive weekly benefits. That makes it easy for the administration's I O U scheme to operate, because a great deal more is paid into the fund than is withdrawn in the form of benefits. But what will happen when the receipts and the disbursements come closer and closer into balance?

What will happen if there should be a serious depression at some future time when fourteen or fifteen million persons are receiving old-age and survivors insurance benefits, and when millions of workers—actively contributing to the fund—are unemployed?

Where will the Government get the money to continue the insurance payments to the over-65-years-of-age beneficiaries? Will it be able to lay heavier taxes upon a depression-ridden people? Will it print inflationary, printing-press money, or will it repudiate its honest obligation to our citizens who are over 65?

Certainly the method used in the existing law, and provided for in the pending bill, does not contain the answer. The answer lies only in a sounder system.

I say we must work toward such a sounder system. In supporting this bill, we must recognize it for just what it is—one more stepping stone on the way to a better law.

The search for a better law should start now—without delay.

It is perfectly obvious to all of us that the sounder, better formula is not easy to find. Certainly, no one has managed to find it in the past 15 years, although many expert minds have been focused upon the problem.

There is one thing I should like to submit to the Senate. One of the principal reasons why the Congress is voting a new social-security law is because the benefits provided under the old law have become insufficient, due to the depreciation of the dollar and its decreased purchasing power. In other words, inflation has hit our dollar, and it is worth only half of what it was worth back in the middle thirties, when the social-security law first went into operation.

As an illustration of what has happened to the dollar consider the fact that a man who purchased a United States saving bond 10 years ago for $18.75 and who cashes the bond today for $25 can buy less with the $25 he receives than he could with $18.75, the amount he invested 10 years ago. That is what has become of the savings of the thrifty.

Mr. President, earlier in my remarks I mentioned that a sound, stable dollar and Government solvency are basically important to any true, long-term social-security system. Our national economy and the financial stability of our Government are being tossed and blown about by winds of inflation.

The person receiving old-age insurance benefits receives a fixed, limited income, and he is but one of many classes who suffer, and suffer greatly, under inflation. It brings hardship to all who must live on the income derived from pensions, rents, annuities, savings accounts, and other small investments.

The principal cause of the inflation we have today is extravagant spending, excessive taxation, debt, and unsound deficit financing by the Federal Government.

One of the most significant comments on the fiscal policies of the National Government was the statement issued last week by the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report. The committee urged an immediate termination of deficit spending in times of prosperity and inflation. Let me quote from the statement of the majority party members, under the chairmanship of the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. Their comment declared:

> A critical examination of the present level of Government expenditures is imperative. In years of such booming business as currently is causing prices to boil up in inflationary manner throughout the economy, this Government should not be incurring deficits.
>
> It should put its house in order.
>
> Inability to vote against appropriations, or vote for increased taxes needed to foot bills this Government now incurs, is a sign of weakness that enemies of free enterprise are gleefully exploiting throughout the world. It represents the greatest single danger to freedom and national security.

The statement then goes on to urge "top priority" for reducing the debt in prosperous years like these.

Mr. President, that statement is dedicated to protecting our entire economy. For, let me say once more, the sound dollar and the Government's living within its means are the master keys to a stable social-security system, to a firm and expanding national economy, and even to protection from alien ideologies designed to conquer us by making us spend ourselves into a condition of weakness and self-destruction.

Mr. President, let me sound a warning: If we fail to put our house in order, if we do not return to a sound, fiscal policy, the pending bill and the study contemplated by the George-Millikin resolution will be mere scraps of worthless paper.

Finally, Mr. President, I should like to sum up some of our objectives, as follows:

First. We must determine how much social security the Nation can afford. We can afford only the amount we can pay for annually. No family or nation ever went broke on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Second. The plan we adopt must be easy to administer. We cannot entangle the people in too much Government red tape.

Third. As nearly as possible we should have universal coverage. Social security should be a safe and sound investment for the rainy day. It is the result of thrift and sacrifice.

Fourth. Social security and public assistance must be totally separated.

Fifth. Sound programs operated by subdivisions of Government, churches, and other institutions, should not be disturbed.

Sixth. Careful consideration must be given to pension funds set up by large business concerns, so that they may not place too great a burden on the small businesses or put them at too great a disadvantage.

Government solvency is the foundation of a sound social security. If we continue to endanger the solvency of the United States, and persist on a course which means further depreciation of the purchasing power of the American dollar, we shall defeat the ends we are now striving to achieve.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington. Will the Senator kindly indicate how much time he will need?

Mr. CAIN. Approximately 30 minutes. I shall endeavor to conclude within that time.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield 30 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the time is now hard upon us when we must vote on whether H. R. 6000 is to become the law of the land.

In the few minutes permitted me I desire to read a remarkable letter which I received this morning. The letter is from Mr. George M. V. Brown, administrator of the Pierce County Welfare Department of my own State of Washington, whose office is in my own home city of Tacoma. Mr. Brown has been, is, and I hope will continue to be, a close personal friend of the junior Senator from Washington.

I should like to read this letter and then to read my reply to Mr. Brown, in which is restated the position which the junior Senator from Washington has tried to present, in a reasonable way, during the entire consideration of the pending bill. Mr. Brown's letter reads as follows:

> DEAR HARRY: I am somewhat shocked and surprised at the reports we are receiving in our local newspapers concerning your attitude toward H. R. 6000 and Senate Report 1669. No legislation is ever perfect, but the changes that are contemplated in H. R. 6000 and Senate Report 1669, or any combination of them, is so much ahead of what we have at the present time that they deserve your fullest support. I believe we discussed this matter in some detail a few years ago when we had lunch together, and I know at that time you understood and agreed to the need for these changes. Without boring you with too much detail, please allow me to refresh your memory.
>
> The State old-age-assistance program (a pauperizing type of assistance) has been growing by leaps and bounds over the last 15 years. When this program was put into effect, it was the intent that it would be only a temporary measure until such time as the Federal Government could put into effect a pension-insurance program which would be directly contributed to by those who received benefits. Due to the lethargy on the part of the Federal Government, the old-age and survivors insurance program has been allowed to remain static to the place where returns to its participants are entirely inadequate, and the coverage has never been increased as was anticipated, and thus a relatively small percentage of the total population is covered by its benefits. As a direct result, the State old-age-assistance program, led by left-wing groups, has flourished in this fertile field of lethargy until at the present time, as you well know, the financial stability of the State of Washington is seriously jeopardized. Not only are we serving many people on our State old-age-assistance program who should be covered by old-age and survivors insurance, but we are also finding it necessary to subsidize others, due to the fact that the Federal program has not been brought up to date since approximately 1938.

In addition to the financial burden which has unnecessarily been placed on this State by the above-mentioned inadequacies on the part of old-age and survivor's insurance, the resultant increase in State old-age assistance has tended to "drag along" an unnecessary liberalization of State relief programs to persons in other age brackets (aid to dependent children, general assistance, etc.).

There are probably many ways that an old-age and survivor's insurance program could be administered and financed. However, I think it is ill-advised to suggest the cost and confusion, which any new system would create, at this time when you and your colleagues have not as yet given full enough support to our present legislation to know whether or not it is either sufficient or workable.

In the interest of the people of the State of Washington, both those who are directly affected by this program and the taxpayers of this State, I hope that you will reconsider your viewpoint on this legislation and do all in your power to back up and vote for these revisions as suggested by H. R. 6000 and Senate Report 1669.

Those of us in the State of Washington should be the most interested people in the United States in this matter since it is my belief that the whole financial structure of our State is in more or less jeopardy, depending on how much we are able to handle old-age security on a contributory insurance basis rather than on a pauperizing base directly paid for by the already overburdened taxpayers.

Very truly yours,
PIERCE COUNTY WELFARE DEPARTMENT,
GEO. M. V. BROWN, Administrator.

He signed it "George" in a personal and affectionate way.

Today, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington wishes to respond to Mr. Brown, of Tacoma, Wash., as follows:

Mr. George M. V. Brown, Administrator, Pierce County Welfare Department, 2323 Commerce Street, Tacoma, Wash.

My dear Mr. Brown: Many thanks for your exceedingly frank letter of June 16. Much of the information in it only confirms what I have long suspected and believed.

Other portions of the letter, those urging me to support H. R. 6000, are so startling that I am moved to write you in some detail. In this letter I shall restate briefly the position I have tried to maintain throughout the whole consideration of the bill.

On May 24 last, shortly after H. R. 6000 was reported to the Senate, but before the committee report on the bill was available, I introduced a resolution—Senate Concurrent Resolution 92—calling for a completely independent investigation and overhauling of our social security system. I urged that, pending this investigation, we put aside H. R. 6000, leave the present system where it is, and pause until we had a clearer idea of where we are going.

I said then: "If the Nation is willing to provide for the needs of some of the aged, it ought to be willing to provide for the needs of all of the aged. It is because of this conviction that I shall oppose the passage of H. R. 6000 as amended with every legitimate means at my disposal."

That statement I now reaffirm and on it I still abide.

My earnest appeal for an investigation was not based on any notion that I was an expert in social security questions. I made the appeal because others, who understand these things in far greater detail than I, had been making similar appeals over a period of many months. These appeals had gone unheeded. It was only when it dawned upon me that this battle was liable to go to decision by default that I determined to fight.

You say, "There are probably many ways that an old age and survivors insurance program could be administered and financed. However, I think it ill-advised to suggest the cost and confusion, which any new system would create, at this time when you and your colleagues have not as yet given full enough support to our present legislation to know whether or not it is either sufficient or workable."

I say to you: The United States Congress has supported this legislation for 15 years and has seen the present social security system grow ever more complicated, capricious, cruel and unjust. How long do you think we should support it before looking for a better way?

In the statement which I made on May 24 and in my statements on June 15 and 16 during the debate, I tried to make clear the following points:

First. That the present two-headed system of old age assistance and old age and survivors insurance was complex beyond endurance, inordinately costly to administer, and tended to center bureaucratic control here in Washington. I believe that to be true. Why support a bill that promises to make this phase of the problem worse?

Second. That it was not insurance at all, since the system was riddled with examples of persons getting a dollar in benefits for a nickel put in.

Third. That despite all the talk about expanding social security there were millions of old people shut out and that, H. R. 6000 to the contrary notwithstanding, millions of the aged will still be left out even if the bill passes.

Fourth. I said that it was useless to talk of costs unless the two systems of old-age assistance and of the so-called insurance program are considered simultaneously. In your letter you make this point clear with a vengeance. You say: "The State old-age assistance program—a pauperizing type of assistance—has been growing by leaps and bounds over the past 15 years." That is exactly what I have said on the Senate floor. You say: "When this program was put into effect, it was the intent that it would be only a temporary measure until such time as the Federal Government could put into effect a pension insurance program which would be directly contributed to by those who received benefits." I repeatedly called the Senate's attention to what had happened to that temporary-assistance program, how expectations of its dwindling away had gone with the wind. You say: "As a direct result the State old-age assistance program led by left-wing groups has flourished in this fertile field of lethargy until at the present time, as you well know, the financial stability of the State of Washington is seriously jeopardized." If you say this I do not see how, in all conscience, you can ask me to support H. R. 6000, for the matching formulas for OAA remain the same, save for a minute cut in cases where old people get both OASI benefits and old-age assistance as well. The plain truth is, as I believe, that old-age assistance costs, the very thing you dread, are bound to soar if H. R. 6000 is passed. I note what you say about left-wing pressure. I suggest that you bring this interesting fact to the attention of Mr. Arthur Altmeyer, of the Social Security Administration.

Fifth. I have maintained during the debate that it was a monstrous fraud and cheat to tell young people, now in their early working life, that if, under these wretched covered categories they paid their social-security taxes for the allotted time, they would at retirement age qualify for and receive an annuity. The fraud and the cheat lies in the expansion of present benefits out of current security-tax income, with scarcely a thought of how the enormously increased benefit bill is going to be paid a generation from now. I said it could only be done with savagely increased taxes or with further depreciated dollars. I still say that.

Sixth. I said it was a mistake to pass H. R. 6000 and plan to investigate afterward, since the further entrenchment of the existing system could only make investigation far more difficult and politically hazardous. I still believe that to be true.

Seventh. I was at pains to acknowledge the months of work which the Senate Finance Commitee has given to this bill and made it perfectly clear that my strictures were not directed at them but at the fact that, since the basis of the bill was fissured with grievous faults, so the completed bill could not help but be faulty as well. It is faulty still and members of the Finance Committee during this very debate have pointed out many of these faults. Why perpetuate them?

Eighth. I made no claim to being a social-security expert and I refused to endorse any new system. But I pointed out how, increasingly, over the years criticisms of both the present system and its administrators had been piling up and piling up and how essential it was that an absolutely independent investigation be made. I did not find fault with the advisory council set up during the Eightieth Congress. Indeed, I acknowledged their public spirit. But I did say that no thorough-going overhauling can hope to be done unless it has the steady day-after-day attention of a corps of independent experts. I said: "What we want are independent, competent people of standing, who are prepared to give their full time to the work and who shall receive the compensation due to persons of their experience and prestige." I asked that enough money be granted out of the contingent fund to see to it that such a corps could be recruited. I still urge it.

Ninth. I said that this investigation should not spend its time trying to shore up and patch the present system. Nor should it be compelled to restrict its labors to a single alternative. The scope of the inquiry should be broad and permit a wide latitude of investigation. The corps should be men competent and able to give their serious attention to whatever qualified persons ask to appear before them. And I would judge that it would not be too difficult to define the word "qualified." Former President Hoover urged that the investigating body be given a year for their labors. I believe that he was right. Is there not intelligent reason for halting at this point? It is possible to let the country know in the most explicit terms that this halt is not a stall. As I said in my statement: "Why pass a bill that we know is bad, when, with the expenditure of a little more time, we might have legislation that is good?"

Tenth. I called attention to the seriousness of the charges brought against officials of the Social Security Administration. I quoted the Hoover task force. I quoted charges made by persons who had had direct experience with the Social Security Administration. I enumerated instances of manipulated statistics, of calculations distorted and wrenched out of shape. I asked how, if these things should be proved true, it would be possible to trust the Social Security Administration. I still ask those questions. Those charges should be investigated, and by independent people. Do not you yourself think that this should be done?

In the process of considering this bill, I wrote to several hundred persons throughout the country, persons who have had years of experience with social-security problems. Some are actuaries. Some are in other branches of insurance. Some had been officials of the Social Security Administration itself. Some are academics. Some are in business. I asked these persons to write me frankly about their views on the pending bill and how they thought an investigation should be conducted.

Their response has been one of the most extraordinary experiences of my life. As evidence of the care and thought which these people gave to my request, I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 16, 1950, a group of their replies. I enclose a copy of this issue of the RECORD and commend these letters to your attention.

In sum, my position is this: If we are to have a social-security system at all, let us have one that freemen can accept with self-respect. Let us accept and act upon this bald truth:

That our old people, who have done their life's work and have quit, must be helped by those of us who still work. In due time, our children must look after us. Not in the old way of the old folks on the farm, but in the same spirit adapted to the institutions of our day—through taxation. Let us have done with this nonsense of a contributory system, this playing house and calling it insurance.

I accept wholeheartedly this proposition of having us who work help the old folks who have quit. I stand ready to pay as high a tax as my fellow citizens are willing to pay to put such an honest social-security system into operation.

I have refused to support H. R. 6000, not to evade a responsibility, but rather to accept one.

No kid stenographer in her first job in Tacoma will ever be able to accuse me of being an accessory to her defraudation when her retirement age finally comes. No down-and-out logger on the skidroad at the foot of Yesler Way in Seattle will be able to accuse me of forgetting his plight. No part-time apple picker in the Yakima and Wenatchee Valleys will be able to say that I did not recognize and seek to admit and save his rights.

I repeat, I believe that this bill is a truly disastrous mistake and that if we pass it, we will surely and bitterly live to regret it.

I say once more: If we are to look after some of our old people, we must look after them all. And, if we do this, let us find a way to do the whole job up year by year, starting every January 1 with a clean slate. If our Nation's economy gets pinched, the old folks will be pinched also. If we prosper, the aged will share in the Nation's prosperity. This is as it ought to be.

But let us have done with the jobbery that for 15 years we have had the crust to call social security.

With warm personal regards and in hope that you will share my views with the many citizens at home who are concerned and interested, I am, most sincerely and cordially, HARRY P. CAIN, the junior Senator from Washington.

P. S.—Should you wish any future letter to be held in confidence by me, it will only be necessary for you to mark it personal. I am happy that you permitted me to make your present one available to my colleagues and the Nation.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded, and that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Either of the Senators in control of the time must yield to the Senator if he desires to address the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. How much time does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire?

Mr. MYERS. About 20 minutes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield 30 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, we stand on the threshold of completing a legislative achievement of the first order of magnitude. It is probably idle to argue whether our accomplishment in enacting, as we will enact shortly, the pending social-security bill, is the most important social reform of the past decade. But few would doubt the observation that no other domestic program exceeds social security in importance.

Eleven years have passed since Congress made the last substantial revisions of our social-security law. Thus, it is clear that we have at least the task on our hands of bringing the 1939 provisions up to date. Living costs in that 11-year period have jumped nearly 70 percent and the insurance benefits payable under the prewar, preinflation standards are hopelessly out of line with what we should regard as a minimum income sufficient to keep body and soul together.

Naturally, then, our first requirement for the changes we now propose to make is the requirement that benefits be brought back to a level of buying power at least equivalent to the 1939 standard. I feel, however, that the Congress would be remiss in its duty if we were to accomplish no more than to rewrite the law to match today's dollar.

I am proud to say that Congress has shown no intention whatsoever of limiting its action to the social gains achieved 11 years ago. We can look at H. R. 6000 in the form in which it was reported by the House Ways and Means Committee last year; we can look at H. R. 6000 as adopted by the House of Representatives; and we can look at H. R. 6000 as recommended by the Senate Finance Committee, and without exception we will see that far more has been undertaken than merely to bring the law up to the standards of 1939.

Coverage—that is, the number of persons eligible to participate in the Federal retirement insurance program—has been enlarged. The long-recognized goal of universal social security coverage is brought considerably closer by the enlightened action of the House and of the Senate Finance Committee.

Retirement benefit payments, which under existing law average but a pitiful $26 a month, will be raised to an average of $49 monthly if the Senate committee bill is adopted. If some of the amendments to be offered to the pending bill are enacted, the average social security benefits may be increased to as much as $55 a month. Particularly for those of us who live in large urban areas, where living costs are highest, it is difficult to see how an average payment of $50 or so a month can do more than provide the barest kind of subsistence for a single person. Yet, by contrast, $50 is a tremendous stride forward from the present average of $26 monthly.

In addition to increasing the benefit payments, and opening participation in the social security program to another eight or ten million people, the recommendations of the Senate Finance Committee do a great deal to liberalize the eligibility requirements under which a person may become entitled to retirement benefits. The Senate committee has also recommended a much more liberal alternative method for calculating the average wage upon which the ultimate retirement benefits are based.

After having sat for some months as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, listening to the hearings, participating in the long discussions during executive sessions, I have come to appreciate keenly the studious and conscientious manner in which the committee undertook its job of recommending changes in our all-important social security program. Almost without exception, the members of the entire committee were in accord as to the basic machinery of the social security program, agreeing that it was a tested and proven means of providing a bulwark against poverty for those who face a complete loss of income upon retirement.

The arguments of yesteryear that social security would lead to regimentation of our people and plunge us into socialism had no force in the committee's discussion. The experience of 15 years of operation has so thoroughly discredited such arguments that we heard almost none of them among the committee members.

Instead, Mr. President, the disagreements which came up during the Finance Committee's consideration of the social security bill were confined to questions of what we could afford to do at this time to make the social security program more adequate to meet the evident needs of the American people. I might add in this connection that there was no substantial disagreement among committee members as to what the basic needs of our people were. It was agreed that Federal machinery did provide the only practical means whereby our people could plan ahead for their ultimate retirement. It was agreed that the social security program should be made self-supporting through the equal contributions of employee and employer alike. It was agreed that the principle of self-supporting social insurance is much to be preferred over public relief which is supported out of general tax revenues. There was agreement, too, among the committee members that the problem of the disabled worker forced into premature retirement by accident or disease was a most critical one which is not being met now through the limited scope of workmen's compensation laws and private disability insurance.

In short, there was no real disagreement on the part of the committee as to the major needs of our people in terms of income loss. As I say, the vehicle of social security was recognized as the suitable means of meeting these problems, and the question of cost was the only major deterrent to extending the welfare benefits that were considered.

I should like here to say something about this question of cost. As I indicated earlier, it was the intent of the committee to make the social-security program completely self-supporting through the mechanism of wage-tax contributions. The committee estimated in reporting H. R. 6000 that the level premium rate for the insurance benefits proposed in the bill would, some years hence, amount to 6.15 percent of the payroll of those covered by social security. In other words, this would mean that the wage-tax deduction for the employer would finally reach a level somewhat in excess of 3 percent and a similar contribution would be made by the employee.

It is significant here to point out, I believe, the assumption on which the committee based its estimate of a level premium cost amounting to more than 6 percent of payroll. The committee assumed the present levels of economic activity would continue into the future. It assumed that the program would some day cost 6 percent of the 1950 payroll of employees in covered occupations.

But, Mr. President, I do not agree that our present economic levels represent the high tide of American wealth. I have faith, great faith, in the capacity of America to continue its economic growth. I believe the committee in assuming that payrolls would not continue to rise in the future closed its eyes to the history of this country. In the past century, for example, the productive output per worker has increased 600 percent. In the past 60 years there has been an increase in payroll which has averaged 3 percent annually. I believe, Mr. President, that we will continue to see such an expansion here in America. Perhaps our economy has matured, but it has certainly not lost its vitality.

I believe we should assume that payrolls will be greatly larger in the future. If we take even the modest assumption that payrolls will increase 2 percent annually, instead of the 3 percent yearly rise which we have experienced for more than half a century, the level premium rate for the insurance benefits recommended in the Senate bill will not, in fact, amount to 6.15 percent of payroll, by the time all these benefits vest. Instead of 6.15 percent, they would cost only 4.9 percent of payroll, assuming that our economy does expand to the extent of 2 percent yearly in the future.

I think an understanding of this is essential in considering how far we should go at this time in liberalizing the social-security program.

If it is true, in fact, that the benefits proposed by the committee will ultimately cost less than 80 percent as much as the committee thought they would cost in terms of our future buying power, then I say, Mr. President, that we should consider seriously the question of liberalizing the present law still further.

In terms of the insurance program, there are three amendments of major importance which should be adopted at this time. In all three of these instances, the House itself took a more liberal position than did the Senate Finance Committee, though I want to make it clear that the Senate bill was, in many respects, more liberal than the House bill, but in other particulars.

I want to address myself first to the question of disability insurance. I will not develop this in great detail because on Friday of last week I placed in the RECORD a lengthy statement describing the disability-insurance amendment at the time I submitted it for myself and for nine other Senators. Briefly, however, the question of disability is closely related to that of retirement as a result of old age. Disability is simply a premature retirement; a sudden aging, long before it is ordinarily expected, which forces a worker to leave his job and which makes it impossible for him to support himself and his family by any sort of gainful employment. I believe I am correct in saying that the possibility of income loss as a result of a permanent, total disability is one of the most terrifying prospects that lurks uncertainly in the future of anyone. The House adopted a disability-insurance program when it passed H. R. 6000, and the amendment which I submitted on Friday merely seeks to restore, with a few improvements which I outlined at the time, the disability feature set forth in the House bill.

Two other amendments of prime importance deal with the formula used to calculate retirement benefit payments. The House and the Senate Finance Committee have both recommended major changes in the benefit formula which is now the law, and in either instance, the average retirement benefits will be about doubled over what they are now. However, the present requirement established in 1939, of a $3,000 wage and tax base, means that an employee who earns more than $250 a month contributes to the insurance fund only on the basis of $250 of his monthly earnings—and correspondingly, the benefits which he will receive upon retirement are thus limited to a maximum average monthly earning of $250, regardless of what his average earnings had been. At the time this $3,000 limitation was placed in the law in 1939, 95 percent of those whom the law covered had yearly earnings less than that amount. The Senate Advisory Council on Social Security, speaking through 15 of its 17 members, recommended that the wage and tax base be advanced to $4,200 to bring it in line with the present high level of wages. The Senate Finance Committee, however, recommended that the present wage base of $3,000 be retained and the House agreed to the figure of $3,600. I believe it imperative that the wage base be increased to $4,200 in order that we may continue to make effective the policy established by Congress in the 1939 social security revisions.

The second major amendment to the more liberal benefit formula of the Senate bill deals with the so-called increment—that is, the means by which the benefits available upon retirement are increased in proportion to the number of years an employee has contributed to the pension fund. Under the present law the basic benefit as calculated in the formula is increased by 1 percent for each year the person has worked in covered employment. Under the House bill this increment was reduced to one-half of 1 percent for each year of insurance coverage.

The increment amendment which I submitted for myself and 12 other Senators takes a compromise position between the present law and the House bill. The Senate bill has no increment factor whatsoever. Under our proposal, benefits would be increased by 1 percent for each year an insured person contributed to the system prior to 1951, and for the years following 1950, the increment would be reduced to one-half of 1 percent. In short, the compromise recognizes the rights of those who contributed to the system during the period the increment was 1 percent, and then reduces the increment in the future.

To me it is only reasonable that the benefits available on retirement should reflect the number of years that an employee contributed to the pension fund. Yet, under the Senate bill, a retired person receives a benefit calculated only on his average wages, and it makes no difference whether he has contributed to the system for 3 years, or 40 years, prior to retirement.

At least until we arrive at the point that social security covers every working person, I believe we should recognize the principle that a worker should receive a greater benefit according to the years he has contributed to the system. This has the psychological advantage of encouraging him to remain in covered employment, and it is in line with the sound practices of private industrial pensions where, as a general rule, benefits vary according to the years of service for the company.

Taken together, the three amendments—disability insurance, the increase of the wage and tax base from the present level of $3,000 to $4,200, and the restoration of the increment to the Senate committee recommendations—will add, according to the assumptions of the committee as to future costs, about 1¾ percent of payroll. In other words, the level premium rate of 6.15 percent of payroll estimated by the committee for its own bill would, with these three amendments, come to about 8 percent of payroll.

As I indicated earlier, however, I believe the economy of America will continue to expand in the future, and if we use the conservative estimate of a 2 percent average annual increase in payroll, the Senate bill, plus the three amendments I have just discussed, will have a level premium rate of about 6.3 percent, instead of the 8 percent as estimated by the committee's assumption of a static economy in the future.

Since the committee agreed to a level premium rate of 6.15 percent as a reasonable cost for the social-security system, the figure of 6.3 percent is in line with this thinking, and I strongly urge the Senate to put its stamp of approval on the amendments providing disability insurance, the $4,200 wage base, and the increment factor.

I wish to refer generally to other amendments that are pending, which would, in my opinion, further strengthen the many improvements recommended by the Senate committee bill. I have submitted two amendments relating to blind persons—one of which deals with the Federal grants to States for blind pensions; and since I have already issued a statement describing that amendment, I shall not go further into it at this time. My second amendment for the blind restores a provision of the House bill which would cut off Federal grants to States which require blind persons to have more than 1 year of residence to become eligible for blind pensions. In view of the fact that a majority of our States have residence requirements of a year or less, this seems only fair; and the Senate Advisory Council took the position that there should be no time-of-residence requirement at all for the blind.

I endorse in principle the extension of public assistance grants to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. I support the caretaker amendment for dependent children, and believe it to be of utmost importance. I support generally the amendments to liberalize the insurance coverage provisions for salesmen, agent drivers, and so forth.

Insofar as the portions of the bill dealing with unemployment compensation are concerned, I strongly support the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], to provide reinsurance grants to States to enable them to expand their existing unemployment compensation programs. This is not a matter of collecting new taxes for this purpose, but it is simply a question of making full and good use of the entire amount of the Federal unemploment tax, instead of allowing a part of the tax money to be drafted off for other purposes.

The junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], has submitted to the pending bill an amendment which is, according to his explanation, designed to restore to States the right to operate their unemployment compensation programs without Federal intervention. This amendment, I believe, goes much further in its effect than its supporters contend. Furthermore, the amendment was not considered by the Senate Finance Committee; there have been no hearings upon it; and where a proposal so important as this is brought up more or less at the last minute, I firmly believe we should reject it at this time, and should refer the matter to the Senate Finance Committee for hearings and study, before acting upon it.

In closing, Mr. President, I wish to state once more my belief that in passing the pending social-security bill, we are undertaking one of the most important domestic reforms of recent years. The bill as it passed the House was a good bill. The bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee after the most careful study was a good bill.

There are, as I have indicated in a general way, some improvements which can be made without materially increasing the costs of our retirement insurance and public-assistance programs.

The over-all value in terms of our economy and in terms of the health and livelihood of our people, is immense. No longer do we hear social security attacked as socialistic, and no longer is it referred to as regimentation. It has proven itself. We here, by improving the good which the program is capable of accomplishing, are doing more to promote the economic health of our country and the material security of our people than we can readily imagine.

Our ultimate goal, of course, is universal coverage under social security by use of the self-supporting contributory pension system. The proposals before us, and which we will enact, are a major stride toward that goal—which is, in the final analysis, a prosperous and secure America under an ever-expanding free-enterprise system.

Mr. MILLIKIN obtained the floor.

POLITICAL EXPENDITURES FROM PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION FUNDS

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield 12 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, on April 11, I called the attention of the Senate to the circumstances relating to a State meeting of the Production and Marketing Administration, held in St. Paul, Minn., on April 3 and 4.

At that time I pointed out an apparent misuse of public funds incurred in paying salary and expenses of community committeemen in attending this meeting to hear the Secretary of Agriculture make a political speech.

I made it clear at the time that I had no criticism and made no charge of illegality against a meeting of county committeemen on April 3 and 4 for the purpose of discussing and formulating a State PMA program for the State of Minnesota.

As a result of the disclosures made, the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General, directed an investigation of the circumstances surrounding this St. Paul meeting.

The Secretary of Agriculture, apparently much disturbed by the investigation of the St. Paul meeting, wrote to Mr. Warren, under date of June 1, 1950, a letter which was clearly intended to justify the expenditure of public funds in connection with this meeting and the part which he himself played in it.

This letter was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 15 by the junior Senator from Minnesota. The Secretary of Agriculture made so many misleading inferences in this letter that I cannot let the matter go unnoticed.

I now ask to have inserted at this point in my remarks a copy of the letter written to Hon. Lindsay C. Warren by Charles F. Brannan, the Secretary of Agriculture, under date of June 1, 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
June 1, 1950.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General.

DEAR MR. WARREN: I appreciate the opportunity you have given me to outline the nature and circumstances of the meeting of Production and Marketing personnel held at St. Paul, Minn., on April 3 and 4, 1950, which I addressed and about which there has been some criticism on the floor of the Senate.

First, something about the character of the meeting. This was an ordinary staff meeting of the same type and purpose as many others held by this agency and other agencies and bureaus of the Department of Agriculture for many years, and, I am confident, held by many other agencies of Government from time to time. There were about 2,322 Production and Marketing Administration committeemen at the meeting. Of this number, about 245 were county committeemen, and about 2,077 were community committeemen. The per diem and travel expenses of the county committeemen amounts to approximately $8,100. The per diem and travel costs of the attending community committeemen amounts to approximately $34,000. If I understand Senator AIKEN's statements correctly, he objects only to the presence at the meeting of the community committeemen. It is clear from the following excerpt from the record that Senator AIKEN does not object to the presence of the county committeemen at this meeting:

"On April 3 and 4 the county committeemen of the Production and Marketing Administration for the State of Minnesota met in St. Paul. This was an annual meeting, a perfectly proper meeting called for the purpose of developing an agricultural conservation program for 1951.

"These programs have generally bene beneficial to each of the 48 States and to the national agricultural economy.

"The 2-day meeting of the county committeemen at St. Paul was for a perfectly logical and legitimate purpose.

"However, Mr. President, an incident connected with this meeting was, in my opinion, neither logical nor legitimate" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 11, p. 5050).

The farmer committeemen carry out the program authorized by the Congress and which are assigned to the Production and Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture. It is undoubtedly the most efficient and least costly means of accomplishing the task. Please note that the county committeemen and the community committeemen do identical types of work. Only the geographic area of responsibility is different, although the county committeemen act in a somewhat supervisory capacity over the community committeemen. Both county and community committeemen receive the same scale of remuneration, paid from the same sources and for the same types of service.

Section 7 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1938, as amended, provides as follows:

"The Secretary (of Agriculture) shall designate local administrative areas (communities or townships) as units of administration of programs under this section. No such local area shall include more than one county or parts of different counties. Farmers within any such local administrative area, and participating or cooperating in programs administered within such area, shall elect annually from among their number a local committee of not more than three members for such area and shall also elect annually from among their number a delegate to a county convention for the election of a county committee. The delegates from the various local areas in the county shall, in a county convention, elect annually the county committee for the county which shall consist of three members who are farmers in the county. The local committee shall select a secretary and may utilize the county agricultural extension agent."

In accordance with this provision of the law, annual and nonpartisan elections are held in each agricultural community in the United States. In 1949 elections were held in 29,106 communities and that many community committees were elected with about 87,000 committee members. These committeemen are charged with the responsibility of administering the PMA programs in their communities for 1950. They do not receive a fixed salary for their services but do receive a daily wage and travel expenses. This is an important variance from the status of the usual Federal employee, who when in travel status receives his salary plus a travel per diem, plus railroad fare or car mileage.

In administering the PMA programs for the fiscal year 1948–49, community committeemen were paid an average of $6.30 per day for an average of 6.5 days spent in carrying on PMA program work. The balance of the time which they devoted to program work was performed without remuneration from any Government sources whatsoever. Nearly all committeemen spend considerably more of their time in program work for which they receive no compensation. They are working for improved conditions for agriculture and for the Nation and their remuneration comes from the satisfaction in this service.

County committeemen received an average of $6.90 per day for an average of 44.1 days work on the programs during the same fiscal year 1948–49. They, too, work many more days than they are compensated for.

It is noteworthy that the committeemen would receive approximately the same amount of money throughout the year for work done whether or not they made this trip to St. Paul. There is just so much money available for the reimbursement of community committeemen and when that sum is used up they continue to work thereafter without remuneration. The implication that representative American farmers could be bribed or induced to attend a meeting by the offer of $8 per day plus 5 cents a mile for travel is unthinkable, unwarranted, and unjust to American farmers.

All of these committeemen are elected to their positions annually and although many are reelected year after year, it is necessary to carry on a program of training in order that the new members may be acquainted with their duties and both the new members and the old members acquainted with the changes in the programs as those changes are authorized from time to time by the Congress and established by the Secretary.

Conferences for the purpose of training and instructing new committeemen occur annually through the entire United States. Some of these conferences are held in smaller groups at various places throughout the State with the State committee people traveling to these various meetings. The method of instruction is left to he discretion of the State committee people, many of whom find it desirable to bring the committeemen together once a year for a general discussion of programs.

The conferences are carefully planned and are hard-working affairs. The farmer committeemen who attend receive appreciable benefit from the straight program training and instruction which is made available to them. It has also been found that in the conduct of these conferences a very useful purpose can be served by providing committeemen with the opportunity to hear first hand the views of some of the leading agriculturists in the country. This has led to the general practice of inviting well-known and accepted agricultural leaders to participate on conference programs. For example, the principal speaker at the Vermont State PMA conference this year was Senator GEORGE D. AIKEN. The North Carolina State PMA conference this year invited Senator CLYDE R. HOEY as its main speaker. Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND spoke at the Florida State PMA conference. It has been a generally accepted practice when time would permit for the Secretary of Agriculture to attend one or more of these State conferences throughout the year. Each of the two preceding Secretaries of Agriculture had spoken at an identical type of meeting in Minnesota and at many other such meetings in other States.

The two Senators from Minnesota were invited to attend this meeting. Senator EDWARD J. THYE did not attend. The invitation to him and his reply are attached. Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY did appear on the program.

In 1948, the then Secretary of Agriculture, CLINTON P. ANDERSON, was the principal speaker and discussed existing and proposed farm legislation.

The same kind of an invitation or notice of Mr. ANDERSON'S expected attendance at the meeting was issued in which attention of the committeemen was called to the fact that per diem and travel would be allowed.

So that you may judge the character of the remarks made by me during the session, I have supplied you with a transcript of a recording taken at the meeting. I also have a recording for your use if you care to check against the written transcript. I especially invite your attention to the fact that this was a discussion of the farm problem. No reference was made to a political party or to a political candidate (unless Allan Kline is now a political candidate). The listeners were not exhorted to vote in one fashion or another or any issue whatsoever; in fact, the question of voting is not mentioned specifically or by innuendo.

Without respect to the question as to whether or not such meetings are sound administration or are authorized by law—my views on these two points being very clear that they are both wise and lawful—I believe these conclusions are inescapable:

First, the community committeemen who attended this meeting will have received at the end of the year no more money than if they had not attended this meeting. Approximately so much money is available each year for administrative costs and when these funds are exhausted, the farmers continue their work without remuneration. They would have earned this money before the year was out in some other fashion.

Second, there is nothing about the convening or conduct of this meeting which is in any wise different from many other meetings which have been held this year and in previous years throughout the country by this and many other agencies of Government.

Third, there is nothing different about this meeting than previous meetings held in this State, even including the nature, phraseology, and character of the notice or invitation sent to the community committeemen.

Fourth, community committeemen and county committeemen are engaged in the very same type of program and, therefore, if, as it is already acknowledged, this meeting was perfectly proper as far as county committeemen are concerned, it very logically follows that it was equally proper as far as community committeemen are concerned.

Fifth, the fact that Senator HUMPHREY addressed this meeting in political terms cannot be charged to those who organized the meeting or to the Secretary of Agriculture. Senator THYE, a member of the opposite party, was invited and could have spoken as vehemently on the other side of the same issues if he had chosen to do so. I do not believe it wise to exclude Members of Congress from these meetings, and I assume that Senator AIKEN agrees for he has availed himself of such opportunity subsequent to the date he took exception to the St. Paul meeting.

Obviously, if there is any additional information which we can supply to you with regard to this matter, we shall be pleased to do so.

Yours truly,

CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
Secretary.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the Secretary states in paragraph 2:

This was an ordinary staff meeting of the same type and purpose as many others held by this agency and other agencies and bureaus of the Department of Agriculture for many years.

Let us analyze this statement.

First, it was not an ordinary staff meeting, as far as the second day was concerned. It was a huge convention arranged to hear the Secretary of Agriculture promote the Brannan plan and attack a great farm organization which has 70,000 members in the State of Minnesota alone. As a matter of fact, the Secretary discarded the speech which he had prepared and released to the press in advance, and then delivered his 100-percent political oration, in violation of title 18, section 201 of the United States Code, which I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The excerpt from the United States Code is as follows:

TITLE 18. CRIMINAL CODE AND CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

SEC. 201. Use of appropriations to pay for personal service to influence Member of Congress to favor or oppose legislation.

No part of the money appropriated by any act shall, in the absence of express authorization by Congress, be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress, to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress, whether before or after the introduction of any bill or resolution proposing such legislation or appropriation; but this shall not prevent officers and employees of the United States from communicating to Members of Congress on the request of any Member or to Congress, through the proper official channels, requests for legislation or appropriations which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business.

Any officer or employee of the United States who, after notice and hearing by the superior officer vested with the power of removing him, is found to have violated or attempted to violate this section shall be removed by such superior officer from office or employment. Any officer or employee of the United States who violates or attempts to violate this section shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both (July 11, 1919, ch. 6, sec. 6, 41 Stat. 68).

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the Secretary's statement that this meeting was of the "same type and purpose as many others held by this agency" is interesting, indeed. I was advised some time ago that audiences had been hired for the Secretary of Agriculture on other occasions. I did not expect such a frank admission as appears in the Secretary's letter to Mr. Warren.

I have written the Secretary asking him to give me a complete list of meetings where expenses and salary have been paid communty committeemen to attend State meetings.

In the same paragraph of the Secretary's letter he makes a complete misstatement. He states:

> There were about 2,322 Production and Marketing Administration committeemen at the meeting. Of this number, about 245 were county committeemen and about 2,077 were community committeemen.

This statement of the Secretary is in sharp contrast to the press reports, which estimated the attendance at the meeting as high as 8,000.

As a matter of fact, the attendance at the meeting did approximate between five and six thousand.

There were evidently between 3,300 and 4,000 community committeemen in attendance; but after learning of the irregularities engaged in by the State chairman of the PMA for Minnesota and the United States Department of Agriculture, over one-third of these community committeemen, and possibly as high as 40 percent, did not submit any claim for salary and travel expenses. As a matter of fact, the number in attendance is immaterial. It is just as wrong for a public official to pay a few people for political purposes as it would be to pay all of them.

It appears that, up to May 15, 2,043 did submit claims for reimbursement, and the cost was approximately $34,000.

However, should all the community committeemen whom the State committee had agreed to pay for attendance at this meeting submit claims for reimbursement, the cost would be over $50,000, as indicated in my statement to this body on April 11.

The Secretary quotes section 7 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1938 in his letter to Comptroller General Warren. Just how section 7 (b) justifies wrongful expenditure of funds in connection with the St. Paul meeting of April 3 and 4, 1950, is not apparent.

It is section 388 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 which authorizes the payment of salary and expenses to county committeemen to attend state meetings. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have section 388 (b) of the triple A Act of 1938 inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Section 388 (b) is as follows:

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

UTILIZATION OF LOCAL AGENCIES

SEC. 388. * * *

(b) The Secretary is authorized and directed, from any funds made available for the purposes of the Act in connection with which county committees are utilized, to make payments to county committees of farmers to cover the estimated administrative expenses incurred or to be incurred by them in cooperating in carrying out the provisions of such Acts. All or part of such estimated administrative expenses of any such committee may be deducted pro rata from the Soil Conservation Act payments, parity payments, or loans, or other payments under such acts, made unless payment of such expenses is otherwise provided by law. The Secretary may make such payments to such committees in advance of determination of performance by farmers. (7 U. S. C. 1940 ed. 1388 (b), February 16, 1938, 52 Stat. 68.)

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it is clear that the law was not intended to cover the payment of salary and expenditures of all community committeemen to attend such meetings. If that were the purpose, why have not salary and travel expenses been allowed community committeemen to attend all other State PMA meetings?

The answer is that this is not the intent of the law.

The Secretary, on page 3 of his letter states:

> The implication that representative American farmers could be bribed or induced to attend a meeting by the offer of $8 per day plus 5 cents a mile for travel is unthinkable, unwarranted and unjust to American farmers.

The Secretary hits below the belt in this statement. He knows there was no such implication in my statement of April 11.

The community committeemen of Minnesota were virtually instructed to attend this meeting by a series of communications and by personal direction from higher officials; in fact, the field men were put on the road so as to make sure that they would attend this meeting.

Many of the committeemen undoubtedly could not afford to attend the meeting unless reimbursed for their expenses. The fact that over one-third of them did not submit expense accounts when they found that they had been summoned to attend a political pow-wow is, in itself, a high tribute to the integrity of the Minnesota community committeemen.

I would make no complaint if they had all submitted claims for reimbursement, for I doubt whether hardly any of them knew that their superior officials were acting in an improper manner in directing their attendance at this meeting.

As a matter of fact, one county chairman protested the action of the State chairman, and only under extreme pressure and at the last moment advised his community committeemen to attend.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado. I think I can get through in time to yield to the Senator from Minnesota for a minute, perhaps.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. I have never heard of any farm meeting where so much pressure was exerted to secure an audience as at this meeting in St. Paul on the afternoon of April 4.

From time to time, Department officials have tried to make it appear that the community committeemen attended the meeting to hear some 20 other speakers discuss the PMA program. The fact is the community committeemen were not invited to attend the first day's session, when speeches relating to the work of PMA programs were made. They were directed to be on hand the second day, to hear the Secretary of Agriculture.

When one is caught red-handed in violating a principle or a law, Mr. President, he usually tries to point out as many other people as he can who are also guilty, in order to justify his own act. He also tries to make it appear that people who are not guilty have indulged in the same practices in which he himself has been caught.

In his letter to Comptroller General Warren, Secretary Brannan undertakes to further excuse the manipulating of the St. Paul meeting by pointing out that the senior Senator from Vermont, the senior Senator from North Carolina, and the junior Senator from Florida also spoke at State PMA conferences. The inference is that these conferences were similar to the Minnesota conference, at which the Secretary delivered his political speech.

I am sure the senior Senator from North Carolina and the junior Senator from Florida are amply able to defend themselves against any charges by the Secretary of Agriculture. I wish, in all fairness, to state that the Vermont PMA conference, which I have attended for many years, almost from its inception, was vastly different from the Minnesota State meeting at St. Paul. It was, as usual, a conference of county committeemen legally called for the purpose of formulating recommendations for the next year's program.

I resent any inference on the part of the Secretary that the Vermont State PMA Committee has at any time indulged in the wrongful expenditure of funds or political practices. I think this assertion will hold true for nearly all PMA State committees. Certainly, the meetings I have attended adhered strictly to the business for which the county committeemen were called together.

The Secretary of Agriculture also attempts to justify his political speech at St. Paul on April 4 by pointing out that the two preceding Secretaries of Agriculture had done exactly the same thing.

Mr. Brannan lends particular emphasis by his statement that in 1948 the then Secretary of Agriculture, Clinton P. Anderson, addressed a similar type of meeting in Minnesota and many other such meetings in other States. This statement simply is not in accord with my understanding of the facts. I assume that the junior Senator from New Mexico is amply able to defend himself against any charges of this nature made by the present Secretary of Agriculture. But even if this charge be true, it still does not warrant a continuance of wrongful practices by the present Secretary.

I have been reluctant to make this statement today, Mr. President, but I cannot let the inferences and insinuations contained in Secretary Brannan's letter to Comptroller General Warren go unnoticed. I have been reluctant to make this statement, because I have hoped against hope that the Secretary of Agriculture would put aside his political maneuvering and would attend to the business of promoting a healthy and stable agriculture under the laws enacted by the Congress.

I have been reluctant to do or say anything which would cast doubt and suspicion upon the officials and employees of the United States Department of Agriculture, who have had an enviable record of accomplishment and integrity, who want to do their work well, and who now have been placed in a position embarrassing to most of them by the political manipulations of the administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator yield 5 seconds more?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield for as long as it takes the Senator to conclude, not exceeding 5 minutes.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

I will not willingly tolerate the use of this great Department of Government as a political front for any party or philosophy of government, and I appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture to untangle himself from the web he has woven and to administer the work of his office in the worthy manner of which I believe him to be capable.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield sufficient time to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], so that he may in turn yield to me for a moment or two, in order that I may be enabled not only to support the statements made by the Senator from Vermont, but may also make one or two comments in connection therewith?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator suggests a moment or two. We will make it 2 minutes.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the city of St. Paul is, of course, in the State of Minnesota, the State I in part represent, and it was most unfortunate that such a meeting as the one referred to should have been held in St. Paul, because of the apparent black eye, to use a familiar expression, which the entire farm program received from that strictly political gathering and political speech, in connection with the gathering of PMA officials in the State of Minnesota.

I have heard from a considerable number of county and township committeemen within the State who attended the meeting with the expectation of having a discussion of the farm program and possible future problems in the administration of that program. These men, assembled as they were in the auditorium in St. Paul to listen to discussions of the farm program and of the farm question in general, found themselves compelled to listen to speeches, and every utterance bore the aspect of a political appeal.

They came away from that meeting regretting that such speeches had been made. Some of the PMA county committeemen have written to me stating that they have not submitted their expense accounts, that their consciences would not permit them to submit expense accounts in connection with attending that meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me another half minute?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield another full minute.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, such conferences at which such political activities take place within the conference hall are bound to destroy the farm program and the confidence of the public in a farm program.

Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont has not only rendered a service to the Department of Agriculture, but to the Members of Congress, by pointing up what took place at the conference in St. Paul.

In behalf of the PMA county committeemen and the township committeemen, I want to say that Minnesota has a group of men who are as much concerned about the farm program as is any PMA group of administrators who can be found in any State. If any reflection has been cast on the PMA officials of Minnesota, I hope it will be speedily erased, because those men were not responsible; they were not the ones who called the meeting. The calling of the meeting was encouraged by officials in Washington, in my humble opinion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield further in order that I may complete my thought?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I hope it will be a warning to the officials of the Department of Agriculture and PMA officials in the various States of the Union that they should not again conduct themselves in the manner in which they conducted themselves in St. Paul.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I sent to the desk an amendment to House bill 6000 which I intend to call up and offer at the appropriate time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for a quorum call be rescinded and that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I intend to call up later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2335. An act to make certain revisions in titles I and III of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended; and

S. 3639. An act providing for an extension of the time during which annual assessment work at mining claims held by location in the United States may be made.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BYRNE of New York, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. JENNINGS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 1082. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon any claim arising out of personal injuries sustained by the Bunker Hill Development Corp.;

H. R. 2230. An act to reimburse Arthur S. Horner, Leah B. Horner, and Maude Brewer, partners composing a firm, doing business as A. S. Horner Construction Co.;

H. R. 4371. An act for the relief of Shiro Takemura;

H. R. 5019. An act for the relief of Fella H. Holbrook;

H. R. 5682. An act for the relief of William T. Orton; and

H. R. 6691. An act for the relief of Paul D. Banning, Chief Disbursing Officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 2803. An act for the relief of Albert J. Peterson;

H. R. 3254. An act for the relief of Iva Gavin;

H. R. 5846. An act for the relief of Mrs. Lillian Coolidge; and

H. R. 6934. An act for the relief of E. H. Corrigan.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6339. An act to authorize a preliminary examination and investigation to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a multipurpose tunnel through the Laguna Mountains in San Diego County, Calif.;

H. R. 7431. An act for expenditure of funds for cooperating with the public-school board at Walker, Minn., for the extension of public-school facilities to be available to all Indian children in the district, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7824. An act to provide for the administration of performance-rating plans for certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7934. An act to reduce and revise the boundaries of the Joshua Tree National Monument in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7982. An act to abolish the Wheeler National Monument, in the State of Colorado, and to provide for the administration of the land contained therein as a part of the national forest within which such national monument is situated, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8610. An act relating to the activities of temporary and certain other employees of the Bureau of Land Management; and

H. J. Res. 480. Joint resolution extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 3436. An act to amend the War Contractors Relief Act, as amended;

H. R. 3498. An act for the relief of the Gulckin Corp.;

H. R. 4100. An act for the relief of Calvin E. Cranford;

H. R. 4163. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mr. C. S. Walker;

H. R. 4960. An act for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth H. Whitney;

H. R. 5979. An act for the relief of John Tweit;

H. R. 6652. An act for the relief of Mrs. Fujiko Chichie Imbert, wife, and Robert Imbert, Jr., son of an American soldier;

H. R. 7050. An act for the relief of Louie Gam Yean;

H. R. 7065. An act for the relief of Kazuko Miyama Akana and Chang King Akana;

H. R. 7066. An act for the relief of Setsuko Amano;

H. R. 7073. An act for the relief of Kote Kogami Kitsu and Jeannette Akemi Kitsu;

H. R. 7199. An act for the relief of Nobuko Maeda;

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Mrs. Bernard Smith;

H. R. 7315. An act for the relief of Baijiro Yoshida;

H. R. 7362. An act for the relief of Mrs. Willard Thulin (formerly Jutta Kono);

H. R. 7416. An act for the relief of Suzuko Takanashi;

H. R. 7579. An act to extend the Rubber Act of 1948 (Public Law 469, 80th Cong.), and for other purposes;

H. R. 7656. An act for the relief of David George Callaway;

H. R. 7658. An act for the relief of Mitsuko Ito;

H. R. 7682. An act for the relief of Mrs. Akiko Osada Gustafson; and

H. R. 8270. An act relating to the renewal of contracts for the carrying of mail on star routes.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 6339. An act to authorize a preliminary examination and investigation to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a multipurpose tunnel through the Laguna Mountains in San Diego County, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Works.

H. R. 7431. An act for expenditure of funds for cooperating with the public-school board at Walker, Minn., for the extension of public-school facilities to be available to all Indian children in the district, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7934. An act to reduce and revise the boundaries of the Joshua Tree National Monument in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7982. An act to abolish the Wheeler National Monument, in the State of Colorado, and to provide for the administration of the lands contained therein as a part of the national forest within which such national monument is situated, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8610. An act relating to the activities of temporary and certain other employees of the Bureau of Land Management; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

H. R. 7824. An act to provide for the administration of performance-rating plans for certain officers and employees of the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

H. J. Res. 480. Joint resolution extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers; to the Committee on Finance.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. GEORGE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 480) extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 1848) thereon.

RECESS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire whether any Senators desire to speak on the bill at this time. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we cannot vote until 4 o'clock. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 3:45 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3:45 o'clock p. m.

On the expiration of the recess, the Senate reassembled and was called to order by the Vice President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 118. An act for the relief of Clemente Sabin Dopico;

S. 330. An act for the relief of George Gabriel Herrmann, Greta (Marketa) Herrmann (wife), and Alice Herrmann (daughter), known also as George Gabriel Herman, Greta Herman, and Alice Herman;

S. 1165. An act to provide relief for the sheep-raising industry by making special quota immigration visas available to certain alien sheepherders;

S. 1452. An act for the relief of Dr. Juan A. Queralt Balleste;

S. 1484. An act for the relief of Augustino Marlia;

S. 1637. An act for the relief of Marie Henriette de Bruyn;

S. 2107. An act for the relief of Georges Gregory Alpiar;

S. 2265. An act for the relief of Marina George Papadopoulos;

S. 2309. An act for the relief of Oscar (Oszkar) Nemenyi, Marianna Nemenyi (wife), and Thomas John Nemenyi (son);

S. 2397. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands in the State of Minnesota to Signa M. Lodoen and Nels R. Lodoen;

S. 2510. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Anson Harold Pease, a Crow allottee, a patent in fee to certain lands;

S. 2511. An act for the relief of Dr. John R. Portaria;

S. 2551. An act to authorize the sale of certain allotted land on the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak.;

S. 2552. An act to authorize the sale of certain allotted land on the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak.;

S. 2556. An act for the relief of Mrs. Billy J. Knight and Dorothea Knight;

S. 2629. An act for the relief of Marianne Bruchner;

S. 2714. An act for the relief of Thomas Pfeiffer;

S. 3029. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Wilbur J. Scott;

S. 3128. An act to authorize the sale of certain allotted inherited land on the Winnebago Reservation, Nebr.; and

S. 3130. An act to authorize the sale of certain allotted inherited land on the Winnebago Reservation, Nebr.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6013) to amend an act fixing the price of copies of records furnished by the Department of the Interior, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 6013) to amend an act fixing the price of copies of records furnished by the Department of the Interior, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON CERTAIN MINING CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3639) providing for an extension of the time during which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States may be made, which were, on page 1, line 6, after "States", insert a comma and "including Alaska,"; on page 1, line 8, strike out all after "October" over to and including "act" in line 3, page 2 and insert "1950: Provided, That assessment work or improvements required for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1951, may be commenced immediately following 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1950," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act providing for an extension of the time during which annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States, including Alaska, may be made, and for other purposes."

Mr. CORDON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1950

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public-assistance and child-welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the agreement, the Senate is to begin voting at 4 o'clock. Does the Senator from Georgia wish to be recognized?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall yield to the majority leader, but, first of all, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Montana.

DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS IN PRIVATE RETIREMENT PLANS AND UNDER A FEDERAL PROGRAM

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a statement which I have had prepared on Disability Insurance Benefits in Private Retirement Plans and Under a Federal Program.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I am deeply interested in the various provisions of collective-bargaining contracts and private plans providing for old-age, disability, and other welfare benefits. In view of the fact that we are going to vote this afternoon on a proposal to include disability insurance benefits under the Social Security Act, the analysis which I have had prepared shows that it would be of great value to management and labor if permanent total disability insurance were included under the Social Security program.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MURRAY

In considering the need to restore permanent total disability insurance provisions to H. R. 6000 I have explored the experience of private retirement plans for the light it sheds on the problem we have before us. I can think of no better support for the amendment for permanent and total disability insurance than to point out the most salient facts which emerge from this experience. In brief, we find that the need for economic protection against the risk of permanent total disability has long been recognized in private plans; that many employers have initiated and administered programs in an attempt to cover this risk; that this experience has extended over many years; but that inherent limitations generally prevent private plans from meeting this problem completely and satisfactorily.

No reasonable employer has ever failed to be moved by the plight of an old and faithful employee disabled after spending the best part of his working life in the employer's service. It is no wonder, then, to find that the first retirement plan established by industry in the United States was designed to protect disabled workmen. To the American Express Co. goes the distinction for having set up a plan, in 1875, to provide company-paid benefits for permanently incapacitated workers over 60 years of age. That first plan required the worker to have served the company continuously for over 20 years and to be deemed worthy of receiving benefits. This first retirement plan is extremely interesting in that it recognized the relationship between incapacity and old age, a basic retirement issue which is still being debated today. The proposed amendment, which would add disability benefits to the old-age and survivors insurance program, offers a national solution for the interrelated problem of old-age and permanent and total disability.

The problem of retirement for disability has recently attracted widespread attention with the renewal of the drive for pensions on the part of the unions. Some time ago, Fortune magazine carried the results of a poll made in the spring of 1948 by sociologist C. Wright Mills of Columbia University for the United Auto Workers. The poll revealed that the chief cause of insecurity among auto workers today is not job problems or old-age security—since a basic measure of protection already exists for these. The most common cause of worry for this group of workers was how to support themselves and their families in case of serious incapacitating accident or prolonged sickness, for which adequate protection is still lacking. Most of the newer retirement plans negotiated under collective-bargaining agreements are attempting to remedy this gap in protection, by allowing disabled workers to retire before age 65.

Let us now examine the extent and effectiveness of existing insurance protection under private retirement plans. There has been just completed a study of over 200 retirement plans, established or revised in the last 10 years, which provide for the payment of disability insurance benefits. These plans cover establishments employing 3,000,000 workers. Estimates show that this is about one-fourth of the number employed in all the establishments in the country which have retirement plans.

A number of important facts were brought out by this study. First, very few retirement plans are established exclusively for disability retirement. Most retirement plans are essentially designed for old age and allow retirement for disability only incidentally. Some of these retirement plans may have a specific disability clause. The others, and they are in the majority, contain an early retirement option or a vested rights provision under which any covered employee may retire before normal retirement age, provided he meets certain conditions. An employee who becomes disabled may avail himself of these opportunities for early retirement if he meets these conditions.

In the second place, the conditions governing coverage for disability in most plans are such that they exclude a large number of workers employed in the establishments which have such plans. Coverage may be limited to those in certain types of employment, or may be based on amount of earnings, or length of service with the company, or age, or a combination of the latter two—as you will see if you glance at the study prepared by the Social Security Administration.

Thirdly, even if an employee should meet all the requirements for coverage, he may face a new set of hurdles to qualify for benefits when he becomes disabled. Long and continuous service—often of 15 or more years—is usually a required condition for receiving disability benefits. Also, the definition of compensable disability varies from plan to plan. Some may require an employee to be permanently and totally disabled and to have his incapacity certified by a physician. In other plans, the question of what is disability may be left to the discretion of the employer or his pension board. The disadvantages of such indefinite stipulations are many and obvious. For one thing, the employee has no clear idea in advance of whether he can expect anything from the plan if he should become disabled, or even if his disability is recognized, what benefits he may receive. Even if a disabled employee may wish to take advantage of the early retirement option or of the vested rights provided by some of the plans, the condition of a minimum age—usually 55 for the early retirement option—restricts opportunities for disability retirement to the older workers only.

Fourth, the net result of setting requirements for coverage and for eligibility to benefits is that they disqualify many disabled workers from receiving benefits. For instance, the study showed that in a group of retirement plans having specific disability clauses, 55 percent would pay no benefits to a disabled employee with as much as 10 years' service and monthly average earnings of $200 or even $250. Where benefits are payable, the usual retirement benefit formula applied to employees who retire prematurely on account of disability results in such low benefits that they can hardly be regarded as replacement of former earnings. In another group of plans, with early retirement or vested rights provisions, it was found that in over two-thirds of these plans an employee with 10 years of service and monthly average earnings of $200 or $250 would receive a benefit not exceeding $15 a month.

However, the most important disadvantage of retirement plans with disability provisions is not that most retirement plans cover the risk of disability only in a roundabout way, or that they restrict coverage, or that they pay small benefits. It is that they have inherent limitations which are found in all private pension plans.

One of these inherent limitations is that private retirement plans cannot adjust themselves to the normal movement of labor. Workers naturally move about from place to place and from employer to employer in search of work or of better employment conditions. Requirements of long periods of continuous service to qualify for disability benefits tend to tie down labor. In our dynamic industrial economy, such requirements are unrealistic. No individual employer and no single industry can reasonably be expected to provide continuous employment to the same workers for many years. In fact, the history of the industrial development of our country is full of incidents of old industries replaced by new industries and of the movement of industries in search of more favorable conditions for production. Everyone is familiar with the exodus of the textile industry from New England to the South, with ghost towns left in its wake. Today the rise of the television industry is a real threat to the radio industry. As new industries develop or new enterprises are established in old industries, labor must be able to move about to meet the shifting demands of production. Yet an employee covered by a private retirement plan can seldom carry his rights from employer to employer. Dr. Clark Kerr, director of the Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California, in an address before the National Industrial Conference Board on November 22, 1949, describes what he calls the "unfortunate social consequences" of pension plans:

"Private pension plans, except where they provide full and immediate vesting of both the employee's and firm's contribution, and a few of them do, retard such movement. They tend to tie the worker to the company while employed; and hold him in a company-attached labor pool when unemployed. Even with full vesting, since plans vary, workers can be confused and even harassed. By retirement age, if all his employment had been covered by private plans with vesting, he would be drawing income according to the provisions of several different plans. Any one who has moved from one plan to another knows how exasperating this can be."

Although the inflexibility of private plans has been generally recognized, no one as yet has come forward with a workable solution.

The other inherent limitation of private retirement plans is that they cannot be relied upon to assure protection for a risk which may extend over the whole span of an individual's working lifetime. Here we put our finger on what is probably the most serious weakness of private plans. Their continued existence may be very precarious. They may be discontinued at any time by their sponsors, or because of economic conditions. Full funding of a pension plan is the only way to assure employee security if the company fails. But this is beyond the means of many firms, particularly small firms. Today, 95 percent of our business firms, or over 3,000,000 establishments, have less than 20 employees. These firms are most sensitive to economic stresses, and business failures among them is as high as 5 to 10 percent annually even in the most prosperous years. With the best of intentions, therefore, private retirement plans can be no more stable than the life of the sponsoring firm.

If we try to discover why private retirement plans place restrictions on coverage and eligibility for benefits for disability retirement, we find that costs bulk largely behind these restrictions. To assure responsibility for payment of disability benefits to a disabled employee for the rest of his life, however small the payments may be, is a financial burden which few employers can bear individually—just as in the case of old age. For this reason, employers cushion their disability retirement plans with all kinds of restrictions. These are justifiable safeguards for the employer's plan. In no other field of industrial relations must management assume a financial burden at all comparable with the liabilities of a retirement plan. That is why retirement plans with disability benefits are usually found among the larger and the older companies. For the 3,000,000 small firms which are the majority of all business firms, private disability retirement plans—establishing them, financing them, funding them—are simply prohibitive. Furthermore, spreading the risk of disability or, for that matter, any other similar risk, over their small labor force is actuarially unsound.

There are seven risks which require social action, either compulsory or voluntary. Three of these social security risks—old age, dependent survivorship, permanent total disability—may be considered long-range risks; they are one-time occurrences in the life of a worker. The remaining four—industrial injuries, unemployment, temporary sickness disability, and medical care—are short-term or current risks. Mr. J. W. Myers, manager of the insurance and social security department of the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), who has been administering plans for employee pensions and other types of benefits for over 30 years, has recently commented on the nature of these risks:

"The long-range category comprises nonrepetitive risks which involve accumulating liabilities beyond the resources of average individuals and which transcend State lines. Thus, they lend themselves to uniform treatment by Federal legislation based on a long-term record of wages or contributions. The short-range risks involve repeated occurrences and, to a larger extent, danger of malingering. These lend themselves more readily to State, community, or voluntary procedures, particularly direct dealings between employer and employee." (J. W. Myers, Governmental and Voluntary Programs for Security, Harvard Business Review, March 1950.)

The problem of retirement for long-range risks must be handled on a broader basis. The Federal Government is best adapted to meet the long-range needs of the population that necessarily involve long-range commitments. This is the opinion of most thoughtful students of workers' security, whether they come from the ranks of management, labor, government, or academic life. Dr. Clark Kerr sums up succinctly the reasons why government can best assume these risks:

"The advantages of the Federal insurance system are that it is fully contributory and universal in coverage; it treats like situated individuals alike; it permits full mobility of workers, and it has adequate financial backing."

The same opinion was recently expressed by Mr. Charles E. Wilson, the president of General Motors, who said: "Adequate Federal pensions operated on a sound basis would seem to be the real answer to the pension problem." And still upon another occasion, he said that Federal pensions "would greatly reduce the pension problem for businessmen, unions, and employees." Essentially the same position was taken by the Advisory Council on Social Security appointed in 1947 by the Finance Committee of the Senate, and just recently by the House of Representatives' Ways and Means Committee, which provided for disability benefits in H. R. 6000. This is also the opinion of most forward-looking labor leaders. Mr. Harry Becker, director of the United Auto Workers social security department has said, "The basic solution to the problem of retirement security for the aged and incapacitated is through a Federal system of social insurance assuring an adequate level of benefits for all people."

You may ask, then, why labor, which is aware of the inherent limitations of private retirement plans, has so insistently bargained for them, even for the long-range risks. The answer is not hard to find. The unions have attempted to bridge temporarily a long unfilled gap in workers' security. Although unions, particularly those in mass production industries, are actively trying to negotiate retirement, health, and welfare plans through collective bargaining, their major objective continues to be adequate and comprehensive Federal legislation for the long-range risks. The American Federation of Labor, for instance, has stated that negotiated plans "provide, at best, an interim program pending the enactment of comprehensive social insurance legislation."

If the long-term risks are covered by the comprehensive program—and I emphasize the fact that permanent disability is among the long-term risks—current protection against short-term risks, as Mr. Myers points out would remain a very appropriate field for direct dealings between employer and employee. Here, negotiated agreements and other private plans can make invaluable contributions to dispel insecurity resulting from current, temporary hazards.

In summary, it is clear that private retirement plans with disability benefits, whether induced by humanitarian considerations or collective bargaining, or industry's competition for labor, cannot realistically cope with the problem of retirement arising out of permanent disability. Both management and labor recognize that private retirement plans are intrinsically less satisfactory in dealing with long-range risks. Wise statesmanship suggests that we take a conservative, but nevertheless constructive, approach to the problem by providing for permanent total disability benefits under the program already established to safeguard against the other long-range risks of old-age and dependent survivorship. We have had 15 years of experience in administering this program. We have also had considerable experience in handling national disability programs for special groups of the population under laws passed by Congress establishing the railroad-retirement program, the civil-service retirement program, and the veterans programs. Costs which loom so great in private retirement plans would come within manageable bounds in a program of national scope, because the risk of permanent total disability would be spread over the whole population. Administrative savings would follow from integration with old-age and survivors insurance.

I am convinced that the best protection against the risk of permanent total disability would result from an over-all approach by the Federal Government, where all employers and all workers would cooperate in a single program of contributory insurance. That is why I favor restoration of permanent total disability benefits to this bill. The solutions that private retirement plans have offered so far—and there have been honest attempts by private industry, alone or together with labor, to meet the problem of disability retirement—can never be fully satisfactory because of the long-range nature of the risk. The Federal-insurance program is undoubtedly better adapted to assume such risks. Addition of disability benefits to the old-age and survivors insurance program, because it would retain full freedom of movement for labor and would reduce the financial burden on the individual employer, offers the best solution to the problem of disability retirement in our dynamic industrial economy.

The following is a summary of a study entitled "Permanent and Total Disability Benefit Provisions in Industrial Retirement Plans" prepared by the Social Security Administration:

"PART I

"I. SCOPE OF STUDY

"The recent collective-bargaining agreements in the automobile and steel industries have thrown the spotlight on retirement plans that have been set up by industry. A number of these make some provision for immediate benefits to employees who become permanently and totally disabled. In an effort to determine the prevalence of such provisions, an examination was made of approximately 275 retirement plans received by the Division of Research and Statistics of the Social Security Administration between January 1, 1948, and November 1, 1949.[1] Only 77 of these plans contained specific provisions for the retirement of employees because of permanent and total disability. In addition, there were three plans designed especially to provide disability benefits.[2] Thus, there was found a total of 80 plans that can truly be considered as making definite provisions for the risk of total and permanent disability.

"In many retirement plans, however, a permanently and totally disabled employee may obtain benefits under one of two other types of provisions: (1) Early retirement and (2) vested rights. Furthermore, in some plans with disability-benefit provisions, an employee who does not qualify for benefits under the disability provision may qualify under the early retirement or vested-rights provision. Under the early-retirement option, any employee may retire prior to normal retirement age under the conditions specified in the plans, usually age and service. A disabled employee who meets these conditions may avail himself of such an option. For the purpose of this study, only plans with an early-retirement option that permit retirement at age 55 or earlier are considered. There were found 129 such plans.

"Under the vested-rights provision, an employee upon termination of his employment prior to normal retirement age may, under the conditions specified, usually age and service, be entitled to part or all of the plan's assets accumulated in his behalf out of funds contributed by the sponsors of the plan.[3] In most plans, vested rights are in the form of deferred annuities beginning at normal retirement age. In a few, immediate annuities are granted under certain conditions. A disabled employee, who meets these conditions, may avail himself of these vested rights. For the purpose of this study, plans in which the disabled employee may avail himself of these vested rights immediately are considered. Ten such plans were found.

"Thus, of the 275 retirement plans examined, 219 were found to make some provision for employees permanently and totally disabled before normal retirement age. The 219 plans fall in the following four categories:

"Special disability plans	3
Old-age retirement plans with provisions for—
Specific disability benefit	77
Early retirement	129
Vested rights	10

"Practically all of the 219 plans were established or revised since 1940, a large proportion, 67 percent of them, after January 1, 1945. The 80 plans providing disability benefits specifically were generally more recent, nearly 80 percent of them were established or revised since January 1, 1945. They include plans in various industries and in firms or organizations of various sizes, self-insured, insured, contributory and noncontributory plans, and plans sponsored unilaterally by employers, as well as under collective-bargaining agreements. Included are the retirement plans resulting from the recent collective-bargaining agreement between the United Automobile Workers (CIO) and the Ford Motor Co. and that of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. recently revised as a result of its collective-bargaining agreement with the United States Steelworkers of America (CIO).

"While this study is based on a small number of plans that have not been collected especially for the purpose of this study and hence are not necessarily representative, it is estimated that approximately 2,000,000 employees are in establishments in which the 80 plans operate, and approximately 1,000,000 are in establishments in which the other 139 plans are in operation. Tentative estimates indicate that these 3,000,000 employees may represent about one-fourth of the employment in all the establishments having retirement plans.[4]

"The Social Security Administration has been assembling and studying for a long time available information on voluntary retirement plans. It is believed that the characteristics of the plans studied illustrate those generally found in the industrial plans that make some provision for disability benefits. Most of the plans are those of well-known firms or organizations. Many of these plans have received public attention for one reason or another—the inclusion of some special feature, prominence of the employer, importance of the industry in the economy, intensity of collective-bargaining negotiations, etc. The 80 plans, in particular, are those of firms or organizations that have given a great deal of thought to the problem of disability and have made specific provision for this risk.

"II. SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

"Only the three special disability benefit plans and the 77 retirement plans with disability benefit provisions can truly be considered as covering the risk of permanent and total disability. In the other 139 retirement plans, employees must rely on the early retirement or vested rights provisions to claim benefits when they become disabled.

"The provisions for disability benefits present no clear-cut pattern. Except for the recently negotiated plans in the steel industry, few of the retirement plans which contain disability provisions are alike. They are generally tailor-made to fit the financial resources of the sponsors and the composition of the labor force to be covered.

"The 219 plans cover individual firms or establishments, except for the United Mine Workers welfare and retirement fund which is industry-wide. The plans are of varying sizes, ranging from a small establishment with 28 employees to the giant American Telephone & Telegraph Co. with over 650,000 employees.

"Nearly all of the plans are unilateral employer-sponsored plans. That is, they are plans initiated and fully controlled by the employers. Of the 219 plans, only 17 are the result of collective bargaining agreements between employers and trade unions, or plans originally sponsored by employers and later brought within the scope of collective bargaining agreements.[5] These plans are designed essentially to cover production workers and hence include a relatively large number of employees. In plans under collective agreements, the emphasis on specific provisions for disability benefits is quite recent.

"Over 70 percent of the 219 plans are insured plans, that is, they are underwritten by insurance companies; the rest are self-insured by the sponsors. Over 60 percent of the plans are financed jointly by the employers and employees and are, therefore, contributory. The rest are noncontributory, that is, financed entirely by the employer. In retirement plans, there is no need for separate financing arrangement for disability benefits; the contributions are made for the retirement plan as a whole.

"There is considerably greater proportion of contributory and of self-insured plans among the 77 retirement plans with specific disability benefit provisions, than among the other 139 plans as the following table shows:

Distribution of 219 plans, by method of underwriting and of financing

Method of underwriting and of financing	All plans	Special disability benefit plans	Old-age retirement plans with provisions for—
			Specific disability benefit	Early retirement	Vesting rights
Total	219	3	77	129	10
Insured	156	------	30	[1] 116	10
Contributory	116	------	17	[1] 91	8
Noncontributory	40	------	13	25	2
Self-insured	63	3	[2] 47	13	------
Contributory	18	------	[2] 12	6	------
Noncontributory	45	3	35	7	------

[1] Includes 2 plans with both contributory and noncon tributory features.
[2] Includes 1 plan with both contributory and noncontributory features.

"Most plans restrict coverage to certain employees by imposing requirements on the basis of employment classification, earnings, service, and age. The last two are by far the most frequent. In over one-third of the plans age and service combined are the requirement; only a small proportion of the plans do not stipulate either age or service requirements for coverage.

"Having met the requirements for coverage in a plan, an employee who becomes disabled must meet another set of requirements in order to qualify for benefits. First, the disability must be of a type covered under the plan; second, the disabled employee may be required to have served a specified period of time; third, he may have to be a certain age or under a certain age; or fourth, have to meet the double condition of age and service.

"The question of determination of disability is important only with respect to the 80 plans with specific disability benefit provisions. These provisions are designed to make possible retirement on account of disability rather than age. In the other retirement plans, since the disabled employee simply exercises the usual option to retire under the early retirement or vested rights provision that any other employee may exercise, the [1] For plans negotiated between the end of the cut-off date of this study and December 1949, see appendix B of the full study.

[2] In one of these, the United Mine Workers' welfare and retirement fund, the disability benefit is payable only on the basis of need.

[3] In contributory plans, upon termination of employment, the employee is always entitled to at least the return of his contributions.

[4] Indications are that, as of January 1950, establishments having pension plans employed about 12,000,000 persons, 7,000,000 of whom were covered. This is derived from the Bureau of Internal Revenue which reports that through August 1946, it had processed pension plans in establishments employing about 9,700,000 persons, 3,300,000 of whom were covered at the time of the submission of the information. Annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, June 1947, p. 127. These figures were adjusted (a) for the incomplete coverage of the Bureau of Internal Revenue for that year, and (b) to bring the data up to date, taking into account the increase in number of retirement plans between 1946 and 1950, and the recent trend in more complete coverage of employees under these plans.

[5] Such plans as those of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (men's clothing industry) and of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union (cloak and suit industry in New York City) are excluded for the following reasons. The former makes no provision for benefits to disabled workers other than the benefits at normal retirement age or later; the latter does not provide for the retirement of disabled workers before age 60.

question of whether or not he is in fact disabled does not exist.

"In the plans with specific disability benefit provisions a fairly long service requirement is more frequently found because of the unpredictable nature of the risk for which these provisions are designed. The other retirement plans merely give the disabled employee the option to retire at an earlier age. The important factor in these plans is the attainment of a certain age, usually 55, before a disabled employee can avail himself of the early retirement option.

"The benefit formulas found in the plans vary greatly. Generally they provide for a specified percentage of average monthly earnings for each year of service. Since a disabled worker usually retires many years before reaching normal retirement age it follows that, under these formulas, the benefits are low.

"There were also found some plans that provide for a reduction in benefits when the disabled retired worker qualifies for old-age benefits under the Social Security Act.

"Plans with disability-benefit provisions

"In general, the 80 plans with disability-benefit provisions are found in large establishments. The plans of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and of the United Mine Workers Welfare and Retirement Fund together account for almost 1,000,000 of the 2,000,000 employees who are in the establishments where these plans are found. Almost 60 percent of the plans are in establishments with 2,500 or more employees.

"Not all of the 2,000,000 employees, however, are covered under these plans. First, 10 percent of the 80 plans restrict coverage to salaried employees only; thus, they exclude the production workers in these establishments. Second, in 65 percent of the plans an employee must reach a certain age, generally age 30 or older; or serve his employer a specified period of time, generally 5 years; or meet both requirements before he can be covered. Service is more frequently specified than age.

"Furthermore, to be entitled to benefits, the disabled employee must also have served his employer for a specified number of years, reached a certain age, or both. Such requirements are found in 67 percent of the plans. The service requirement is found in about two and one-half times as many plans as the age requirement. The length of service with the employer is generally 15 or more years. The age when specified, is often 55 years or older.

"Having met these requirements, the disabled employee does not qualify for benefits unless the disability is of a type covered by the plan. The disability is sometimes defined in great detail and requires the employee to be incapable of earning any income; or the determination may be left entirely to the time when the disabled employee applies for benefits; or some combination of these conditions may be found. Thus, the concept of disability may be (a) very vague, with no apparent criteria and leaving the determination to the discretion of the administrator of the plan; (b) inability to work, without defining the disability; (c) inability to work, defined in terms of performance of regular duties; (d) incapacity, requiring medical certification; or (e) permanent and total disability established after the completion of a waiting period and certified by a physician.

"Many of the plans attempt to offset the reduced benefit which would result from the application of the usual retirement-benefit formula for employees who retire prematurely on account of disability. This is done by using such devices as minimum amounts, flat amounts, waiver of the age of applicant for benefits. Nevertheless, the application of the benefit formula results generally in relatively small payments.

"For 53 of the 80 plans, where it has been possible to estimate benefit amounts, it was found that with 10 years' service and monthly average earnings of $200 or $250, 55 percent of these plans would pay no benefits to a disabled employee, as shown in chart I. Where benefits are paid, the concentration is in plans paying benefits of less than $25 and between $25 and $50 monthly. For the few remaining plans that pay more than $50 monthly the essential difference between the worker who earns an average of $200 monthly and the one who averages $250 is in the maximum benefit payable, which is $55 and $65, respectively.

"Even with 20 years' service and monthly average earnings of $200 or $250, 15 percent of these plans would pay no benefits to a disabled employee. Where benefits are payable, the concentration is in the plans paying from $25 to $50 monthly and from $50 to $75. Maximum benefits in the few remaining plans are $85 for workers with the lesser earnings and $100 for the workers with the higher earnings.

"Some of these benefits, however, are subject to an adjustment to social-security old-age benefits. The full amount or one-half of the primary old-age insurance benefit may be deducted from the benefit under the plan, or the latter may be discontinued entirely when the worker becomes eligible for old-age insurance benefits.

"Other retirement plans

"The 129 plans that have early retirement or vested-rights provisions available to disabled employees are found generally in smaller establishments than the 80 plans making specific provisions for disability benefits. Over 50 percent are in establishments with less than 2,500 employees.

"Here again there are coverage restrictions. On the basis of employment classification and earnings, over one-tenth of the plans are restricted to salaried employees only, or to employees with annual earnings of $3,000 or more. While a minimum period of service of usually 1 or 5 years is required as a condition for coverage in nearly all plans, a minimum age, usually age 30 or older, is required in about 40 percent of the plans.

"As to the requirement for benefits, the typical provision stipulates that a worker may retire within a stated period, usually 10 years preceding normal retirement age. This makes the attainment of a minimum age, usually 55, practically the rule. On the other hand, a minimum period of service, usually 15 years or longer, is required in less than 24 percent of the plans.

"Where a disabled employee must rely on the early retirement or vested rights provisions, the benefits would be very low. In the 131 plans for which data are available, an employee with 10 years of service and who had averaged monthly earnings of $200 or even $250 would receive no benefits in over 20 percent of the plans. This is shown in chart II. Where the benefit would be payable, it would be under $15 monthly in most of the plans. In the remaining plans, the maximum benefit would be $35 for employees with the smaller earnings and $45 for those with the higher earnings.

"While an employee with 20 years' service would fare noticeably better, his benefit would still be very low. In 5 percent of the plans, he would not qualify for benefits, even if his earnings had averaged $200 a month. Where the benefits are payable, the concentration is in the plans paying benefits under $15, and between $15 and $25, even for employees with the higher monthly average earnings of $250. Again, the main difference between the worker with the smaller and the worker with the higher earnings in the remaining plans is in the maximum benefit payable which is $45 and $60, respectively.

Amount of disability benefits payable in retirement plans—Percent of plans paying selected benefit amounts, by years of service and average monthly earnings, 1949

I. 53 PLANS WITH DISABILITY BENEFIT PROVISIONS

Amount of benefit	Average monthly wage for 10 years' service		Average monthly wage for 20 years' service
	$200	$250	$200	$250
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
0	55	55	15	15
0 to $25	22	21	21	11
$25 to $50	17	15	32	29
$50 to $75	[1] 6	[2] 9	23	30
$75 to $100			[3] 9	15
Total	100	100	100	100

II. 131 PLANS WITH EARLY RETIREMENT OR VESTED RIGHTS PROVISIONS

0	22	21	5	3
0 to $15	70	66	40	20
$15 to $25	5	9	43	56
$25 to $35	3	2	10	13
$35 to $45		2	2	6
$45 to $60				2
Total	100	100	100	100

[1] Maximum benefit is $55.
[2] Maximum benefit is $65.
[3] Maximum benefit is $85.

"III. CONCLUSIONS

"The retirement plans studied indicate that a number of employers have recognized the need for disability protection, and have found it possible to set up and administer plans covering this risk. Although only 80 of the 219 plans included in this study make specific provisions for disability retirement, they tend to be in the establishments with a large labor force. Moreover, since the completion of the study, there has been an increasing emphasis on disability protection in collective bargaining plans. The newer agreements negotiated for old-age retirement plans in three of the mass-production industries, namely, steel, auto, and rubber, and involving over 1,350,000 employees, include provisions designed specifically to allow retirement for disability. This growing emphasis on disability protection is evidence of the concern of unions and employers for making more adequate provision available for this risk than now exists.

"While these recent developments in the private pension field show that the problem of disability retirement is receiving increasing attention, examination of the 80 plans included in this study that make specific provisions for the risk of disability reveals real structural limitations. These plans do not cover all the employees in the establishments in which they are in operation; most plans are designed to cover only the permanent element of the establishment's labor force. For this reason, they often exclude employees with less than a specified period of service, who are under a certain age, who earn less than a specified amount, who are not in the bargaining unit, or who are production workers. The latter exclusion is particularly significant since production workers constitute, by far, the bulk of the labor force in the manufacturing establishments studied. Even if the employee is assured of coverage, the long service requirements for eligibility to benefits in a high proportion of these plans, and age less frequently, tend to disqualify the disabled worker for benefits.

"The concept of disability varies greatly from plan to plan. While some of these plans state explicity the conditions concerning entitlement to disability benefits and size of benefit, others leave these important decisions entirely to the employer, the pension committee, or the board of trustees.

This discretionary power may at times operate to the advantage of the disabled employee, but at other times, it may work to his disadvantage. In other words, even though an employee may be covered he cannot be certain in advance of the extent of the protection available to him in case of disability.

"The cumulative effect of all the above limitations on coverage and on entitlement to benefits, together with the very fluid concept of disability used in these plans is that a large proportion of disabled workers do not receive benefits.

"Another real limitation of these 80 plans is that, when benefits are payable, they do not generally provide any significant replacement of former earnings. For the employee disabled after 10 years of service and with average monthly earnings of $250, only about one-fourth of these plans would pay $25 or more, representing the replacement of 10 percent or more of former earnings. For the employee disabled after 20 years of service and with average earnings of $250 monthly, less than one-half of the plans would pay a benefit of $50 or more, representing the replacement of 20 percent or more of former earnings. These benefit amounts assume stable employment at relatively high earnings, over long periods of service (mostly continuous) with the same employer. Generally, this has not been the experience of wage earners, and certainly earnings have not been consistently high over the past decade or two.[6]

"As to the 139 plans in which the disabled employee must rely entirely on early retirement or vesting rights provisions, they afford an even less adequate replacement of wage loss. Moreover, these are essentially old-age retirement plans and require the attainment of a certain minimum age—usually 55—before a worker can exercise his option to retire prior to normal retirement age. Insofar as these plans do provide an opportunity for early retirement in case of disability, the age requirement limits this protection generally to older workers, and the plans provide no disability protection at the younger ages.

"The responsibility assumed by an employer in paying benefits to a disabled employee for the rest of his life is a costly undertaking just as it is in the case of old-age retirement. The stringent eligibility requirements for disablity benefits in the plans that provide specific provisions for disability benefits, as well as in those that permit a covered employee to exercise his option for early retirement, may be justified on the grounds of the long-range nature of the protection required for permanent and total disability.

"These plans, however, have certain disadvantages which stem from more fundamental considerations than the structural limitations mentioned above. These are the inherent limitations which are common to all private pension plans. Mobility of labor between industries and between employers within industries is characteristic of the present day labor force.[7] Private pension plans generally have not been able to devise a satisfactory solution for the normal movement of labor from place to place and from job to job; an employee covered can seldom carry his protection with him from employer to employer. Moreover, the stability of the plans may be uncertain because they can be discontiuued, or they may not survive changing economic and industrial conditions. These plans, therefore, that attempt to cover the risk of disability provide a measure of security only for a minority of workers, but do not assure basic protection to the average worker because he cannot be certain of coverage during the greater part of his working life."

[6] Average weekly earnings in manufacturing industries rose successively from $20.13 in 1935, to $29.58 in 1941 and to $49.25 in 1947 so that earnings over this 12-year period averaged only about $140 a month. See Handbook of Labor Statistics, 1947 ed., U. S. Department of Labor, Washington, D. C., p. 54.

[7] The wage records of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance show that for for the 49,000,000 workers who earned taxable wages in covered employment at some time during 1947, 33 percent worked for more than one employer, and 26 percent were employed in more than one industry. The corresponding figures for the steel industry were 33 and 36 percent, respectively. In the automobile industry, 40 percent of all workers had at least two different employers and 39 percent were employed in at least one industry other than automobile. A recent study of 1,000 heads of family in the Oakland, Calif., labor market shows that the average worker has had a new job every 3½ years, or 10 to 12 times during his total working life. Clark Kerr, Social and Economic Implications of Private Plans, Institute of Industrial Relations, Reprint No. 16, University of California, Berkeley, Calif., 1949, p. 5.

THE GEORGE-MILLIKIN RESOLUTION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, one of the proposals on which we are going to vote this afternoon is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] providing for a further study of social security. I am supporting this resolution because I believe that there are a number of important improvements which should be made in our social-security program, and which are not contained in H. R. 6000.

I should like to point out, however, that a great deal of propaganda is being spread in opposition to the George-Millikin resolution. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, a statement issued by Mrs. Marjorie Shearon, in which she opposes the George-Millikin resolution because, as she says, the "Finance Committee is no good." I know that Senators will not place any reliance whatsoever in the unfounded criticisms which Mrs. Shearon is making of the Finance Committee. I believe that the Members of the Finance Committee are to be highly congratulated for the fine job that they have done in improving the social-security program.

Mrs. Shearon also asks Senators to vote against the proposed amendment for permanent and total disability insurance because, as she says, "Senators don't know what it's all about." This attack on Senators on both sides of the aisle is in my opinion unjustified. I know that members of the Finance Committee have given very careful consideration to all proposals, and I know that there are various members of the Finance Committee who are supporting the amendment for permanent and total disability insurance.

I trust that Senators will vote both for the resolution to give further study to social security and also to include permanent and total disability insurance despite the reckless and false charges made in this propaganda sheet.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARNING! GREAT EMERGENCY!

The medical profession, the insurance industry, and all other Americans are in imminent danger from H. R. 6000.

Voting on this bill begins at 4 p. m., Tuesday, June 20. Amendments will be considered, 10 minutes being allowed for each amendment. Democrats LUCAS (Illinois) and MYERS (Pennsylvania) will introduce amendment to establish Falk's permanent and total disability insurance program under the Social Security Act. This is one part of national compulsory health insurance. Do not believe anyone who tells you the situation is under control. It is not. This amendment will be passed on June 20 unless you make the fight of your life. The disability provision is in the House-passed version of H. R. 6000. It will become law if the Senate passes it.

Yesterday MILLIKIN introduced a weak resolution for further study of social security by the Senate Finance Committee after not before passage of H. R. 6000.

This is what you should do immediately:

1. Wire or telephone your Senators (too late to write) to bring the George-Millikin resolution for further study into line with Cain resolution. Imperative that a separate commission be set up. Finance Committee is no good and will only say what social security staff tells it to say. There must be independent staff having no connection with social security. There should be bona fide investigation of prior administration; $100,000 should be allotted.

2. Wire or telephone your Senators to vote against permanent and total disability amendment. Some medical experts should see that every Senator has a short statement of reasons for opposition to this proposal. Senators don't know what it's all about.

3. Send medical delegation to Washington Monday and Tuesday to visit every Senator.

4. Get 10 persons to wire or telephone your Senators.

H. R. 6000 will be passed by the Senate this coming week. All you can do is hold the line. Get a decent George-Millikin resolution for future study and investigation. Oppose permanent and total disability insurance. Rally around the Cain resolution.

The Shearons are available around the clock with advice and latest information.

MARJORIE SHEARON.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of the time to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, 16 years ago, when I first came to Congress as a Representative from the Twentieth District of Illinois, one of the major pieces of legislation with which the Congress was concerned was the Social Security Act of 1935. At that time, the country was suffering from depressed economic conditions caused to some extent by the presence of many older workers, who found it impossible to obtain employment. To cope with this problem, Congress enacted the Social Security Act of 1935.

The principal features of that measure were a contributory old-age insurance program, an authorization for the use of Federal funds to match State assistance expenditures for the aged, the blind, and dependent children, and a State-Federal unemployment compensation program.

The long-range plan to meet the continuing problem of dependency during old age was the contributory old-age insurance system. This program is based upon the theory that the charity approach could be eliminated over the years by giving workers an opportunity to contribute to a system which would in turn pay benefits to the aged who might otherwise be dependent. Under this system, benefit payments are directly related to prior wages and to the individual ability and initiative of the beneficiary. This approach is sound, not only from the viewpoint of meeting the national problem involved but also in recognizing the principles of private initiative basic to our economic system.

At that time, as a freshman Representative from Illinois, I was keenly aware of the suffering and want of millions of our older citizens who could no longer completely support themselves. I realized, as so many other Members of Congress realized, that the poorhouse and the pauper's oath were degrading to the aged and out of place in a country with the resources of America. For these reasons, I voted for the Social Security Act of 1935.

I have been in Congress since that time and have seen this program develop. In 1939 I supported amendments which broadened the protection of the Old-Age Insurance System so that benefits were provided for the surviving wife and children of a covered worker. The old-age and survivors insurance program was amended again in 1946. Survivors' insurance benefits were provided for the survivors of World War II veterans who died within 3 years after their discharge from the Armed Forces. This was an important recognition for the veterans who were denied continued coverage under the social-insurance program because they were temporarily in the Armed Forces.

The bill now before the Senate was carefully prepared to improve the system in line with the recommendations of the Advisory Council of the Eightieth Congress after extensive hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in 1949 and the Senate Finance Committee in 1950.

These improvements are concerned primarily with extending the coverage under this contributory system, liberalizing the benefits, and relaxing the requirements for eligibility so that more of the aged may be brought under this system in the near future. I would like to discuss some of these improvements in some detail in order to explain precisely what they mean to millions of the aged in this country as well as to innumerable workers and their families.

So long as we have both an insurance and a charity system operating side by side, we are faced with a basic question of deciding to what extent the coverage under the contributory system may be broadened so that it will provide benefits for more and more of the aged. Both questions of policy and administration have operated to limit extensions of coverage in the past. I recall quite well the arguments of many Representatives and Senators that even the limited coverage provisions enacted in the 1930's created an insurmountable administrative problem.

Through the years, however, administrative techniques have been developed which make the problems of extending coverage less difficult. This extension of coverage is the most essential factor in developing a sound social-security system. If this system is to meet the national problem of dependency in old age, it must be available to everyone faced with the risk of dependence in old age.

The committee bill is designed to make important improvements in this respect. An additional 10,000,000 persons will now be brought under this program. Two of these groups which will now be covered under the old-age and survivors insurance system for the first time are the non-farm self-employed, and certain agricultural workers.

It has long been apparent that the self-employed, as much as any other group, need the protection offered by such an insurance system. This group is comprised of the operators of the bulk of the small business enterprises which are such an important factor in the American economy. These people more than any others take the risks of a free-enterprise system. They risk not only their capital but also their time and labor. It is therefore important that they be given some protection against dependence in old age.

One of the tendencies which has concerned me since the social-security program was first inaugurated is the manner in which the protection has been concentrated in urban areas. Statistics have shown that dependence in old age is a very great problem among rural farm workers. So long as this group of workers is not covered under the old-age and survivors insurance program their dependence in old age can be met only through charity-type assistance payments. Equal treatment for farm groups and city dwellers is just as important in this aspect of Government activity as in any other, and equal treatment can be obtained only by the coverage of farm workers.

A huge administrative problem is immediately presented by any plan intended to cover these workers. For the migratory, seasonal, or part-time farm worker, no easy method of collecting the tax has been devised.

The committee bill, however, makes real progress in giving many farm workers treatment equal to that of urban employees by providing for coverage of regularly employed farm workers. The term "regularly employed farm worker" means one who is employed by a single farmer for at least 60 days in a 3-month calendar quarter and who receives cash wages of at least $50 during that period. This type of provision was favored by representatives of the leading farm organization. Under its terms almost 1,000,000 farm workers will be brought under the old-age and survivors insurance system.

The second major improvement which experience under this system has shown to be necessary is a liberalization of the benefit payments. In 1945 and again in 1948 substantial increases were made in the amount of Federal funds available for the charity-type assistance program. This resulted in the unusual situation of the Government providing higher average payments under the charity-type program than under the contributory insurance system. The person who qualified for charity received an average allotment of $45 a month, while the beneficiary under the old-age and survivors insurance program received an average payment of $26 a month.

The Senate Finance Committee has made real strides toward correcting this unusual inequity. In this bill the benefit formula has ben changed to make substantial increases in the benefits payable to workers who retire in the future as well as increasing the benefits now paid to current beneficiaries.

At the present time there are approximately 3,000,000 persons receiving old-age and survivors insurance benefits. Approximately 180,000 of these live in Illinois. Under the committee bill these current beneficiaries will have their benefit payments increased, on the average, about 85 or 90 percent. For example, a retired worker who receives a primary benefit payment of $25 under existing law will have his benefit amount raised to about $48 after the enactment of this measure.

For workers who will retire in the future, benefits paid to them in the next 10 years will be about 110 percent higher than they would have been under existing law. The minimum benefit payment under this measure will be $25 a month and the maximum payment for families has been increased to $150. The average benefit payment will be in excess of $50 a month for a single retired worker and over $80 a month for a retired worker and his wife.

The third major improvement made by the committee bill is in the sections concerned with eligibility requirements. Under existing law, in order to be eligible for old-age benefits under the insurance program, a person now 65 years of age needs 6½ years of coverage. The difficulty with stringent eligibility requirements, such as this, is that many older workers are never able to qualify.

The committee-approved bill provides a new start in the eligibility requirements. This means that workers who are now 62 years of age or older can qualify for benefits at age 65 with a minimum of six quarters, or a year and a half, of coverage. In order to meet these requirements, years of service and wage credits earned prior to 1950 may be used.

This is an essential feature in the improvement of the contributory system. It means that an additional 700,000 persons will be eligible under this program when the bill is enacted. It also means that many more older workers will be able to find protection under this system within the next few years.

However, in addition to these major improvements which the Senate Finance Committee has made in the social-security program, there are other features of this system which should also be improved. Amendments have been introduced which I consider would add immeasurably to the soundness of this entire system.

I urge the Senate to give serious consideration to some major improvements in the social-security program which were provided in the House-approved bill but omitted by the Senate committee. These include the raising of the maximum-wage base for tax and benefit purposes, the provision for an increment of one-half of 1 percent of the primary benefit amount for each year of coverage, and the principle of benefit payments to cover employees who become totally and permanently disabled.

Under the contributory insurance system, the total wages of all covered employees are not considered for tax or benefit purposes. If they were, a few high-salaried employees would be forced to make large contributions and would receive inordinantly high benefits. Instead, under existing law, only the first $3,000 of annual wages are considered for tax and benefit purposes.

In 1939 this $3,000 wage base meant that the total wages of about 95 percent of the workers covered by the contributory insurance system were included for tax and benefit purposes. Today almost 40 percent of covered workers earn more than $3,000 a year. To me this seems to indicate that some upward adjustment in the wage base is necessary. It is interesting to note that the advisory council of the previous Congress reported that to make a partial adjustment for this change in wage levels the maximum annual wage considered for tax and benefit purposes should be raised to $4,200 a year. It seems to me that the adjustment made in the House bill is the least that should be done.

I have joined in sponsoring an amendment raising the wage base to $4,200 because I am convinced, as were the members of the Advisory Council, that this adjustment is essential to give some recognition to the increase in wage levels during the last 10 years.

When I speak of the Advisory Council I am speaking of the Council which was appointed during the Eightieth Congress under the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee at that time, Mr. MILLIKIN.

Under the existing law, for each year that a worker is covered by the old-age and survivors insurance system, he receives an increase of 1 percent in his primary benefit amount. This is known as the increment factor. In the House-approved bill the factor was decreased to one-half of 1 percent.

Despite the fact that the increment factor was reduced, it is still an important part of a contributory insurance system in which the benefits are related to wage credits. It seems to me that this gives an important recognition to the fact that the person who contributes more should receive more in benefits. Without an increment the benefits tend to flatten out. Under the committee bill two persons with the same average monthly wage will receive the same benefit amount, even though one has contributed for 5 years and the other for 40 years. Because I believe a reasonable increment factor is essential to preserve individual incentive, I intend actively to support and vote for an amendment to restore this important provision to the social-security system.

The House of Representatives also included provisions for the payment of benefits to covered employees who have become totally and permanently disabled. These provisions were in line with the recommendations of the Advisory Council of the Eightieth Congress. On page 69 of the report of the Advisory Council, it is stated:

> Income loss from permanent and total disability is a major economic hazard to which, like old age and death, all gainful workers are exposed. The Advisory Council believes that the time has come to extend the Nation's social-insurance system to afford protection against this loss. There can be no question concerning the need for such protection.

These are the words of the Advisory Council of the Eightieth Congress appointed by the Finance Committee then under the chairmanship of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

I have been much concerned over these provisions because I realize that administrative problems might be very great. However, I do not believe that those difficulties should be insurmountable. These clauses have been administered in all other Federal retirement plans, in the Railroad Retirement System, and many State and private pension plans. I believe that the principle of total and permanent disability benefits should not be lost.

In addition to these amendments concerned with the old-age and survivors insurance system, there are other parts of the social-security program which should be improved.

Another amendment which I have introduced provides for assistance to the caretaker of dependent children. Under the assistance program, the use of Federal funds is authorized to help finance State-administered charity programs providing benefits for dependent children. These are children who are in need and one or more of whose parents are absent from the home. Under existing law, however, no assistance is provided for the caretaker of those children. To me this does not seem practical or sensible. If assistance is to be provided for dependent children, it should be done in such a way that the home available to them may be kept intact. It seems to me that this can be done only by providing assistance for the mother or relative with whom the children are staying so that a proper home may be provided.

The amendment I have introduced will allow the use of Federal funds to match State funds used for asistance payments for this parent or relative.

I have gone into some detail on many of these provisions; but such detail seems necesary in relating this complex program to the specific interests of the many people vitally concerned with it. I have long had the conviction that the Social Security Act of 1935 was one of the more important measures I have been privileged to support and develop while in Congress. It gives me a great deal of satisfaction to support and vote for this Social Security Act of 1950, together with some liberalizing amendments, because this measure will revitalize the Social Security System so that it will be of real aid to millions of Americans.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the question is on agreeing to the resolution (S. Res. 300) offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. Only 5 minutes' debate is in order.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance started its hearings on this subject on January 17 and concluded the hearings at the end of March. It then went to work in executive session and employed itself for several weeks in considering various aspects of the social-security question. The further we got into the subject the more we realized that certain areas of study had not been completed and could not be completed in time to pass a social-security bill at this session. Therefore, it was proposed that there be created a continuing study committee, as it might be termed. Under the resolution which has been offered the Senate Committee on Finance is given complete control over the scope and methods of that study. Therefore, there can be no criticism that there will not be sufficient flexibility in the plan to cover those matters which remain uncovered in the studies so far made.

We found, for example, much pressure, demand, and argument for a new approach to the whole subject, as well as for a pay-as-you-go and universal-coverage system of some kind. Many suggestions along this line were made. We did not have sufficient basic data upon which to make decisions. We also found that we did not have sufficient information on the administrative feasibility of wider coverage for agricultural workers. I believe there was a very strong sentiment in the committee that there should be wider coverage. However, the administrative difficulty of covering migrant workers, as well as covering employers who at times work as employees, led us to the conclusion that further study of that subject should be undertaken. We were also aware of the fact that in order to sustain any kind of system we must keep the productivity of the country on the increase, and that perhaps that could not be done if we prematurely retired people who are able and willing to work. Therefore, we found it advisable to give more study to plans under which we could keep elderly people working who are able and willing to work.

We encountered much criticism involving the reserve fund, and received many suggestions of proposals to take the place of the reserve fund. We were not prepared to pass on that question. So we thought that subject should be given further study.

We have been confronted lately with a large number of pension plans, which are adding many thousands of persons to their coverage. There are now about 13,000 private pension plans, all of them having relation to the Government social-security system. How to bring those into coordination, if that is possible, and how to establish the proper relationship between them were questions which were not studied, and we felt studies should be made of that subject.

Under this resolution the Senate Committee on Finance will be able to assign different subjects for study than those I have mentioned. The committee is given great flexibility and great responsibility in relation to the entire subject. I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The opponents of the resolution are entitled to 5 minutes. Is the Senator from Florida opposed to the resolution?

Mr. PEPPER. I am not opposed to it, but I wish to propound an inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, if I may.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, if I have the time to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. As the able chairman of the committee knows, very many earnest citizens have believed for many years that we would eventually come to the adoption of the universal system of pensions, of adequate means and currently financed, called the Townsend plan. Dr. Townsend, a very distinguished American, has for many years given of himself unstintingly to the advocacy of such a system. The distinguished chairman of the committee and his associates permitted Dr. Townsend and others, including several Senators, of whom I was one, to appear before the committee when the hearings were in progress, and to propound that measure to the committee.

The committee has not seen fit to adopt that alternative approach to the problem of security. I am gratified to know that if the Senate adopts the resolution there will be a continuing study of this vital subject. We all feel that we must come to something like a universal coverage, current in payment and something like adequate in amount, for the senior citizens of the country.

The inquiry I wish to propound to the distinguished chairman of the committee is whether those who are the earnest advocates of the general principle of the so-called Townsend plan may anticipate that the distinguished committee, which will continue its study, will specifically include a study of the merit and proposals and principles of the Townsend plan.

Mr. GEORGE. I think I may answer without qualification in the affirmative that the committee will continue the study of the Townsend plan, along with other related matters.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the particular measure, which is now lying on the table as an amendment, be specifically studied by this distinguished committee?

Mr. GEORGE. I can answer in the affirmative, as I said. I can make that positive statement so far as I am concerned.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee. In view of his assurance, which I am very gratified to have him give, I shall not call up the amendment which is lying on the desk at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is open to amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a simple inquiry?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to make the same inquiry of the Senator, because we all know the interest in this subject of the able Senator from Colorado, who is a co-author of the pending resolution. Can the Senator give the same affirmation which the distinguished chairman of the committee has given with reference to the Townsend plan?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am glad to give the same affirmation. The pending resolution includes a paragraph which is ample for the purpose, and I am quite sure that all members of the Committee on Finance will give very careful consideration to anything which those favoring the Townsend plan may wish to propose to the committee.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will give me the assurance that he does not intend to take up much time on the Townsend plan.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall not give that assurance to the Senator. I think the committee will give whatever time is necessary to thoroughly probe into any proposal which is offered to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

The resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] for himself and other Senators, to the committee amendment, the committee amendment being a complete substitute for the original text of the bill. Five minutes of debate is available to each side.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance this morning considered all pending amendments to H. R. 6000. This particular amendment was considered, and I am authorized by the committee to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 246, beginning with line 13, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(8) (A) Service performed in the employ of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more States or political subdivisions (other than service included under an agreement under section 218 and other than service performed in the employ of a State, political subdivision, or instrumentality in connection with the operation of any public transportation system the whole or any part of which was acquired after 1936);

(B) Service performed in the employ of any instrumentality of one or more States or political subdivisions to the extent that the instrumentality is, with respect to such service, immune under the Constitution of the United States from the tax imposed by section 1410 of the Internal Revenue Code (other than service included under an agreement under sec. 218).

On page 328, beginning with line 8, strike out all down to and including line 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(8) (A) Service performed in the employ of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more States or political subdivisions (other than service performed in the employ of a State, political subdivision, or instrumentality in connection with the operation of any public transportation system the whole or any part of which was acquired after 1936);

(B) Service performed in the employ of any instrumentality of one or more States or political subdivisions to the extent that the instrumentality is, with respect to such service, immune under the Constitution of the United States from the tax imposed by section 1410.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, may we have a description of the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, which the Senator from Georgia, as chairman of the committee, has said he is authorized to accept.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It has not been described, so we do not know how to place it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was stated when offered, and is the pending question. It is lettered "J."

Mr. GEORGE. It is the amendment lettered "J." It was offered by the distinguished Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senators from New York [Mr. IVES and Mr. LEHMAN], the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL and Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, may not the amendment be distributed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been distributed, and has been placed today on every Senator's desk.

Mr. FLANDERS. It has not been placed on all the desks.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment provides for the compulsory old-age and survivors insurance for all present and future employees of any transportation system any part of which is taken over by a State or local government at any time after 1936. I think it is a subject with which the Senate Finance Committee is quite familiar.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. My name is on the amendment, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in my opinion the amendment is broader than is necessary, or is broader than might be agreed to in conference. I quite agree we should cover street railway companies which were formerly under the system and which have been taken over by the States in the meantime. This amendment goes somewhat further, and covers any activity which is subject to taxation, that is, any activity whatever, such as an electric store, or anything of the kind which has been held, under the Constitution, to be subject to taxation. In that particular it is broader than the House provision.

I merely wish to state to the Senate that if the amendment is taken to conference, I do not believe that the action of the Senate should be taken necessarily as an approval of this wider coverage. It seems to me clear that employees of a street railway when it was a private company who have been under the system, should stay under the system when the railway is taken over by the public, and also that States may include other similar companies. Whether it should apply to every activity of the State which is not strictly governmental, without the State legislature's approval, I think is doubtful.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the point raised by the distinguished Senator from Ohio was considered by the Committee on Finance, and it was thought best to keep the matter in conference where it will be given careful consideration.

Mr. THYE and Mr. SALTONSTALL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado whether the amendment includes the school teachers' retirement fund.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It would not include the school teachers' retirement fund.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I am one of the sponsors of the amendment, but in the opinion of the Senator from Colorado would the amendment in its present form include a steamship company taken over by a State government, as well as a transit company?

Mr. MILLIKIN. If it is a transportation system, it is included.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word about the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. A great many employees of a transportation system in the city of Chicago are vitally affected by the pending amendment. I appreciate that the amendment is broader than the provision contained in the bill as passed by the House of Representatives. However, I hope that the Senate will insist upon the amendment in its present form, because it seems to me that not only those who have been in the past employed in the transportation systems, but that others as well, should be included in the old-age benefit system at the present time.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I hope that the pending amendment offered by the majority leader will be adopted. This amendment vitally affects large numbers of transit workers in my State. A considerable number of public transit lines—subways, motor bus lines and other means of public transportation—have been taken over by city and other governmental authorities in New York.

These employees urgently desire to be covered by Federal social security. I firmly believe that any groups which wish to be covered should be covered.

It would be an injustice for these individuals to be left outside the old-age and survivors insurance program. Some of them have made payments into the OASI fund for 10 years. Their benefits under the municipal retirement systems would be much less than those of other public employees who have been covered by these systems for longer periods of time.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the A. F. of L. unions in my State are asking for this amendment. The CIO transit unions, headed by Mr. Michael Quill, are also asking for the amendment.

Although I advocated and continue to support the exclusion from Federal old-age and survivors insurance of all public employees already covered by retirement systems, because these employees do not wish to be covered, I strongly urge that the pending amendment covering this special group, who urgently wish to be covered, should be approved.

Yesterday I introduced into the RECORD a letter from Mr. Michael Quill to this effect. I do not think it is necessary to make reference to the letter again. I ask for the approval of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed at this point in the RECORD a brief statement which I have prepared on the pending amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT ON TRANSIT EMPLOYEES BY SENATOR LODGE

Mr. President, as one of the sponsors of the pending amendment, I wish to say very briefly that adoption of this provision for coverage of transit employees is a matter of great importance for a very large number of citizens of Massachusetts. Last year I filed a bill, S. 1658, the purpose of which was similar to the pending amendment and I believe that approval of this proposal amounts to an act of simple justice.

Principally affected in Massachusetts will be some 6,000 employees of the metropolitan transit authority. Most of these employees were originally employees of the Boston Elevated Railway Co. prior to August 1947. The Boston Elevated was a privately owned company, and its employees were covered by the old-age and survivors insurance provisions of the Social Security Act. In 1947 this company was acquired by the metropolitan transit authority, an instrumentality of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which presently operates passenger streetcar, subway, and bus service in Boston and vicinity.

The result of this change in ownership was to deprive these employees of the full benefits of the Social Security Act. These employees should not be discriminated against because their employment ceased to be for a private corporation. The pending amendment meets this problem in a satisfactory way. This fact is confirmed, insofar as Massachusetts is concerned, by the messages of approval which I have received from Local 849, International Union of Operating Engineers, Boston; Massachusetts Federation of Labor, Boston; District Lodge No. 38, International Association of Machinists, Boston; Division 589, Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, A. F. of L., Boston; Boston Central Labor Union; and several others.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point a brief statement which I have prepared on the pending amendment, and I should like to extend my thanks for the cooperation of the officers and representatives of the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DOUGLAS

I am very glad that the Senate Finance Committee has accepted the amendment to H. R. 6000, which provides coverage under the law to the employees of public transit systems acquired after 1936.

In the discussions which preceded the drafting and introduction of this amendment I would like to acknowledge the splendid assistance and cooperation extended to us by the officers and representatives of the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America.

Mr. A. L. Spradling, its president; Mr. O. David Zimring, its chief counsel; and Mr. Joseph F. Fahey, representing its Division 589; all appeared and testified at the hearings. Their representatives also advised with us in numerous conferences to enable us to bring all of the relevant facts to the attention of the Senate and to draft an amendment that would protect the proven equities of the transit employees.

I offer for the RECORD herewith a brief memorandum submitted by representatives of the association in further explanation of the amendment:

"MEMORANDUM ON STATUS OF TRANSIT WORKERS OF TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS PUBLICLY ACQUIRED AFTER 1936 UNDER PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

"(Submitted by Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, AFL)

"The Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, AFL, is the dominant labor organization in the field of mass transportation of passengers by motor bus or streetcar. The membership of that organization is desirous of rectifying certain injustices which have resulted from a loss of coverage under the existing Social Security Act on the part of employees of mass transportation systems transferred from private operations to public operations.

"During the last decade municipal public authorities have acquired and are operating several large transportation systems. Among such systems are San Francisco, Cleveland, Chicago, and Boston. In addition, New York City has since 1936 acquired from private companies a very large portion of its present municipal operations. There are a number of smaller cities, such as Springfield, Mo., which are in the same category. Approximately 50,000 of our members are employed in transportation systems which have already been acquired by municipalities and public authorities. As a result of the change to public operation, such employees have lost all or a large part of their benefits under the Social Security Act.

"Under the existing Social Security Act, fully insured status may be obtained by employees who have been paid $50 or more in covered employment and at least half the number of calendar quarters as there are between January 1, 1937, when the social security program began and the quarter when the employee becomes 65 or dies. The acquisition of 40 quarters of coverage makes a worker fully insured for life. While employees who have had 40 quarters of coverage prior to the transfer of a public operation to public ownership are fully insured and entitled to some benefits at age 65, such benefits will be seriously reduced during the period of public ownership, since the work under public ownership does not count under the existing act. In addition, they will not receive the acquisition of 1 percent a year in primary benefits under the period of public ownership, since wages, in the meaning of section 209 (a) of the act, will no longer be earned by them. Thus even employees who are fully insured under the act will receive greatly reduced benefits.

"The Senate Committee on Finance has eliminated from H. R. 6000 those provisions of the House bill which sought to deal with this problem but which did so inadequately. The objections to H. R. 6000, insofar as it deals with this problem of loss of coverage for transit workers, may be summarized as follows:

"1. No assurance is afforded employees transferred to public ownership that they will receive full protection, since section 210 (a) (8) (B) has an escape clause which permits any political subdivision operating a transit system to exclude its employees from the coverage of the act by the simple process of filing a statement with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the effect that coverage is not designed for employees who become such in the acquisition of a public transit system by the political subdivision.

"2. Further inequities are created by the House bill in that while it protects employees of a privately operated system publicly acquired after 1936, if such employees were employed by the transit system at and prior to the transfer of an operation, it fails to protect employees hired after the beginning of public operation. For example, employees of the Chicago Surface Lines who became employees of Chicago Transit Authority when public operation began, would be covered. Employees hired after the Chicago Transit Authority began operation would not be. The result is, therefore, that a constantly increasing number of employees would not be covered by the law, and, ultimately, all the employees would have no protection under the act, since the work force would ultimately consist of employees hired after the date of public operation.

"The Senate Committee on Finance would, in effect, deprive the employees of the groups mentioned above of any protection under the act. The committee proposes to limit the portion of the unsatisfactory and inadequate provisions for voluntary coverage to situations in which no existing pension plan covers the employees. In substantially all the situations in which transit employees are involved, wherein a loss of coverage results from the transfer from private to public operations after 1936, there is in existence a pension plan. The committee's failure to return to such employees the benefits of the act which they have lost is based on a complete misconception as to the nature and origin of the pension plan covering employees on public transportation systems. The public authorities which have taken over transportation systems from private companies are, in a majority of cases, operating in substantially the same fashion as private corporations. In most cases, the statutes which created such public authorities exclude the employees from the coverage of civil service systems, including civil service retirement systems. The Massachusetts statute requires the authority created to take over the pension obligations which existed in connection with the operation of the transit system. The statute further authorizes the authority to bargain collectively with the employees on the subject concerning pensions. Under private operation, the employees were covered by pension plans secured through collective bargaining agreements and by the social security system. When the private operation became a public one, such employees lost the benefits of the social security system, but continued to be included under the pension systems negotiated through annual collective bargaining agreements. The result is that such employees do not have the continuity of protection normally contemplated by statutory enactments, and they have lost the benefits of the contributions made by them through the social security system. In most cases collective bargaining agreements concerning pensions were negotiated in contemplation of the return of coverage under the social security system. Other pension plans are frequently inadequate and serve as no justification for depriving the employees under such plans of the benefits they formerly enjoyed under the Social Security Act, and which the committee has found proper to extend to new groups of employees throughout American industry.

"The amendment which we are sponsoring would remedy a wholly inequitable situation. This amendment presents no conflict with the interests of other groups of public employees who have never been covered by the social-security system, who have made no contributions to that system, and who do not desire coverage thereunder. The committee's proposed social security program would afford to many groups of employees hitherto not covered by the law, the benefits of the social security program. Our amendment does no more than restore coverage to employees who have previously enjoyed protection under the act, and are being deprived of the benefits of their contributions thereto, through no fault of their own.

"Nor is this problem a static one. There has been a growing trend toward public ownership of mass transportation systems in our cities and metropolitan areas. Many employees from private systems may, in the future, become employees of publicly operated systems. Inequities created by loss of coverage under the act in such situations should not be allowed to grow. Our organization is deeply concerned about this problem. We seek protection for all our members under the social security program. We have, therefore, supported an amendment to the act which would provide for coverage of employees of public transportation systems acquired after 1936."

FURTHER COMMENTS BY SENATOR DOUGLAS

I have likewise had numerous appeals not only from Mr. Spradling, president of the association, but also from many other divisions of the organization which have helped to make clear the full facts of the situation.

The following message from Chicago leaders of the association is typical of the feeling of these workers about the amendment the committee has, and I believe wisely, adopted:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 24, 1950.

Senator PAUL DOUGLAS,
Senate Office Building:

Well over 20,000 employees of the Chicago Transit Authority represented by divisions 241 and 308 of the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, A. F. of L., earnestly desire to be covered by the Social Security Act. They had been covered and had made their contributions for 10 years until the transit facilities were bought by the authority in 1947. All or a great part of these contributions will be lost unless our coverage is restored. Our pensions are not provided by the municipality or State through taxation but by a provision in our labor agreement which is on an annual basis and which was entered into when we were covered by social security and in contemplation of it it would be grossly unfair to penalize these employees simply because the municipality has taken over the transit facilities of our predecessor employers. We therefore strongly and urgently plead for your support of the amendment sponsored by Senators LUCAS, DOUGLAS, and LODGE.

PATRICK J. O'CONNOR,
Vice President.
DANIEL J. MCNAMARA,
Recording Secretary, Division 241, Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America, AFL.
CARL SELLS,
President, Division 1129.
ROBERT LAMPING,
President, Division 1381.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] for himself and other Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have certain other amendments which were approved this morning by the Committee on Finance, and I wish now to offer them.

The first one I send to the desk is amendment lettered "B," which merely changes the effective date of the maternal- and child-welfare section of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 381, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "1951" and insert "1950."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in dealing with the self-employed, generally the professional classes were excluded where they indicated a strong desire to have themselves excluded from the particular provision of the bill dealing with the self-employed.

Among those who appeared after the committee went into executive session were the registered or licensed funeral directors, and the committee has approved an amendment, which I now send to the desk, which will have the effect of excluding them from the self-insured or self-employed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 261, line 21, after the word "accountant", it is proposed to insert "funeral director." On page 360, line 12, after the word "accountant", it is proposed to insert "funeral director."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the committee also approved an amendment, lettered "C", which classifies as employees traveling or city salesmen engaged in the selling of merchandise to retailers, or the selling of consumer goods to hotels, restaurants, and other similar establishments. I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 255, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the word "or."

On page 255, line 23, after the semicolon, to insert the word "or."

On page 255, between lines 23 and 24, to insert the following:

(C) as a traveling or city salesman engaged upon a full-time basis in the solicitation on behalf of, and the transmission to, his principal (except for side-line sales activities on behalf of some other person) of (i) orders from retail merchants for merchandise to be delivered subsequently to such merchants for retail sale to their customers, or (ii) orders from hotels, restaurants, and other similar establishments for supplies to be delivered subsequently to such establishments and to be consumed in the operation thereof.

On page 336, line 20, to strike out the word "or."

On page 336, line 21, after the semicolon, to insert the word "or."

On page 336, between lines 21 and 22, to insert the following:

(C) as a traveling or city salesman engaged upon a full-time basis in the solicitation on behalf of, and the transmission to, his principal (except for side-line sales activities on behalf of some other person) of (i) orders from retail merchants for merchandise to be delivered subsequently to such merchants for retail sale to their customers, or (ii) orders from hotels, restaurants, and other similar establishments for supplies to be delivered subsequently to such establishments and to be consumed in the operation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement on the so-called George amendment to include wholesale outside salesmen.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

Mr. President, I also have an amendment dealing with the subject of wholesale outside salesmen. I am glad to support Senator GEORGE'S amendment and if it is accepted, I will not, of course, call up my amendment.

There is no sound reason for the exclusion of wholesale outside salesmen from definition as employees under the old-age and survivors insurance program. This group are employees, whatever the common law or contractual relationship.

The situation today is loose and untidy as a result of the Gearhardt resolution and of the prevailing practice of letting the employer decide whether the salesman is an employee or is self-employed.

This situation should be clarified. These salesmen should be included as employees. I hope this amendment will be approved.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I will, just as soon as I offer another amendment.

By authority of the Senate Finance Committee I now offer an amendment which raises the wage base from $3,000 to $3,600. I do not believe it is necessary to read it, because it is in technical terms, and I think the entire Senate understands it. In the original bill as reported the wage base was fixed at $3,000, which is the present rate. The amendment raises it to $3,600.

The amendment offered by Mr. GEORGE is as follows:

On page 237, line 18, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 260, line 5, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 263, line 25, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 264, line 6, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 267, line 5, strike out "$150" and insert in lieu thereof "$200."

On page 273, line 21, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 315, line 3, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 316, line 17, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 317, line 7, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 319, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

"(b) So much of section 1401 (d) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code as precedes the second sentence thereof is amended to read as follows:

"'(2) Wages received during 1947, 1948, 1949, and 1950: If by reason of an employee receiving wages from more than one employer during the calendar year 1947, 1948, 1949, or 1950 the wages received by him during such year exceed $3,000, the employee shall be entitled to a refund of any amount of tax, with respect to such wages, imposed by section 1400 and deducted from the employee's wages (whether or not paid to the collector), which exceeds the tax with respect to the first $3,000 of such wages received'."

On page 319, beginning with line 15, strike out all down to and including line 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) Section 1401 (d) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'(3) Wages received after 1950: If by reason of an employee receiving wages from more than one employer during any calendar year after the calendar year 1950, the wages received by him during such year exceed $3,600, the employee shall be entitled to a refund of any amount of tax, with respect to such wages, imposed by section 1400 and deducted from the employee's wages (whether or not paid to the collector), which exceeds the tax with respect to the first $3,600 of such wages received. Refund under this section may be made in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of erroneous or illegal collection of the tax; except that no such refund shall be made unless (A) the employee makes a claim, establishing his right thereto, after the calendar year in which the wages were received with respect to which refund of tax is claimed, and (B) such claim is made within two years after the calendar year in which such wages were received. No interest shall be allowed or paid with respect to any such refund.

"'(4) Special rules in the case of Federal and State employees'."

On page 320, line 7, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 339, line 25, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

On page 358, line 18, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What happened to the amendment discussed before this one? I refer to the wholesale outside salesmen amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. That was agreed to. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I did not hear the announcement that the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announced as loudly as he could that the amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska did not hear the announcement. I did not hear the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois started to ask the Senator from Georgia to yield to him simultaneously with the Chair's announcement that the amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I merely wanted to ask for the sake of the RECORD if I am correct in my understanding that the amendment which was offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia was designed to include house-to-house salesmen selling directly to consumers?

Mr. GEORGE. It does not include such salesmen.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And therefore excludes them?

Mr. GEORGE. And therefore excludes them so far as this specific definition is concerned.

Mr. President, has the amendment I just offered been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The last amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia with reference to the wage base has not been agreed to. It is open to amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia by authority of the committee, to strike out the amount "$3,600" wherever it occurs, and substitute therefor "$4,200."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment offered by Mr. GEORGE on behalf of the committee it is proposed to strike out "$3,600" wherever that figure occurs, and insert in lieu thereof "$4,200."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MYERS. Is the Senator from Georgia also entitled to 5 minutes? Is the Senator from Georgia entitled in all to 10 minutes on his amendment and my amendment thereto, and am I entitled to 10 minutes on the committee amendment and my amendment thereto?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proponent of the amendment is entitled to 5 minutes and the opponent of the amendment is entitled to 5 minutes. If the Senator from Georgia opposes the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the committee amendment, he is entitled to recognition for 5 minutes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this amendment which is sponsored by myself and 12 other Senators is designed to raise the $3,600 wage and tax base to $4,200. The $3,000 wage base was put into the law by the 1939 provisions of the Social Security Act. In that period 95 percent of those covered by the law earned less than $3,000 a year. So it was the intention of Congress to permit the overwhelming majority of the covered workers to receive benefits calculated on the basis of their full earnings.

The Senate Advisory Council on Social Security, speaking through 15 of its 17 members, recommended that the tax and wage base be advanced to $4,200 in order to restore the intent of Congress as set forth in the act of 1939. The Senate Finance Committee until today did not recommend any change in the existing $3,000 limitation. Thus, a worker whose earnings exceed $3,000 a year—in other words, $250 a month—pays a tax based on the first $250 of his monthly earnings. Now the committee itself has agreed and offered an amendment that the wage base be increased to $3,600 a year. But I see no reason whatsoever for believing that we should compromise the principle established in 1939 that 90 or 95 percent of the covered employees should be permitted to receive retirement benefits based upon their maximum average monthly earnings. If it was a sound principle in 1939, I think it is sound today, and particularly when 15 of the 17 members of the Senate Advisory Council on Social Security recommended that the wage base be increased to $4,200.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall take half a minute, and the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] will allot the remaining time.

Mr. President, we can make the taxes too heavy for the American people to bear, and we can break down and destroy a great program if we follow that course. Now it is perfectly obvious that a tax which begins at 1½ percent upon the worker and the employer each, and which under this bill goes up to more than 6 percent upon payrolls, becomes a very heavy tax, especially if the wage base is raised higher. There is an additional $600 to which this tax will apply in the amendment which the committee itself is offering. It certainly should be approved by the Senate, as I think, and as the committee thinks, and I earnestly hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] will not be accepted.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for the remainder of the 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It has been thought by most of the members of the Senate Finance Committee that, considering the additional benefits and the other advantages offered by the bill, and taking the whole bill into consideration, we have gone about as far as we can, having in mind the safety of our economy at the present time.

The original purpose of the social-security system was to give the impact of its benefits primarily to lower paid workers. The theory is that as the individual goes up in the wage scale he has a better opportunity to help his own security with his own funds. I believe the $3,600 is a fair adjustment and a fair compromise of the various proposals which have been made for raising the wage base.

I yield a moment to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I believe that the chief effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] upon a worker who receives $4,200 a year, will be to make him pay 15 percent on the additional $600, and I believe he can get more for his money if he goes to a private company to buy insurance than he can under such a proposal. He has to pay 1½ percent on his payroll income, and his employer has to pay the same percent, but he only gets as a benefit 15 percent of the additional $600. Up to $100 a month base wage he gets $50, but over $100 the benefits are based in the Senate bill on only 15 percent. The result is that he would have to pay an additional tax on the extra $600 which would be so high that he would not get his money back for what he pays.

The proposal does not offer any benefit for the $4,200 a year man. True, he receives a greater benefit, but he pays a much higher tax. He pays a tax so much larger and his benefit is so much smaller that the only net effect of an amendment of this kind is to place more money in the fund. It is an effort to secure more taxes. The taxes apply, yes, beginning at 1½ percent, and then rising to 6 percent, but the benefits are only increased by 15 percent of the additional $600. I say the worker can go to a private company and instead of paying this additional money in taxes, buy insurance from the private company and get more for his money than he would receive under the Federal system.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] has the floor.

Mr. MILLIKIN. How much time have we, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two minutes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a brief question.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to yield to me any part of the time he has left. I believe he has 3 minutes left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has 2 minutes left.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield now to the Senator from Florida for a brief question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, why do we fix an arbitrary limit on the $3,000 man and not extend the principle higher? Why should a man in a higher group not also be required to make his contribution? Why do we freeze the category from zero up to $3,000, and now to $3,600?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am trying to point out that in this system the benefits are heavily weighted for the low-income man. That is all right; I do not object to it. For the first $1,200 of his wage, he receives benefits of $600 a year; but, after that, over and above the first $1,200, he receives only 15 percent of the next $1,000; for the next $1,000 he receives only $150, as compared to the $600 which he receives for the first $1,200 of his wage.

Consequently, the only result of including the higher-income man is that he pays more taxes in proportion to the benefits he receives, and that is done in order to get more money into the fund. I do not see any reason for getting more money into the fund.

Mr. PEPPER. The same thing applies to the $3,000 man.

Why should a man in a higher-income group not be required also to make his contribution? In other words, what the Senator says about the man with a $4,200 income also applies in principle to a man with a $3,000-a-year income, whom we have been taxing, and whom we have been including heretofore in the tax base.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I challenge the argument made by the Senator from Ohio; and back in 1948 the Senate Advisory Council challenged that theory. The statement the Senator from Ohio has made applies only when a man has paid in during a great number of years, and only then, perhaps, when he has reached the age of 65 or 70. However, the argument the Senator makes does not apply in any way whatever to a man of 45 or 50 years of age.

Otherwise, why should distinguished men throughout the United States have come before the Finance Committee a few years ago and recommended $4,200 as the wage and tax base which should be established by the Congress? Why would that have been done, if the position the Senator from Ohio takes is correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Does the Senator from Pennsylvania wish to be recognized at this time?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I understand that I have 3 minutes remaining; is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I strongly urge that the amendment be adopted. Any other wage scale would be utterly unrealistic.

It must be borne in mind that monetary wages have doubled since this wage base was established in 1939. The cost of living has also increased by almost the same amount.

Although I would consider the old-age benefits provided under the law as amended in 1939 to be completely inadequate, the fact is that the purchasing power of the benefit provided in 1939 is greater than the purchasing power of the increased benefit provided in the committee bill.

In terms of purchasing power, a $3,000 wage in 1939 is equivalent to a $5,100 wage in 1950. The committee bill takes no cognizance of this circumstance. The committee bill takes no cognizance of the standard of living of American skilled and supervising employees.

I urge the Senate to increase the wage base at least to $4,200, so that the more highly paid workers may look to an old-age benefit which will provide real security. We should at least raise the wage base to a level commensurate to the wage base established in 1939. To do otherwise would be to rob the worker who was insured in 1939 of the security, in terms of real purchasing power, he was led at that time to expect.

As I have said, I consider the benefits established 10 years ago to be inadequate. Certainly the benefits established in the committee bill, although better than the benefits which were originally proposed, are still completely inadequate.

If this amendment calling for an increase to $4,200 is adopted, and if we also adopt the amendment providing for an increment, the maximum benefit for a man who has contributed for 20 years to this system would be $114, instead of $72.50. The average benefit would be increased to $55, instead of the $49 provided in the Senate committee version of the bill.

Therefore, I strongly urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. [Putting the question.]

The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Chair please state what the pending question is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], to increase the basic wage from $3,600 to $4,200.

Those in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will vote "yea," when their names are called; those opposed will vote "nay."

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is detained on official business, and if present would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

On this vote the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea," and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] would each vote "yea."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—36

Aiken	Kefauver	Magnuson
Anderson	Kilgore	Myers
Benton	Leahy	Neely
Douglas	Lehman	O'Mahoney
Green	Lodge	Pepper
Hayden	Long	Saltonstall
Hendrickson	Lucas	Smith, Maine
Hill	McCarran	Smith, N. J.
Humphrey	McCarthy	Sparkman
Hunt	McFarland	Thomas, Utah
Ives	McKellar	Thye
Johnson, Tex.	McMahon	Withers

NAYS—45

Brewster	Ellender	McClellan
Bricker	Ferguson	Malone
Bridges	Flanders	Martin
Butler	Frear	Maybank
Byrd	Fulbright	Millikin
Cain	George	Robertson
Capehart	Gillette	Russell
Chapman	Gurney	Schoeppel
Connally	Hickenlocper	Stennis
Cordon	Hoey	Taft
Darby	Jenner	Tydings
Donnell	Johnson, Colo.	Watkins
Dworshak	Kem	Wherry
Eastland	Kerr	Wiley
Ecton	Knowland	Williams

NOT VOTING—15

Chavez	Langer	Taylor
Downey	Morse	Thomas, Okla.
Graham	Mundt	Tobey
Holland	Murray	Vandenberg
Johnston, S. C.	O'Conor	Young

So Mr. MYERS' amendment to Mr. GEORGE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. LONG. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. What amendment are we voting on? Is it the committee substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment now being voted on is the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, raising the base from $3,000 to $3,600. It is open to amendment. If there be no amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment, which does not have the approval of the full Finance Committee, but which has the approval or consent of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, who offered an amendment in the committee classifying certain aged drivers as employees. It is desirable to amend it so as to make clear the meaning of the particular provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 255, line 22, after the word "services", it is proposed to insert "for his principal"; and on page 336, line 20, after the word "services", insert "for his principal."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the whole purpose of this amendment is to exclude from the employee group the man who buys merchandise and sells it on his own account, not for the account of a principal. It is a clarifying amendment and is intended to leave this whole matter open in conference so that it can be fully considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Georgia further amendments?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there are certain other amendments which the committee has authorized the chairman to accept. Before another amendment is submitted, I desire now to ask unanimous consent to make technical corrections in the bill, and to renumber the sections and subsections in accordance with the final action taken by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Are there further amendments?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I send forward my amendment B and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

PROVISIONS OF STATE UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION LAWS

SEC. 405. (a) Section 1603 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended (1) by striking out tht phrase "changed its law" and inserting in lieu thereof "amended its law", and (2) by adding before the period at the end thereof the following: "and such finding has become effective. Such finding shall become effective on the ninetieth day after the governor of the State has been notified thereof unless the State has before such ninetieth day so amended its law that it will comply substantially with the Secretary's interpretation of the provision of subsection (a), in which event such finding shall not become effective. No finding of a failure to comply substantially with the provision in State law specified in paragraph (5) of subsection (a) shall be based on an application or interpretation of State law with respect to which further administrative or judicial review is provided for under the laws of the State."

(b) Section 303 (b) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ": Provided, That there shall be no finding under clause (1) until the question of entitlement shall have been decided by the highest judicial authority given jurisdiction under such State law: Provided further, That any costs may be paid with respect to any claimant by a State and included as costs of administration of its law."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I first want to call the attention of every Senator in the Chamber to page 8783 of yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where there will be found messages from States north, east, south, and west, and their official agencies, asking for the support of this amendment. I speak as one of the Representatives of a far-western State which has felt the arbitrary power of the executive branch of the Government infringing on States' rights. I hope that those Senators who in the past have expressed a great interest in the matter of States' rights will particularly view with favor this amendment.

Mr. President, I wish at this time to ask to have printed certain telegrams of support received from the official agencies of the States of Arizona, Utah, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Arkansas, and North Dakota, which are in addition to the others, together with a statement by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

There being no objection, the telegrams and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., June 20, 1950.

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building:

Administration this agency unqualifiedly approves your amendment, H. R. 6000, also George loan fund as originally enacted.

BRUCE PARKINSON,
Employment Security Commission.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, June 20, 1950.

Senator KNOWLAND,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building:

Following wire sent to Utah Senators: "Urge you to support Knowland amendment to H. R. 6000, providing that Secretary of Labor cannot decertify State unemployment compensation law prior to time courts have passed on disputed items relative to payment of benefits. Proposed amendment clarifies and adds needed strength to what we believe law now provides."

OTTO A. WIESLEY,
Commissioner, Industrial Commission of Utah.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 20, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building:

Your amendment to H. R. 6000 represents the views of South Dakota Employment Security Department.

ALAN WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

OLYMPIA, WASH., June 19, 1950.

Senator W. F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Original to Senators CAIN and MAGNUSON: "Urge that you give immediate attention to Senator KNOWLAND'S amendment to House Resolution 6000. This amendment restricts Secretary of Labor from holding States out of confirmity until State courts have passed on disputed items. Favorable consideration of this amendment will be appreciated. Understand this amendment is to be voted on Tuesday, June 20."

J. H. ROBERTSON,
Commissioner, Employment Security Department, State of Washington.

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 19, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building:

The South Carolina employment security commission strongly supports the George loan-fund provision underwriting the solvency of States unemployment compensation funds as contained in H. R. 6000 and especially your amendment thereto designed to protect the States from Federal interference in administrative and judicial procedures.

B. M. GIBSON,
Chairman.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 19, 1950.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building:

Approve your amendment, H. R. 6000. Urge passage for State protection.

EMPLOYMENT SECURITY COMMISSION,
HENRY E. KENDALL, Chairman

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 16, 1950.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

We request your careful consideration and if possible your support of Senator W. F. KNOWLAND'S, of California, amendment to H. R. 6000, providing in effect that Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed items.

E. K. WILEY,
Commissioner, Department of Employment Security.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 16, 1950.

Senator ESTES KEFAUVER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

We request your careful consideration and if possible your support of Senator W. F. KNOWLAND'S, of California, amendment to H. R. 6000, providing in effect that Secretary of Labor is restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed items.

E. K. WILEY,
Commissioner, Department of Employment Security.

MADISON, WIS., June 20, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We strongly favor your amendment to H. R. 6000 designed to assure due process before any Federal official can hold a State unemployment-compensation law out of conformity with Federal requirements. Urge your continuing efforts to secure passage.

VOYTA WRABETZ,
Chairman, Industrial Commission of Wisconsin.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., June 20, 1950.

Hon. W. F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

We concur wholeheartedly in your amendment to H. R. 6000 to provide that Secretary of Labor be restricted from holding States out of conformity until State courts have passed on disputed items. It is of grave importance to States that they have ample opportunity to correct any controversial items before being held out of conformity.

ROLAND M. SHELTON,
Arkansas Employment Security Division.

BISMARCK, N. DAK., June 20, 1950.

Senator KNOWLAND,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

North Dakota agency supports your proposed amendment to H. R. 6000.

NORTH DAKOTA WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BUREAU,
B. M. RYAN, Chairman pro tempore.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CAIN

The amendment offered by the Senator from California involves a very important matter and it should have the unanimous endorsement of the Senate. The State of Washington along with the State of California has a very special interest in this problem.

Last November the Federal Department of Labor informed the commissioner of unemployment security of the State of Washington that certain decisions of the Washington State Unemployment Security Agency were inconsistent with requirements of the Federal laws relating to unemployment security. A similar case arose at the same time involving the State of California, and both officials of the State of Washington and the State of California were called to Washington, D. C., by the Department of Labor to show cause why their laws should not be held out of conformity with the Federal Unemployment Compensation Act. These officials of the States of Washington and California were then in effect told to administer the laws of their States according to the desire of the United States Department of Labor—or all the employers subject to unemployment compensation laws in the State of Washington and California would be penalized by having to pay a double tax on their 1949 payrolls.

I am not going to trespass on the time of the Senate by going into the ramifications of the particular cases, although I think it would be enlightening to do so. I think the important point is that the Secretary of Labor held that an interpretation of the Washington State statute constituted a change in the Washington statute so as to take it out of conformity with the Federal law. This was not a final interpretation by the highest court of the State but a casual interpretation by the State appeals tribunal which under the law of the State is required to be impartial.

Strangely enough the hearings held at the Department of Labor last December covered not only the law but went into the detailed facts of the particular cases and in effect gave a complete review de novo. Labor Department and labor-union attorneys argued against the facts as found by the impartial appeals tribunals. They claimed that the rulings in these cases had construed the State of Washington law in such a manner as, in effect, to change the law so that it was out of conformity and should be decertified. They argued that the unemployment compensation statute of the State of Washington should not be interpreted by the State of Washington in accordance with its constitution, its other laws, and its own judicial precedents. No, they said, the State of Washington must bow to superior intelligence and accept whatever interpretation some Federal bureaucrat tells the State to accept.

They go even further than this. They say that before making an interpretation in these border-line cases the impartial appeals tribunal of the State, the State director of employment security, the legislature of the State, yes, and even the supreme court of the State, should telephone the regional representative of the Federal bureaucracy and ask what they should do.

Let me read you a brief excerpt from the transcript of the hearings held last December in the Department of Labor.

Mr. Millard, assistant attorney general of the State of Washington, stated:

"We do not want your answer now, but where could you later establish for us a line of demarcation, and where do we stop with reference to finding those facts?"

Mr. Donahue, Assistant Solicitor of the Department of Labor, replied:

"We can establish a line of demarcation the minute the situation appears to arise."

Mr. Millard then stated:

"The trouble is that under our statute, it might arise too late. There is a limitation on appeals and the matter might be closed."

Mr. Donahue then replied:

"You can get in touch with our regional representative, Mr. Brockway, within an hour. He is situated in California. It would take no more than 24 hours to get in touch with us."

Mr. Ernst, an employers' attorney then asked:

"What if the Supreme Court does not want to call up Mr. Brockway?"

Mr. Donahue made this amazing reply:

"If the Supreme Court does not want to call up Mr. Brockway, that presents not an unusual impasse that arises in this type of system. The legislature might not want to call up Mr. Brockway, but fortunately, very often we are able to give our advice to the legislature, as well as, in many instances, to the courts, with respect to those questions, if the Agency desires our advice on those matters."

In the face of the penalty involved, the State of Washington was compelled to surrender. That particular case is now disposed of. The important question now is whether we may expect from this time forward that the bureaucrats in the Department of Labor are going to control in every detail the administration of the State unemployment-compensation laws in all of the States. If our courts insist on maintaining their judicial integrity and refuse to bow to the Federal bureaucrats in interpreting the laws of the State, will the Federal bureaucrats hold that the State law is out of conformity with the requirements of the Federal statute? Will they penalize the employers of the State to the extent of millions of dollars in double taxes?

The amendment of the Senator from California will go far toward correcting this situation, although it does not go as far as I think it should. It does not provide for appeal from the decisions of the Secretary of Labor in certification cases. There should be such an appeal. However, the amendment of the Senator from California will make it much more difficult for the Secretary of Labor and his assistants to act in an arbitrary manner and it should be adopted.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, this amendment is one requested by the Interstate Conference of Unemployment Compensation Administrators as necessary legislation.

In December of last year the Secretary of Labor, through an employee of the Department of Labor, made highly important administrative decisions.

These administrative decisions hit the States of California and Washington, and in the case of the latter State resulted in a formal finding. They were decisions which might have resulted in unemployment-tax taxpayers in California and Washington having to pay into the Federal Treasury more than $200,000,000 which would not have been otherwise due or payable. The Secretary of Labor, under existing law, can make the same kind of decision with respect to any of the 48 States. He alone—not a three-member independent board as under the original act—can impose a Federal unemployment tax on the taxpayers of every State in the Union equal to exactly 10 times the amount of tax now paid. And he can base this penal action on mere unappealed benefit determinations made by a claims examiner or clerk in the employ of a State unemployment compensation agency, or he can do so on an appeals board decision. In December the States of California and Washington, in complete absence of opportunity for their courts to pass on the matters which the Secretary of Labor seized upon as basis for his action, were threatened with this potent penalty action.

Fortunately for California taxpayers and for Washington taxpayers, but unfortunately for the rights of the States, the State administrators were able to capitulate to the Secretary of Labor and satisfy his requirements of State conformity in the California and Washington cases before December 31 of last year. December 31 is the last day on which State laws may be certified to Treasury for tax credit for any year. The Secretary certified these States on the basis of negotiation and promises by the two State administrators. The State administrators had no choice. They could not be parties to the imposition of a $200,000,000 Federal tax penalty upon citizens of their own States.

All of this was done on the basis of reviewable administrative interpretations of State laws. The courts of the States were never afforded an opportunity to interpret the statutes on their own statute books.

This amendment does one principal thing and one only. It says to the Secretary of Labor that he must base his costly—in every sense of the word—decision of nonconformity with Federal statutory requirements only upon interpretations of State law which are made by the courts of the States involved. It tells the Secretary of Labor that he cannot, as he did with California and Washington, seize upon an appealable benefit decision perhaps made by State personnel of the lowest rank—unappealed, not reviewed by State administrator or State courts—as a basis for saying to a State, at the eleventh hour, that it is out of conformity, that it is for every practical purpose out of business. It confirms the rights of States to follow their own orderly review procedures, and permits their State courts to interpret their own State laws. It simply postpones action by the Secretary of Labor until the State judiciary has spoken; it does not deprive him of any power he now has, but merely restricts its premature exercise.

The only other provisions of the amendment are a clarifying change and a provision granting a 90-day period for a State declared out of conformity to amend its law and escape the penalties which would otherwise be imposed.

JUDICIAL REVIEW IN UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

The argument that individual hardships may result from delays incidental to judicial review is in fact an attack upon our whole system of justice.

Section 303 (a) of the Federal Social Security Act requires that every State unemployment compensation law shall provide "opportunity for a fair hearing, before an impartial tribunal, for all individuals whose claims for unemployment compensation are denied."

In the official Social Security Board publication, "Social Security in America," on page 127, the following guidance was given to States who were then establishing unemployment compensation systems:

> In its unemployment compensation act each State will need to draft provisions consistent with its judicial structure and procedure to specify (a) the type of legal action to be used for judicial review of contested cases; (b) the court or courts to be used; (c) transmission by the administrative agency of the record in the case; (d) assessment of court costs, etc.

Every State law has such judicial review provisions. These are essential. For benefits are payable as a matter of statutory right and it is of fundamental importance that the State courts shall have jurisdiction to interpret and apply the statute in an orderly manner to the various situations arising under the State law.

Only a small fraction of claims cases involve any dispute as to the law. But where a question of law is involved judicial review is essential. For only in this way can precedents be established and certainty and uniform application of the law be achieved.

Obviously some hardship and delay is encountered by any claimant who must go through this review procedure in establishing his claim, whether his claim be for unemployment compensation, old-age and survivors insurance, workmen's compensation, or be based on some tort or contract. In every such case, provision is made for court review, thus affording the claimant "opportunity for a fair hearing." In old-age and survivors' insurance the appeal from the highest administrative tribunal, under section 205 (g) of the Social Security Act, is to the Federal district court, and the judgment of that court, to quote the Federal provision, "shall be subject to review in the same manner as a judgment in other civil actions." Some of these cases have been before the Supreme Court of the United States.

The argument that judicial review works a hardship on the claimant and accordingly should be short-circuited in some way, or abandoned, is in fact an argument against our whole system of law. It assumes that rights can and will be determined and precedents established in some other way.

Any argument that the Secretary of Labor should be permitted to step in at some stage of a State claims procedure and relieve the claimant from further need to seek to establish his rights under State procedure, could be just as validly urged if he were attempting to establish old-age insurance or other Federal benefits. For the whole idea of such intervention is based on the assumption that because of some individual hardship in establishing a claim, the system of court review is wrong and should be scrapped. If this is in fact the case, we must revise all our concepts of orderly procedure, and amend all our laws governing the determination of disputed claims. We must thus choose between preserving judicial review in State unemployment-compensation systems and permitting intervention by the Secretary of Labor in the State claims procedure.

The fact that the claims procedure of the State must be complied with was consistently recognized throughout the administration of the Federal provisions for more than a decade by the Secretary of Labor's predecessors in functions. They did not once intervene in such procedure. The pending amendment merely requires the Secretary to continue this long-established principle.

Mr. President, I ask support for this amendment. I think it is a practical demonstration of States' rights.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is not an amendment to amend the old-age and survivors' insurance program; it is not an amendment to improve or to amend the old-age assistance program; in reality, it is not an amendment to improve or amend House bill 6000. It is an attempt to amend and, in fact, to repeal certain provisions of the unemployment insurance legislation.

As I understand, it would not seek to create a national program of unemployment insurance, but would establish 51 different programs of unemployment insurance. It would destroy the Federal minimum requirements in the program which has been created by Federal legislation and which is operated by Federal legislation. It would impair State and Federal cooperation with reference to the unemployment insurance program. In fact, it would open the door for the creation of 51 unemployment insurance programs by the States, which would thereby become the controlling factor with reference to the Federal Government, and not otherwise.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator aware that there are now 51 separate systems and that Federal control relates only to taxes?

Mr. KERR. I am aware of the fact that we have the opportunity for 51 variations of one program; but this amendment would require the Federal Government not to be a part of the overall program, but to meet the variations in the requirements of the 51 programs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield a minute to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this amendment would improve the present situation in which the Federal Government can step in at any time and tell the States how to administer the law.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I want to underscore what the Senator from Ohio has said. Power is still left in the Secretary of Labor. If, after normal procedures have been gone through, he wants to declare a State out of compliance, he can do so. Ninety days' time is provided within which the legislature can meet and get into compliance. It seems to me that of all cases, it is a case in which a State should be able to follow through with its own procedures. It is an arbitrary use of Federal power to try to invoke that power as was done in the California and Washington cases.

Mr. LEHMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following statement may be printed in the RECORD immediately preceding the vote on this amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has submitted an amendment to the bill we are now considering which would, in my judgment, have far-reaching effects upon uniform and effective administration of our unemployment-compensation system.

As I understand the amendment, it would make certain procedural changes in connection with the consideration and determination of questions of conformity of State laws with the Federal Social Security Act by the Secretary of Labor. It would also provide that the only type of change in a State law which the Secretary could consider would be an amendment of the law by act of the State legislature.

I am not, and I venture to think that few of us are, able to assess the full meaning and import of the procedural changes in the law that would be made by the Knowland amendment. But, surely, none of us are so naive as not to realize that in large measure a law is what administration makes that law to be. We have heard the argument advanced many times on the floor of this body that various administrative agencies of the Government have, in administering laws enacted by the Congress, changed the intent of Congress when it enacted that law. States are no more immune from this tendency, I submit, than are the agencies of the Federal Government. Under the amendment of the Senator from California, the unemployment-compensation authorities of a State could interpret their unemployment-compensation law in a manner wholly at variance from the clear intent of the language of the law, and the Secretary of Labor would be powerless to raise any question of whether that law continues to conform with the requirements laid down by the Congress. This would result, Mr. President, in a virtual abandonment by the Congress of any effort to assure uniformity and consistency of administration of the Social Security Act through the States insofar as unemployment insurance is concerned.

The other point that I want to make, Mr. President, is that it certainly does not seem to me as one Senator that an amendment of such a far-reaching character should first receive consideration on the floor of this body without our having the benefit of prior hearings and careful study by the committee headed by the very able and distinguished senior Senator from Georgia. I understand that an effort was made to bring this matter before the Committee on Finance during its deliberations on H. R. 6000. The committee, however, refused to take action on this amendment. It is my firm belief, Mr. President, that the Senate should refuse to approve this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All time on the amendment has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily absent, and if present would vote "nay." The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

On this vote the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR]. If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea," and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] would each vote "nay."

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—45

Brewster	Frear	Martin
Bricker	Fulbright	Millikin
Bridges	Gurney	Robertson
Butler	Hendrickson	Russell
Byrd	Hickenlooper	Saltonstall
Cain	Hoey	Schoeppel
Capehart	Ives	Smith, N. J.
Chapman	Jenner	Stennis
Cordon	Johnson, Tex.	Taft
Darby	Kem	Thye
Donnell	Knowland	Watkins
Dworshak	Lodge	Wherry
Eastland	McCarthy	Wiley
Ecton	McClellan	Williams
Ferguson	Malone	Withers

NAYS—37

Aiken	Hunt	Magnuson
Anderson	Johnson, Colo.	Maybank
Benton	Kefauver	Murray
Connally	Kerr	Myers
Douglas	Kilgore	Neely
Ellender	Leahy	O'Mahoney
Flanders	Lehman	Pepper
George	Long	Smith, Maine
Gillette	Lucas	Sparkman
Green	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Hayden	McFarland	Tydings
Hill	McKellar
Humphrey	McMahon

NOT VOTING—14

Chavez	Langer	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Morse	Tobey
Graham	Mundt	Vandenberg
Holland	O'Conor	Young
Johnston, S. C.	Taylor

So Mr. KNOWLAND'S amendment B was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I offer my amendment lettered "I," which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 378, line 4, after "provide" to insert a comma and "effective July 1, 1951";

On page 378, line 7, to strike out "and";

On page 378, line 11, to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "and (11) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this act."

On page 378, strike out lines 18 and 19 and insert in lieu thereof:

(d) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect July 1, 1951; the amendments made by subsection (b) shall take effect October 1, 1950.

On page 378, beginning with line 20, strike out all down to and including line 2 on page 379 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

COMPUTATION OF FEDERAL PORTION OF AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

SEC. 322. (a) Section 403 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1950, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to dependent children, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to dependent children under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $30, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $30 with respect to one such dependent child and $20 with respect to each of the other dependent children, and not counting so much of such expenditure for any month with respect to a relative with whom any dependent child is living as exceeds $30—

"(A) three-fourths of such expenditures, not counting so much of the expenditures with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $12 multiplied by the total number of dependent children and other individuals with respect to whom aid to dependent children is paid for such month, plus

"(B) one-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to dependent children, or both, and for no other purpose."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 1, 1950.

On page 379, line 10, after the word "children", insert a comma and the following: "and includes money payments, or medical care or any type of remedial care recognized under State law for any month to meet the needs of the relative with whom any dependent child is living if money payments have been made under the State plan with respect to such child for such month;

"(c) The term 'relative with whom any dependent child is living' means the individual who is one of the relatives specified in subsection (a) and with whom such a child is living (within the meaning of such subsection) in a place of residence maintained by such individual (himself or together with any one or more of the other relatives so specified) as his (or their) own home."

On page 381, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

(b) Clause (7) of such subsection is amended to read as follows:

"(7) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this act or aid to dependent children under the State plan approved under section 402 of this act."

On page 381, line 15, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

On page 382, line 4, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(d)."

On page 382, line 25, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(e)."

On page 382, line 25, strike out "subsection (c)" and insert in lieu thereof "subsections (b) and (d)."

Mr. LUCAS. The chairman of the Committee on Finance and the members of the committee this morning agreed to accept the amendment. In the past the program has provided aid to dependent children, but it has made no provision for parents or persons with whom such children are staying. This did not seem to be right and proper, and that is why the amendment is offered. It has been accepted by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE. The Committee on Finance has no objection to the amendment. The same provision is in the House bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a statement, let me say that I shall not oppose the amendment. However, if we were to adopt this amendment, $75,000,000 would be added to the expenses of the Federal Government and to the budget deficit for next year. It represents an increase in Federal aid out of general taxes, and giving the money to States in order to enable them to do a better job in aiding dependent children. I have very serious doubt, not so much about the program, but about the wisdom at this time of what amounts to appropriating money, because the Committee on Appropriations has no further ability to withhold this amount. I think it is an unwise course to follow. However, since the committee has approved the amendment, I shall not object to it.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Ohio is absolutely correct. The amendment does increase the appropriations for the State assistance program. However, the majority of the committee has agreed to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I call up my amendment 6–19–50—D.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment. Does the Senator wish the amendment to be read in full?

Mr. LONG. Do I understand that if the amendment is read in full the time consumed in reading it will be charged against my time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it will not be charged to the Senator's time.

Mr. LONG. If it is not to be charged to my time, I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG'S amendment entire is as follows:

On page 385, line 6, to strike out "Part 5—Miscellaneous Amendments" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"PART 5—AID TO THE DISABLED

"SEC. 351. The Social Security Act is further amended by adding after title XIII thereof the following new title:

"'TITLE XIV—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE DISABLED

"'APPROPRIATION

"'SEC. 1401. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy disabled individuals who are unable to engage in any substantially gainful activity by reason of medically demonstrable physical or mental impairment, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, the sum of $50,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Administrator, State plans for aid to the disabled.

"'STATE PLANS FOR AID TO THE DISABLED

"'SEC. 1402. (a) A State plan for aid to the disabled must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting an opportunity for a fair hearing before the State agency to any individual whose claim for aid to the disabled is denied or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness; (5) provide that in cases where doubt exists as to the disability, State plans shall require that a panel of three doctors certified by the State agency must examine the applicant and agree unanimously upon the eligibility of the applicant; (6) provide such methods of administration as are found by the Administrator to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Administrator shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods; (7) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Administrator may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Administrator may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; (8) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this act, aid to dependent children under the State plan approved under section 402 of this act, or aid to the blind under the State plan approved under section 1002 of this act; (9) provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming aid to the disabled; (10) provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants and recipients to purposes directly connected with the administration of aid to the disabled; (11) provide that all individuals wishing to make application for aid to the disabled shall have opportunity to do so, and that aid to the disabled shall be furnished with reasonable promptness to all eligible individuals; and (12) effective July 1, 1953, provide, if the plan includes assistance to individuals in private or public institutions, for the establishment or designation of a State authority or authorities which shall be responsible for establishing and maintaining standards for such institutions.

"'(b) The Administrator shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid to the disabled under the plan—

"'(1) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein continuously for 1 year immediately preceding the application for aid;

"'(2) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

"'PAYMENT TO STATES

"'SEC. 1403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to the disabled, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1950, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the disabled, equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to the disabled under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $50—

"'(A) three-fourths of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditure with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $20 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who received old-age assistance for such month, plus

"'(B) one-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the disabled, or both, and for no other purpose.

"'(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

"'(1) The Administrator shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than the State's proportionate share of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of disabled individuals in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Administrator may find necessary.

"'(2) The Administrator shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Administrator, (A) reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which he finds that his estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under subsection (a) for such quarter, and (B) reduced by a sum equivalent to the pro rata share to which the United States is equitably entitled, as determined by the Administrator, of the net amount recovered during a prior quarter by the State or any political subdivision thereof with respect to aid to the disabled furnished under the State plan; except that such increases or reductions shall not be made to the extent that such sums have been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Administrator for such prior quarter: Provided, That any part of the amount recovered from the estate of a deceased recipient which is not in excess of the amount expended by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the funeral expenses of the deceased shall not be considered as a basis for reduction under clause (B) of this paragraph.

"'(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon through the fiscal service of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Administrator, the amount so certified.

"'OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"'SEC. 1404. In the case of any State plan for aid to the disabled which has been approved by the Administrator, if the Administrator after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

"'(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 1402 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

"'(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 1402 (a) to be included in the plan;

the Administrator shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

"'DEFINITION

"'SEC. 1405. For purposes of this title, the term "aid to the disabled" means money payments to, or medical care in behalf of or any type of remedial care recognized under State law in behalf of, needy individuals who are disabled, but does not include money payments to or medical care in behalf of any individual who is an inmate of a public institution (except as a patient in a medical institution) and does not include money payments to or medical care in behalf of any individual (a) who is a patient in an institution for tuberculosis or mental diseases, or (b) who has been diagnosed as having tuberculosis or psychosis and is a patient in a medical institution as a result thereof.

"'PART 6—MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS'"

On page 385, line 7, strike out "351" and insert in lieu thereof "361".

Mr. LONG. I should like to explain that this amendment is phrased substantially in the language of the provision which the House committee approved and the House of Representatives passed. It provides for the Federal Government to aid indigent persons. This is not an insurance program. I wish Senators to bear that fact in mind. Under this program the Federal Government would match the States in providing for disabled persons who are indigent. Rather than using such terms as "total and permanent disability," or "totally and permanently disabled," I have used the description "who are unable to engage in any substantially gainful activity by reason of medically demonstrable physical or mental impairment." I think that language is much better than the other language.

Furthermore, this amendment provides that before those who are disabled may be aided by a State-Federal program for the needy disabled, a panel of three doctors must examine and unanimously approve any disabled applicant who may apply for aid.

Mr. President, based on my study of this program, in my humble opinion one of the greatest shortcomings of our present system is that no Federal aid whatever is provided for those who are totally disabled from earning a living. I have the great honor to represent in part the State of Louisiana, a State of two and a half million people. I should like Senators to listen to the kind of ailments which are included in total disability. Persons who suffer from these ailments but who have not reached the mature age of 65 years cannot be aided by the Federal Government. In the State of Louisiana 17,900 needy persons suffer from heart disease, such as coronary thrombosis, or high blood pressure. Doctors have advised many of them that if they should attempt to work they would die as a result of straining themselves. I know that the committee feels it would like to see people rehabilitated rather than to be cared for under an aid-to-disabled program, however, two-thirds of the people in my State who are being aided, are suffering from heart diseases, such as coronary thrombosis, and other similar ailments which would kill many of them if they should try to work. I notice that in my State about two and a half percent of the persons in this category, or 813, have cancer. Certainly they would not be able to take care of themselves. There are 6,000 cases of arthritis and rheumatism, and 4,000 cases of mental and nervous disorders, by reason of which they are not able to earn any type of living.

Today we have no way of helping these people. Many States are unable even to aid their aged persons substantially. For example, when one looks at page 54 of the committee report he will see that many of the poorer States—and some of them are among the Southern States—are able to put up only a small amount of money to match funds of the Federal Government in looking after their aged and blind where there is a Federal matching program. By failure to have any matching or any provision whatsoever for these disabled persons, those States are not able to set up any kind of a program for the aged and indigent.

Mr. President, this is not a social-security insurance program; this is a matching provision which would have in mind the Federal and the State governments working together to match funds to make it possible to help deserving disabled persons.

In my State 3 percent of those who are disabled are bedridden, unable to get up out of bed, by doctor's orders. Eleven percent are partially ambulatory, not able to get around to any considerable extent. I think that anyone who made a study of this matter would find that the cases of crying need going without assistance are cases of those who are disabled. In most cases, I would say in almost 90 percent of the cases, the disability is a result of cancer, heart disease, arthritis, rheumatism, or similar maladies.

So far as we are able to determine, the program would require about $50,000,000 to match the amounts being afforded by the States. I presume States which have a program for their aged would divert some of their funds to help the cases of crying need, which the Federal Government cannot help today. It would then be possible for those States who today cannot do anything for the totally disabled to use their funds to help other people.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. HUNT. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the committee has given great consideration to the problem raised by the amendment. It has been one which has given the committee great concern. The particular provision referred to will be in conference. It is in the bill as it passed the House, and we will have full opportunity to consider it in conference. It was that reason, among others, which the committee bore in mind in recommending against this particular amendment.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Georgia has stated, the subject will be in conference. I should like to invite attention also to the fact that one of the specified studies to be undertaken by the Study Committee is the relation of the social-security program to care, income maintenance, and rehabilitation of disabled workers. I believe that the committee could easily, under its general authority, continue the study of this subject if nothing should come out of the conference committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to call attention to the issue we really have before us. It is, how far shall we increase Federal aid to the States out of general funds? The whole appeal made by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is based on the fact that the States have no money with which to pay cash benefits. Most of the disabled are taken care of in institutions, in one way or another, but what we are asked to consider now is cash benefits to the disabled, and the Senator says the States have no money with which to pay such benefits.

The Federal Government has no money with which to do it. There is a deficit at the present time, regardless of the merits of the amendment, of $5,000,000,000. To say that we must come to the aid of the States, who are able to pay their own way, who are balancing their budgets at the present time, seems to be a wholly fallacious argument, regardless of the merits of the proposal.

In Louisiana today, of persons over 65 years of age, 791 out of every thousand are on the public payroll, paid with Federal funds—791 out of 1,000. In the State of Ohio there are less than 200 out of 1,000. In many States, such as the State of New Jersey——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I have no time to yield. In New Jersey 67 out of 1,000 are on the public payroll. The question of whether cash benefits shall be extended, the payment of cash to persons because they are hard up, is a serious one. We have to consider the whole problem of poverty, of all the people who are unable to make a living, who today are supported by the States. In general, of course, the States have the primary obligation to take care of those who are unable to pay their own way. That is their obligation. How far shall the Federal Government relieve them of it?

I admit that the Federal Government should step in when the need is clearly shown, when we have the money and the States have not the money. At the present time the States have the money and the Federal Government has not the money.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

Mr. MILLIKIN. Has the time been exhausted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is about half a minute left.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would merely like to say that the question will be in conference as the bill stands now, because the provision is not in the Senate committee bill, but it is in the bill as it passed the House. Thus the matter is ready for consideration by the conference.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. If present and voting the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—41

Anderson	Kefauver	Mundt
Benton	Kerr	Murray
Chapman	Kilgore	Myers
Douglas	Leahy	Neely
Eastland	Lehman	O'Mahoney
Ecton	Long	Pepper
Ellender	Lucas	Russell
Frear	McCarran	Smith, N. J.
Green	McCarthy	Sparkman
Hayden	McFarland	Stennis
Hill	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Humphrey	McMahon	Tydings
Hunt	Magnuson	Withers
Johnson, Tex.	Maybank

NAYS—42

Aiken	Flanders	McClellan
Brewster	Fulbright	Malone
Bricker	George	Martin
Bridges	Gillette	Millikin
Butler	Gurney	Robertson
Byrd	Hendrickson	Saltonstall
Cain	Hickenlooper	Schoeppel
Capehart	Hoey	Smith, Maine
Connally	Ives	Taft
Cordon	Jenner	Thye
Darby	Johnson, Colo.	Watkins
Donnell	Kem	Wherry
Dworshak	Knowland	Wiley
Ferguson	Lodge	Williams

NOT VOTING—13

Chavez	Langer	Tobey
Downey	Morse	Vandenberg
Graham	O'Conor	Young
Holland	Taylor
Johnston, S. C.	Thomas, Okla.

So Mr. LONG's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, for the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and myself, I offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 278, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "sixty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the amendment, if adopted, would reduce the retirement age for both men and women from 65 to 60 years. The present law provides old-age benefits for the retired worker and his wife, for the widow without children, and for the dependent parent of a deceased worker only after the attainment of the age of 65. The committee amendment leaves the present law unaltered.

In the case of women the reasons which warrant a reduction in the retirement age are obvious and persuasive. Such action was urged by the Federal Security Agency and is supported by every profound student of the social-security system. The essential fact is that under peacetime conditions relatively few women over 60 work for wages. The most recently available census data show that more than four out of five women in the 60-to-64 age group do not hold paying positions, whereas only one out of five men in the same age group is not in the labor force. The exact figures are that while only 21 percent of the male population aged 60 to 64 is not in the labor force, the corresponding figure for women is nearly 85 percent.

A reduction in the qualifying age for women would be of enormous assistance to aged couples. Wives are customarily a few years younger than their husbands, so that today, when a man reaches the age of 65, the only benefit available for the couple is likely to be the husband's benefit. At the present time only about one-fifth of the wives are eligible for benefits when the husband attains the age of 65. If the wives' benefits are payable at 60, the proportion is raised to about three-fifths.

There is another point of great significance. A woman widowed at the age of 60, who has not previously been employed, finds it far more difficult than a younger woman to locate paid employment. At present only about one widow in four is eligible for widow's benefits immediately upon the death of her husband. With an age requirement of 60, about 40 percent of such widows would be eligible immediately. The same considerations are applicable in the case of a mother who survives a son or daughter on whom she had been dependent.

If the eligibility age for wives, widows, and dependent mothers is lowered to 60, the retirement age for women primary beneficiaries should also be lowered. Although many women who have been working regularly will doubtless prefer to continue working after the age of 60, working women who become unemployed at the age of 60 should not be required to wait until 65 for benefits if other women receive dependents' or survivor benefits at the lowered age.

The considerations which support a reduction in the retirement age for men are different but equally compelling. Increased mechanization and improved labor processes have brought about an increase in productivity which during recent years has averaged 2½ percent or more annually. The benefits of this increased productivity are reflected in rising living standards, and it is altogether equitable that a higher standard of living be achieved by way of an earlier retirement age no less than in an increased consumption of automobiles, refrigerators, and other similar goods.

More important is the fact that in this age of new and high-speed technology men, no less than machines, wear out at an earlier age. In a simple handicraft economy, age was a far lesser handicap. Today in many industries, complicated, high-speed machines demand younger men for their servicing. In other industries, such as mining, the nature of the work takes a heavier toll in the early years. The need for an earlier retirement age is not universal throughout the economy, but it is sufficiently widespread to require action now. The essential purpose in reducing the retirement age for men from 65 to 60 is to permit those who labor in extra-hazardous occupations or in industries where they have been displaced by younger men to obtain benefits at the age of 60 for their support. Not every worker will accept the invitation to retire—today the average retirement age is 68 or 69—but the possibility will exist for those who have no other alternative.

The total cost of reducing the retirement age from 65 to 60 in the case of both men and women in approximately 2 percent of the Nation's payroll. Social-security experts have estimated that this total of 2 percent is approximately equally divided between men and women. Both parties have pledged an extension of the social-security program to provide additional protection against the hazards of old age, disability, disease, and death. A reduction in the eligibility age from 65 to 60 years is a step in the right direction. It is my sincere hope that the Senators present will provide the opportunity to take that step, and take it now.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment, of course, in the case of women workers, makes a very strong appeal. I, myself, felt that the retirement age should be reduced from 65 to 60 years. But in looking into the matter, I found that, according to the statistics, women outlive men and that men are now living about 12 years beyond the retirement age of 65. In other words, each year longevity is increasing.

Mr. President, this particular amendment would cost the system or would add to the tax burdens about 2½ percent on all payrolls, or not far from an addition of $3,000,000,000 annually on a level-premium basis. Already this bill, to which your committee has given many long weeks of labor and study, will on a level-premium base, cost the general economy, which means the workers and their employers, more than 6 percent of the combined payroll, within a comparatively short period of time. This amendment, if adopted, would increase that cost to 9 percent or very close to 9 percent of the total payroll. If Senators wish to break down the system, they can do so by putting upon it a burden which it cannot carry.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that during the past 10 years, before any increase in the benefits, as provided in House bill 6000, every reputable economist who testified on this subject before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and before the Senate Finance Committee stated that we already had a 6-percent program—3 percent on the employer and 3 percent on the employee—before we add the new benefits carried in this bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in addition to what I have already said, when Dr. Altmeyer, of the Federal Security Agency, himself came before the committee on the first or second day of the hearings, as I recall, I asked him the specific question whether we could lower the retirement age limit for women workers to 60 years of age. He said he had been forced to abandon the idea because of the very heavy cost it would add to the system.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that the Senate reject the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] for himself and his colleague [Mr. KILGORE]. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The "noes" seem to have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, has all time on the amendment expired?

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator from Maine address the Chair?

Mr. BREWSTER. I rise to inquire whether any time is left for discussion of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia had several minutes left, but he was not yielding to any other Senator at that time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I was addressing the Chair, to inquire whether the Senator would yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment has already been rejected. Like the lawyer who appeared before the Supreme Court of Georgia, I would not want to lose the case [laughter] in this instance, by listening to an eloquent appeal by my distinguished friend and member of the committee. However, I gladly yield to the Senator from Maine whatever time I have left.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I shall conduct myself with the utmost circumspection.

I wish to join with the Senator from Georgia in expressing the hope that the amendment will be rejected, and at the same time I wish to express my regret that I was not present when the so-called George-Millikin resolution was considered by the Senate. At that time I was called to the telephone.

I wish to associate myself with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in his expression of interest in the study which is to be made of the so-called Townsend plan, as one who has long believed in the wisdom of the fundamental principles upon which that plan is based. I wish to have it made clear that I was associating myself in the earnest hope that the study which will be made during the recess will lead to a far more serious consideration of that program than, in my judgment, it has thus far received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

The Chair will put the question again: The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] for himself and his colleague [Mr. KILGORE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment marked "5–22–50—A," being the amendment to include Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands along with the States which are to receive assistance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 387, beginning with line 13, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 21, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 403. (a) (1) Paragraph (1) of section 1101 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The term 'State' includes Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia, and when used in titles I, IV, V, and X includes Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands."

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 1101 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The term 'Administrator' except when the context otherwise requires, means the Federal Security Administrator."

(3) The amendment made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall take effect October 1, 1950, and the amendment made by paragraph (2) of this subsection, insofar as it repeals the definition of "employee", shall be effective only with respect to services performed after 1950.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, no geographic area in the United States more urgently needs the public assistance provisions of House bill 6000 than Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

My amendment is a very simple one, in that it includes Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands in the definition of States. I believe that all the titles of the Social Security Act should be applicable to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands on the same basis on which they are applicable to the States.

All these titles are already applicable to Alaska and Hawaii. It is eminently unfair to exclude Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. In Puerto Rico, out of a labor force of 700,000, an average of 100,000 are usually unemployed. I say say "usually" because of the seasonal nature of employment in both Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

It is true that Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands do not pay taxes into the United States Treasury on the same basis as the States of the Union. But this is not a failure on their part. It is a waiver on the part of the Federal Government in recognition of the Peculiar economic conditions pertaining in those islands.

The cost of the application of the public assistance titles to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands would be slightly more than $9,000,000. Of this, $8,213,000 would be for Puerto Rico and $165,000 would be for the Virgin Islands.

We dare not forfeit our obligations to these American citizens.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to make a simple observation?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is a great deal of merit in what the Senator from New York says; but I wonder whether he has in mind that Puerto Rico already is permitted to keep in its island treasury its income taxes, taxes which all the States of the United States pay into the Federal Treasury and, in addition, that Puerto Rico is permitted to keep in its island treasury the liquor taxes, tobacco taxes, and so forth. So we already are giving to Puerto Rico more than $50,000,000 of revenue a year coming from taxes which the States are required to pay into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LEHMAN. I realize that; but those taxes are retained in Puerto Rico for the support of the government there; they are not used for old-age pensions or public assistance.

Mr. President, as I just said, we dare not forfeit our obligations to these American citizens. They are American citizens just as much as are the citizens of San Diego, Chicago, or New York. In fact, when Puerto Ricans or Virgin Islanders come to New York, they are automatically eligible for public-assistance payments. There is no reason for considering them less eligible when they are in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands.

The House Ways and Means Committee studied very exhaustively this special problem of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. A subcommittee went to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and studied the conditions there and conferred with the officials of those islands concerning their needs and desires. As a result of those conferences, the local governments of these two Territories made all legislative arrangements required in order for them to receive and to match the Federal grants.

The House approved the inclusion of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands in the public-assistance provisions, although the formula was somewhat less generous than that which I propose in my amendment.

I believe that the Senate committee acted unwisely and without giving due consideration to the international implications of excluding Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. These two Territories are our dependent Territories. The manner in which we treat the peoples of these two Territories will be, if we discriminate against them, used in propaganda against us.

I urge with all the conviction at my command that we approve the pending amendment and that we make these islands eligible for public-assistance grants on the same basis as any other part of the United States is eligible.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York had not himself offered this amendment, I am sure that I should have done so.

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has immediate concern over the peoples and the government of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Both these areas were brought into the United States by the action of our Government, not primarily by the action of the people of those islands. The Virgin Islands were purchased by the Government of the United States. Puerto Rico was taken over by the United States as a result of the Spanish-American War.

I think the Government and the people of the United States owe an absolute obligation to the peoples of those islands to treat them in the way that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York provides. I certainly hope that this amendment will be adopted, so that the Government of the United States may carry out its full responsibility toward the peoples of these islands.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make only a brief statement. This matter was given full and due consideration by the committee. The truth is that all the taxes paid in the Virgin Islands are returned to the islands with a greatly increased sum. The truth also is, as the distinguished Senator from Maryland has pointed out, that Puerto Rico retains all of its internal taxes and retains all the income taxes. This is the amendment to increase the assistance to States. Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are brought under the old-age and survivors insurance title of this act, and with very greatly improved eligibility requirements in the pending bill; and, in view of a special provision which we inserted largely to take care of the situation in Puerto Rico, the people of those islands will receive great benefit under the bill. But since they keep all their taxes and even more than their taxes, the view of the committee was against bringing them in under the State assistance program or the grants.

I yield whatever time I have to the Senator from Colorado or to anyone else whom he may wish to yield it to.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Since this matter is in the House bill, not in the Senate committee bill, I suggest it can be handled in conference, and that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am opposed to the inclusion of Puerto Rico, but I personally should want to see the Virgin Islands included. The reason for that is, as was said by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, that we permit Puerto Rico to keep all the excise taxes, for instance, which are levied on the rum which they make, which taxes are in fact paid by the people of the United States. It is just as if we let North Carolina take all the tobacco taxes which come into the United States Treasury, for the State of North Carolina. We give the Puerto Ricans about $10,000,000 off on their income taxes, which they retain. We do not get the income taxes from Puerto Rico, which amount to $20,000,000 more. So that we are in effect making a cash credit to Puerto Rico of $30,000,000, far more than would be the additional aid given in this bill.

I have every sympathy for measures designed to aid Puerto Rico, and I have always supported them, but it seems to me, while they have such an over-all grant from the United States, there is no reason to include Puerto Rico under various State-aid programs. This is about the only thing they do not get. I see no reason for the amendment. The Virgin Islands pay their taxes, and so, so far as I am concerned, if the question should be in conference and I were on the committee I should be in favor of the proposal for the Virgin Islands.

I may say also, as has been suggested, that we have included Puerto Rico in old-age and survivors insurance. They pay the taxes like anyone else, and they will get the benefits.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. Is it not a fact that there are now certain States of the Union which, while taxes are collected within their borders, receive more from the Federal Government in the form of grants of various kinds and relief and old-age assistance and public assistance than the amount which the Federal Government receives from them in the form of revenue?

Mr. TAFT. It is impossible to tell what the Federal Government gets from them, but I think probably that is so. But there is no State in the Union which is permitted, as Puerto Rico is, to keep the income taxes paid to the Federal Government. The Puerto Rican income tax is entirely retained by Puerto Rico. The revenue taxes paid on rum made there and sold to the people of the United States at $9 a gallon are retained by Puerto Rico. I say it is exactly as though North Carolina kept the tobacco tax. There is no State in the entire United States that is in that situation.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Now, I think I am through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which I have already sent to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 312, between lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

SERVICES FOR COOPERATIVES PRIOR TO 1951

SEC. 110. In any case in which—

(1) an individual has been employed at any time prior to 1951 by organization enumerated in the first sentence of section 101 (12) of the Internal Revenue Code,

(2) the service performed by such individual during the time he was so employed constituted agricultural labor as defined in section 209 (1) of the Social Security act and section 1426 (h) of the Internal Revenue Code, as in effect prior to the enactment of this act, and such service would, but for the provisions of such sections, have constituted employment for the purposes of title II of the Social security act and subchapter A of chapter 9 of such Code,

(3) the taxes imposed by sections 1400 and 1410 of the Internal Revenue Code have been paid with respect to any part of the remuneration paid to such individual by such organization for such service and the payment of such taxes by such organization has been made in good faith upon the assumption that such service did not constitute agricultural labor as so defined, and

(4) no refund of such taxes has been obtained, the amount of such remuneration with respect to which such taxes have been paid shall be deemed to constitute remuneration for employment as defined in section 209 (b) of the Social Security act as in effect prior to the enactment of this act (but it shall not constitute wages for purposes of deductions under section 203 of such act for months for which benefits under title II of such act have been certified and paid prior to the enactment of this act).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a half minute?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senate Finance Committee has considered this amendment, and has unanimously approved it. Earlier, in the consideration of the bill—that is, at least after the committee went into executive session—I had conversations with both the distinguished senior Senator and junior Senator from Utah about this matter. Both have been interested in the subject matter. The committee unanimously recommends that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a statement with respect to this amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WATKINS

This amendment provides retroactive benefits for employees of farmer cooperatives whose status under the existing social-security law is doubtful because of the recent case of Henry R. Azevedo, claimant, social security account No. [redacted]. The emendment provides that employees of farmer cooperatives, who together with their employers have contributed to the social-security fund in the past in the belief that they were covered by the law, would be accorded credits to which such payments entitle them, provided no refunds have been paid.

There has been some suggestion that because these amendments accord retroactive coverage benefits they should not be enacted. However, retroactive benefits have been accorded in the past (1946 U. S. C. Cong. Serv. 948). In an amendment, enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress, veterans of World War II were accorded retroactive coverage benefits for the time served in the armed services. Furthermore, these retroactive benefits were accorded even though no contributions to the fund were made by the veterans or by any employers. It was simply a gratuitous offering on the part of the Government.

If the Azevedo case is carried to its logical conclusion, employers of farmer cooperatives may not receive refunds of taxes paid, except for the last 4 years of the contributing period. Unfortunate as that may be, it is not as unfortunate as the fact that their employees suddenly learn that they have not been in covered employment for many years during which contributions have been made. In other words, the amendment does not request coverage for a class of employees who have made no payments to the social-security fund, as was the case with World War II veterans; the amendment provides only for a correction of an inequity where both employers and employees have made the necessary contributions to obtain such coverage and desire to obtain that coverage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment "I."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 385, it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 5, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be effective only for the period beginning October 1, 1950.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this amendment corrects a rather peculiar situation which has arisen in Pennsylvania, and, I understand, also in Missouri. I further understand that this amendment had the sanction of the Finance Committee this morning.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I may say that the committee considered this amendment, and the committee has approved it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the committee accepts it, I merely ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a brief statement which I had prepared explaining the amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MYERS

This amendment, Mr. President, has the sanction of the committee majority. It corrects a rather peculiar situation which has arisen in Pennsylvania and, as I understand it, in Missouri.

For 15 years now, Pennsylvania has operated what many regard as the most enlightened program of assistance to the blind that exists anywhere. Since 1938 Pennsylvania has been forced to pay dearly for its liberal program, for, since that time, it has not received a single penny in Federal assistance for its blind pension. The reason, Mr. President, boils down to this:

Under existing law, the Federal Security Agency has felt that it did not have the power to approve funds for any State program which did not conform to the rigid standards set forth in the law. This provision, which was intended primarily to promote minimum standards among the State programs for the blind, has had the effect of precluding development of State programs more liberal than provided for under existing Federal legislation.

Had Pennsylvania been willing to cut back its program for the blind—knocking out the additional liberal provisions of its own program—Federal funds would have gone to the State. However, the State has chosen, instead, to maintain its program, with the result that it has been forced to pay for it exclusively out of State funds.

The Senate Committee, in reporting H. R. 6000, sought to correct this situation temporarily by permitting the Social Security Administrator to approve Federal grants to Pennsylvania and Missouri for the period of the next 3 years. These funds would be available to the State only for that fraction of the blind population whose incomes met the rigid needs test specified in the Federal law. But, on the other hand, the State would be free to operate out of its own funds its pension program for the other blind persons whose incomes were in excess of the Federal maximum.

All my amendment does, Mr. President, is to make permanent this temporary provision. And this is accomplished by striking from the bill the date of July 1, 1953.

I want to repeat one thought, although I have mentioned it briefly in my preceding remarks. The amendment simply means that Pennsylvania and Missouri will be permitted to continue their present enlightened programs and will only receive such Federal assistance as they would receive were they to cut back to the less liberal standards of the Federal requirement. Insofar as assistance to other blind persons is concerned, that phase of the State program will continue, as it has in the past, to be supported entirely by State funds.

So, Mr. President, I urge that my amendment be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize all Senators when he gets to them, but he can only recognize one at a time. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I desire to call up my amendment F.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want the amendment read in full?

Mr. KILGORE. No.

The amendment offered by Mr. KILGORE is as follows:

On page 290, line 5, change the period to a semicolon and add the following: "and the term 'State-wide retirement system' means a retirement system established by a State which covers any class or classes of its employees and any class or classes of employees of one or more political subdivisions of the State or covers any class or classes of employees of two or more political subdivisions of the State."

On page 290, delete lines 6 through 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(5) The term 'coverage group' means (A) employees of the State other than those in positions covered by a State-wide retirement system and those engaged in performing service in connection with a proprietary function; (B) employees of a political subdivision of a State other than those in positions covered by a State-wide retirement system and those engaged in performing service in connection with a proprietary function; (C) employees of the State and employees of its political subdivisions who are in positions covered by a State-wide retirement system; (D) employees of a State engaged in performing service in connection with a single proprietary function; or (E) employees of a political subdivision of a State engaged in performing service in connection with a single proprietary function."

On page 292, delete lines 12 through 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) (1) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that (A) the total benefit rights and protection afforded individuals employed, at the time of the referendum referred to in paragraph (2) of this subsection, in positions covered under a retirement system in effect on the date the agreement is entered into, or receiving periodic benefits under such retirement system at the time of such referendum, will not be reduced or impaired as a result of such agreement or legislative enactment in anticipation thereof, and (B) the total benefit rights and protection afforded individuals thereafter employed in positions which at the time of such referendum were covered by such retirement system will not be less, as a result of such agreement or legislative enactment in anticipation thereof, than those previously provided under such retirement system.

"(2) No agreement with any State may include services performed in positions covered by a retirement system in effect on the date the agreement is entered into unless the State requests such inclusion and the Governor of the State certifies to the Administrator that the following conditions have been met:

"(A) A written referendum, on the question whether services in positions covered by such retirement system should be excluded from or included under the agreement, was requested in a petition signed by at least one-third of the employees who were in such positions on the date of the petition.

"(B) Such referendum was held by secret ballot within the period prescribed in paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(C) An opportunity to vote in such referendum was given (and was limited) to the employees who were in such positions at the time the referendum was held.

"(D) Ninety days' notice of such referendum was given to all such employees.

"(E) Such referendum was conducted under the supervision of the Governor, or of an appropriate official of the State or of the retirement system designated by him.

"(F) Not less than three-fourths of the voters, and two-thirds of the individuals eligible to vote, in such referendum voted in favor of including services in such positions under the agreement.

This subsection shall not be construed to require that the Governor of any State initiate or conduct such referendum, nor, if such referendum is conducted and the result is in accordance with the conditions specified in subparagraph (F), that services in positions covered by such retirement system be included in the agreement; and the Governor may, if he deems it appropriate, require a larger majority than that specified in subparagraph (F).

"(3) No modification of an agreement with any State may provide for the inclusion of services performed in positions covered by a retirement system in effect on the date the modification is agreed to unless the State requests such inclusion and the Governor of the State makes a certification which meets the requirements of paragraph (1).

"(4) The period within which a referendum must be held for the purposes of this subsection shall be the period beginning 1 year before the effective date of the agreement and ending on the date such agreement is entered into, except that in the case of a modification of an agreement such period shall begin 1 year before the effective date of the modification and end on the date such modification is agreed to."

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to make a brief explanation of the amendment, in lieu of having it read in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, my amendment "F" to the Senate committee's version of H. R. 6000 would add to the bill provisions of the House version concerning coverage of State and local government employees who are covered by retirement systems, with the following changes:

First. A declaration of congressional policy is included to indicate that it is not the intent of the Congress that existing retirement systems be impaired.

Second. A referendum concerning coverage could be held only at the written request of one-third of the members of the retirement system, and would have to be conducted and supervised by the governor or by an appropriate official designated by him.

Third. Ninety days' advance notice of the referendum would have to be given.

Fourth. The referendum would have to be by secret ballot.

Fifth. Two-thirds of those eligible to vote, and 75 percent of those actually voting, would have to vote in favor of coverage.

Sixth. Language is included to make it clear that no action at all need be taken to conduct a referendum or to cover retirement systems under the agreement, if the State does not wish to do so.

Mr. President, I have been trying for a number of years to protect State and subordinate group employees. A great number of them are covered by vastly inferior retirement systems at the present time. In most States, under existing Federal law, it is utterly impossible. This would provide a Federal policy which would permit each State to determine what it is going to do, leaving it up to the employees, who, by a two-thirds vote of 75 percent of the entire group, could decide in favor of utilizing the Federal retirement system.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I offer a substitute amendment for the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. It is my amendment E.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 292, line 17, before the period, to insert a comma and the following: "unless such agreement contains such provisions as the Administrator may determine to be appropriate to assure, so far as it is practicable and feasible to do so, that such retirement system will not be abolished or made inapplicable to members of such coverage group or that the benefits provided under such retirement system will not be reduced."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not offer this amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, because I am opposed to his amendment, but I think my amendment is a much better solution of the problem which the Senator from West Virginia and other Senators, including myself, desire to solve.

There are approximately 1,400,000 persons in the United States under municipal and local subdivisions of government having pension systems, and they would not want to come under a Federal pension system if that system would impair their present local system. In many cases, as the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out, the Federal system would be better, but in many other cases it would not be as good. The House bill provides that by a two-thirds vote they may come under the Federal system——

Mr. KILGORE. If 75 percent of them vote in favor of it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The Senate version has no provision whatsoever for employees under municipal pension systems coming under the provisions of the bill. My amendment provides that if the Administrator can work out a satisfactory agreement with the local government or the local units of government, employees may be permitted to come under the Federal system. I think that is a sensible way to approach the problem.

I have been in contact with most of the units of municipal and State employees in my State, and they are pretty much in agreement with my amendment. I think it is a good amendment. I hope the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] will take it to conference, because the House bill provides for something which is somewhat similar to that which is provided by the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia. It gives 2,400,000 employees no greater privileges than are now given to those who have private pension systems in industry.

I hope my amendment will be agreed to and will be taken to conference.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. I merely want to say to the Senator that I think we are both driving in the same direction. If the Senator from Washington can say that his amendment will give as complete satisfaction to employees as would the amendment which I have offered, I would have no opposition to it whatever. My amendment would simply put the question up to the employees themselves. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington would put it up to a State official in charge of the work in the State. Both amendments aim at the same objective. I happen to believe in the democratic way of leaving it to the employees. The Senator from Washington has apparently received word that the other system would be better. In case his amendment is adopted, if he will absolve me from blame with those persons who favor my program, I certainly shall absolve the Senator from blame as to his groups.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I am sure it can be worked out, because the House bill now provides for a two-thirds vote. The persons whom I have contacted who represent municipal employees seem to think that if this flexibility is placed in the hands of the Administrator, where pension systems of municipal and State employees are such that they would like to come under the Federal system, they can work out a satisfactory agreement.

I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MAGNUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD following my remarks on my amendment a letter and a telegram pertaining to this subject.

There being no objection, the letter and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON FEDERATION OF STATE EMPLOYEES,
Olympia, Wash., May 19, 1950.

Hon. WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MAGNUSON: In previous correspondence with you, you are acquainted with the position of our organization with regard to extension of the survivors' insurance plan of social security to public employees. We were unalterably opposed to the provision in H. R. 2893, passed by the House in the Eightieth Congress, that completely excluded public employees already in an existing local retirement system. Largely through the efforts of our international, the current social security measure as it was passed by the House (H. R. 6000) contained a provision (sec. 218 (d)) which would require a referendum vote among members of an existing retirement system, and a two-thirds favorable vote in such a referendum before such members could be accepted into social security. Our organization highly favored this provision.

However, considerable opposition developed from other States, and from groups that are not truly representative of public employees to this provision, with the result that the Senate Finance Committee eliminated the provision and substituted the same obnoxious provision of total exclusion contained in H. R. 2893. Our international was in session in its biennial convention at Omaha, Nebr., at the time, and called for a public hearing of all State delegations from States that have existing retirement systems. From this hearing came a new proposed amendment, that completely satisfied the entire membership of our international and was adopted unanimously by the convention. Our proposed amendment is: That as a substitute for the House proposal in section 218 (b) and the Senate Finance Committee's provision, that section 218 (b) be amended to read substantially as follows:

"Public employees who now have pension and/or retirement plans shall be excluded except in cases where the governing bodies will agree to supplement such plans with H. R. 6000 benefits with no reduction in the benefits already existing in such pension and/or retirement systems."

This will have to come as a Senate amendment and our organization is very anxious that you not only support such an amendment, but in fact if possible introduce it, which would be the official stand of the largest public employee international union in the American Federation of Labor and the AFL stand on this question. We are supported by the American Federation of Teachers and the International Association of Technical Engineers in this State, both of which unions are vitally concerned with local retirement systems.

For your information, there is probably no State in the Union whose public employees are now more thoroughly covered by existing local retirement plans. The Washington State Employees Retirement System is the seventh largest local retirement system in the Nation. This includes as of this date, all State employees except those covered by other systems such as teachers and State patrol; the employees of 37 out of 39 counties in this State, about half of the operating PUD's, most of the port districts, 80 percent of the noncertificated employees of school districts, and many other political subdivisions—altogether about 24,000 members. Then there is the large teacher's retirement system, the firemen's pension system, the city-wide system with about a dozen municipalities and eight of the larger cities with their own retirement plans.

All of us who have worked through employee unions for these retirement plans realize that the benefits are wholly inadequate, but must be limited by available local tax revenue, so that our only chance of ever securing an adequate retirement program for the public employees of this State will be through an eventual supplementation of our plans with Federal Social Security. Our legislature in 1936 made provision for social security coverage whenever available, so at all times we have looked forward to combining our systems with social security. The amendment placed on H. R. 6000 by the Senate Finance Committee sounds the deathknell to all hopes of ever securing adequate retirement benefits for public employees of this State. Therefore I personally urge you to give this matter your most careful consideration, as I am sure every public employee in this State will be grateful to you. Our proposed amendment so completely protects existing retirement systems that any opposition to this amendment can only come from those who are opposed to any increase in retirement benefits for our public servants.

With kindest personal wishes, I am,
Respectfully yours,

MARK WIENAND,
Chairman of Retirement Committee, Washington Federation of State Employees, also Assistant Executive Secretary, Washington State Employees Retirement System.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 15, 1950.

Senator WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Re H. R. 6000. We urge you actively oppose Senator KNOWLAND'S amendment. We further urge you continue your fine working support of this bill as passed by the House. We believe provisions for protection against permanent and total disability should be restored. In addition to broadening of coverage and liberalization of benefits we support your efforts to secure enabling amendment for voluntary coverage of State, county, and other public employees. PUD's for example already covered by another retirement system. We also authorize you to state that Senator CAIN does not speak for the Federation and that he did not write us a letter asking our opinion even though we represent the largest group of organized labor in the State of Washington.

E. M. WESTON,
President, Washington State Federation of Labor.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, it is with great regret that I rise to oppose the amendment offered by my good friend from West Virginia. It is rarely that I find myself on a side different from that supported by the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia, especially on social questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair must recognize the proponent of the amendment and then the chairman of the committee, in opposition. The Chair cannot recognize Senators in their own right in opposition to amendments.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on this question, however, I have evidence that it is the unanimous desire of the public employees in my State, who are covered by retirement systems, to be excluded from coverage. They are opposed to referendum proposals of any kind for reasons which are sound but too technical to go into in the limited time available to me.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is true of most of the municipal employees who have pension systems. But the amendment now before the Senate would not hurt them at all.

Mr. LEHMAN. I shall bring that out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield a minute to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LEHMAN. If the Senator from West Virginia will offer an amendment to include any specific group of public employees who have indicated their desire to be covered, I will support such an amendment. But to make a general provision directly counter to the wishes of the public employees involved is unnecessary and, in my judgment, unwise. I hope the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from West Virginia will be defeated.

The retirement systems in New York State provide much more generous benefits than those in the Federal old-age and survivors insurance program. The public employees covered by retirement systems in my State are fearful lest their systems be abolished or their benefits diminished in favor of the Federal old-age and survivors insurance program.

I shall support—have supported—any amendment to grant Federal old-age and survivors insurance coverage to employees, even though they are covered by retirement systems, who so desire it. But the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia is a blanket amendment. I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, do I have 5 minutes on the amendments which have been offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has 4 minutes left.

Mr. GEORGE. On both amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the Magnuson amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely want to say that if there is any one question which was presented to the Senate Finance Committee with almost unanimity of view, sentiment, and contention it was this very question. The committee was unanimously of the opinion that State police officers, firemen, and school teachers in the several States and municipalities ought not to be forced under the Federal social-security system. That was the unanimous verdict of the Finance Committee after listening to testimony day after day from persons who had come from all parts of the country, from Maine to California. All they had to say to us was this: "Do not make it possible for pressure groups and bureaus to propagandize us and force us to give up systems which we now wish to keep, and put us under a Federal old-age and survivors insurance system."

Mr. President, I think it would be a great mistake and tragedy if we undertook to take into the Federal system people who are already under retirement systems, who are already on the whole receiving great benefits, and in many instances greater benefits than they would receive under the Social Security Act. I therefore ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia be defeated, and that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia be also defeated.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question, if time permits?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands that the amendment which I have offered in the nature of a substitute would merely allow municipal pension systems and pension systems of subdivisions of local governments to negotiate with the Administrator if they so desire?

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that perfectly, and I say to the Senator that once this amendment is written into law the bureaus in Washington would propagandize every State retirement system in the entire country, and the retirement systems would be helpless to resist the pressure, with the result that the whole of it would be federalized. Literally thousands of teachers have either written, telegraphed, or come here in person. Arresting officers, police officers, and firemen in all States are opposed to it. There is no need to break down a salutary principle of the social-security system by opening the way in this fashion. If a State system or a local system is inadequate those in it may abandon the system. When they have no system they are mandatorily covered. If they wish to give up their system, they may do so.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the committee was unanimous in its opposition to this type of amendment. I agree wholeheartedly with everything that the senior Senator from Georgia has stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it had been my intention to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, on a stopgap basis. However, after conversation which has been held this afternoon with reference to one or two other proposals which are in the planning stage, I am inclined not to offer my amendment, with the understanding, however, that the distinguished leadership of the Committee on Finance will make the plan contemplated by it one of their special studies during the next 2-year period.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I believe the substance of the Senator's proposed amendment will receive close scrutiny by the committee, and for that reason I suggest that he would be making an appropriate decision if he were not to press his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. With that understanding, Mr. President, I shall not offer my amendment.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment 6–19–50—I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 292, line 17, before the period, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following: "unless the State or political subdivision by which such retirement system was established had in effect on January 1, 1950, a statute, ordinance, or other legislative act providing for making such retirement system supplementary to the insurance system established by this title."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, yesterday, June 19, I offered an amendment for printing under which permission would be given for the integration of the Wisconsin Retirement Fund, with the Federal Social Security System. The text of my statement may be found on page 8796 of the June 19 RECORD.

THIRTY THOUSAND PEOPLE'S WELFARE AT STAKE

I should like to point out very briefly that upon the decision of the Senate in accepting or rejecting this amendment will depend the fate of some 30,000 individuals, their survivors, and dependents. If any of my colleagues has any question about the desirability of this amendment, let me simply ask him this question:

> Should one State of the Union which has been farsighted enough to write into its basic law a provision for ultimate integration between the State retirement set-up and the Federal system—should that one State be penalized by having its 30,000 covered individuals denied the right of supplementary Federal coverage?

WHY PENALIZE WISCONSIN FORESIGHT?

Make no mistake about it, gentlemen, if this Wisconsin amendment is defeated, the United States Senate will have put a penalty upon a State for being farsighted. This is contrary to the action which we have taken in providing that, for example, the employees of the Ford Motor Co. should receive supplementary coverage—their private pensions plus a Federal pension. The employees of the General Motors Co., of Chrysler, and of other major American corporations receive both private pensions and Federal pensions. Why, then, should we deny the Wisconsin retirement fund covering individuals in 76 Wisconsin cities, 15 villages, 37 counties, and 33 other local governments, merely because they happen to have been covered at the time the Federal-State agreement for integration will have been made?

WHAT COMMITTEE PROVIDED

Note that point, gentlemen. What the Senate Finance Committee in effect says in its present version is that the Federal and State Governments can make agreements for integration between their specific retirement systems, provided that the agreement does not include employees covered by a retirement system at the time the agreement is made applicable to the coverage group.

I am reading that from page 6 of a summary prepared by the Senate Finance Committee itself.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILEY. I should like to carry on with my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WILEY. In other words, what we are asking for is an arrangement for coverage of individuals now covered, rather than simply coverage of individuals who may in the future be covered by a State retirement system and consequently, by the Federal social-security system.

NO OPPOSITION IN WISCONSIN

I have indicated that I have received no single message of opposition from anywhere in Wisconsin to my proposals. No teacher, no policeman, no fireman opposes the integration of the Wisconsin retirement fund, with the Federal social-security system. There is no reason for any such opposition because the teachers, for example, have a completely separate retirement system, wholly separate from the Wisconsin retirement fund.

NO OPPOSITION OUTSIDE WISCONSIN

In the same manner, this integration which I am proposing and which my colleague, the junior Senator [Mr. McCARTHY] is proposing does not adversely affect any teacher, policeman, or fireman in any of the other 47 States of the Union. The Social Security Administration has no objection to it. The organized labor unions have no objection to it. We have received support for this amendment from as far away as the great Empire State of New York. I am glad to acknowledge the gracious approval of the junior Senator [Mr. LEHMAN].

WE MUST NOT PENALIZE FORESIGHT

In summary, Mr. President, I repeat—shall the one State in the Union which has enough foresight to provide for ultimate integration—shall this one State and its 30,000 covered employees be left out in the cold merely because they were wise enough 7 years ago to foresee that the modest State pensions would be wholly inadequate to meet the needs of retired individuals, their survivors and dependents?

Let me point out lastly that two out of three indviduals now covered by the Wisconsin retirement funds and now past the age of 65 still have not retired. Why? Because, as I stated yesterday, these individuals receive so pitifully small a pension that they cannot possibly survive on it. Only by expanded coverage can they hope to make ends meet. I urge my colleagues, accordingly, to approve this amendment in the interest of 30,000 humble employees of my State.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point questions and answers on my amendment to H. R. 6000, which I have prepared, together with data with respect to typical retirement annuities.

There being no objection, the questions and answers and the data were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON AMENDMENT TO H. R. 6000 BY SENATOR WILEY

1. Question. Do I understand correctly that this amendment will not in any way affect the individuals under this system in my State who are vigorously objecting to integrating this system with social security?

Answer. Yes; that is entirely correct. I have been informed by a representative of the Commissioner for Social Security that the Wisconsin retirement fund is apparently the only system which could qualify under this amendment. The provision for integrating the Wisconsin retirement fund with social security has been in the Wisconsin law since the system was first established by the 1943 Wisconsin Legislature. There is complete agreement in Wisconsin on this amendment on the part of—

(a) The State legislature.

(b) The city council, county boards, village boards, etc., included under the system.

(c) The employees who will benefit from such integration.

2. Question. Are we to understand, then, that under the Wisconsin law that the existing system will not be abandoned?

Answer. Yes; this Wisconsin law provides for automatically transforming the existing system into a supplementary system, just as has been done in the case of many retirement systems in business and industry.

3. Question. The National Education Association has indicated strenuous objection to integration. How will this amendment affect that situation?

Answer. The Wisconsin Education Association has taken no position on H. R. 6000, and the last issue of their official journal carried articles pro and con on this matter. However, this amendment in no way affects the teachers' retirement system nor does it affect any other retirement system, such as those for policemen, firemen, Milwaukee city and county employees, etc. Instead, it affects only the 30,000 persons under the Wisconsin retirement fund who desire this integration and for which provision has been made ever since the system was just created.

TYPICAL RETIREMENT ANNUITIES UNDER THE WISCONSIN RETIREMENT FUND ONLY AS COMPARED WITH THE COMBINED ANNUITIES IF THE WISCONSIN RETIREMENT FUND IS INTEGRATED WITH SOCIAL SECURITY (Assume a life income of $2,700 for an individual with a wife his own age)

EXAMPLE I

Assumption: In private employment prior to 1936. Receives credits under Wisconsin Retirement Fund from January 1, 1936:

A. Benefits per month under Wisconsin retirement fund only for retirement Dec. 31, 1955, at age 65	$59.29

The widow would receive no annuity in case of his death.

B. Benefits if the Wisconsin retirement fund is integrated with social security as provided by amendment proposed by Senators WILEY and MCCARTHY:
Annuity from Wisconsin retirement fund	$55.72
Worker's annuity from social security	68.75
Wife's annuity from social security	34.38
Combined income	158.85

Upon death of annuitant, widow would receive $51.56 per month from social security.

EXAMPLE II

Assumption: Credits under Wisconsin retirement fund from January 1, 1921, to retirement on December 31, 1955, at age 65:

A. Benefits under Wisconsin retirement fund only	$112.50

The widow would receive no annuity in case of his death.

B. Benefits if Wisconsin retirement fund is integrated with social security:
Annuity from Wisconsin retirement fund	112.50
Worker's annuity from social security	68.75
Wife's annuity from social security	34.38
Combined income	215.63

Upon death of annuitant, widow would receive $51.56 per month from social security.

EXAMPLE III

Assumption: Credits under Wisconsin retirement fund from January 1, 1951, to retirement on December 31, 1985, at age 65:

A. Benefits under Wisconsin retirement fund only	$112.50

The widow would receive no annuity in case of his death.

B. Benefits if Wisconsin retirement fund is integrated with social security:
Annuity from Wisconsin retirement fund	68.49
Worker's annuity from social security	68.75
Wife's annuity from social security	34.38
Combined income	171.62

Upon death of annuitant, widow would receive $51.56 per month from social security.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the State of Wisconsin, by act of its legislature, approved by the Governor, wrote into its basic retirement law in 1943—and Wisconsin was the only State to do so—that the Wisconsin retirement fund was designed to serve as a supplement to the Federal social-security system whenever the Federal Government decided to broaden coverage to include State and local workers.

Under this statute, 30,000 individuals are now covered by the Wisconsin retirement fund.

However, the Senate Finance Committee version of H. R. 6000 provides that any Federal-State agreement for coverage of State and local workers shall not be allowed to include any group of workers covered by a State or local retirement system at the time the Federal-State agreement is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Just a moment; we are running against time.

Let me summarize. The State of Wisconsin, by the act of its legislature, approved by its governor, wrote into its basic retirement law in 1943—and it was the only State that did so—that the Wisconsin retirement fund was to serve as a supplement to the Federal social-security system whenever the Federal Government decided to broaden coverage to include State and local workers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may ask unanimous consent to insert a statement in the RECORD.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a brief statement in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

I support the amendment proposed by my colleague from Wisconsin. I have joined with him in sponsoring this amendment despite the fact that this amendment concerns only a group of employees in the State of Wisconsin.

I support this amendment because of my belief that all those who wish to be covered should certainly be covered.

I supported and advocated and continue to advocate the provision in the Senate committee bill excluding public employees already covered by retirement systems, because the employees involved indicated an almost unanimous desire to be so excluded. It is certainly true of policemen, firemen, teachers, and others in my State and in other States of the Union. I would oppose any amendment restoring coverage to these people, since they believe it would threaten their retirement systems.

However, if there is any group, like that in Wisconsin, which desires to be covered by Federal social security, I would support the proposal to grant coverage to that group. I hope the pending amendment is adopted.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield that I may ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin, which he has so far refused to answer?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KILGORE. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question in the time of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I have but little time; but I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin please explain, but not too fast, as he has been talking in the past, racing against time, as it were, whether the Senator from Wisconsin desires to add the retirement pay to the total amount paid by the Federal Government, whether it is augmentation or integration the Senator is seeking?

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator from Georgia will yield, I placed the figures in the RECORD, and I do not have them at hand at present.

Seven years ago the State of Wisconsin passed its law, having in mind that eventually under the Federal system we would have the right to integrate the two systems. The bill as it is before the Senate now fails to cover existing State retirement systems. It is therefore unfair to those people under Wisconsin law, which showed foresight and vision.

The States which make agreements in the future can come into it. We ask that the law be made retroactive, so that this group of 30,000 citizens, will not be prejudiced.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I cannot yield. I have but 2 minutes left in which to make a statement.

The Wisconsin case is no different from any other case, except that prior to the consideration of the pending bill the State of Wisconsin had taken some legislative action. But if we are to permit the States now to integrate their retirement systems with the Federal system, and all the States do that, the burden will be thrown onto the Federal Government. Do Senators want to do that? Are not the American States in better shape than the Federal Government to carry this burden? The majority of those under retirement systems in all the States are satisfied, and do not want to have their systems brought under the control of a bureau in Washington.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I have not any time left, so far as I know. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment B.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 267, line 3, after the word "be", it is proposed to insert "the sum of the following: (A)."

On page 267, line 5, to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a comma and the following:

(B) an amount equal to 1 percent of the amount computed under clause (A) multiplied by the number of years prior to 1951 in which $200 or more of wages were paid to such individual, and (C) an amount equal to one-half of 1 percent of the amount computed under clause (A) multiplied by the number of years after 1950 in which the sum of the wages paid to and the self-employment income derived by such individual was $200 or more.

On page 273, beginning with line 10, to strike out all down to and including line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(C) With respect to calendar years after 1950, the 1 percent addition provided for in section 209 (e) (2) of this act as in effect prior to the enactment of this section shall be one-half of 1 percent and shall be made with respect to any such year in which the sum of the wages paid to and the self-employment income derived by the individual was $200 or more.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this is the amendment known as the increment amendment. I offered it on behalf of myself and 12 other Senators. The junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] also sponsored the amendment, and I therefore yield to him at this time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I hope it will not seem ungracious if we offer this amendment. For, before I speak on it, I wish to say that we all are very much indebted to the Committee on Finance for the hard work they have done and for the bill they have brought in. In general, it is a very excellent bill, but we do believe that it can be improved, particularly in the matter of the so-called increment, for length of contributions.

The present law provides that benefits shall be increased by 1 percent for each year of contributions and coverage. The bill which the House passed reduced that to one-half of 1 percent. The draft of the Senate committee completely abolishes this increment.

The proposal of the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania is that for the years which have elapsed up through 1950 the present provision shall apply, namely, a 1-percent addition for each year of coverage, thus continuing the present law up to this date, but that for the years after 1950 the House provision, of an increment of one-half of 1 percent for each year of coverage, shall apply.

Mr. President, the bill reported by the committee virtually abolishes any connection between the total amounts contributed by the insured persons and the total benefits paid to those insured persons. All connection between those two is virtually eliminated.

Let me give an illustration. Suppose there are two insured persons, one A, the other B. A has contributed or will contribute for 40 years at an average wage of $200 a month, while B acquires eligibility in six quarters, at the same average of $200 a month.

Their average wage during the period of coverage is indeed the same. But one is a young man who pays contributions for 40 years while the second is a man 63 years old who gets in under the system in six quarters and pays contributions for only that time.

The first man over the course of his working life will have paid contributions on total wages of $96,000—that is, $2,400 times 40—at an average rate, let us say, of 2 percent. He will himself have paid $1,920 in contributions, and his employer will have added an equal amount. The total cash contributions for that man over his insured life will have been $3,840.

The total contributions for B in six quarters, at average wage of $200 a month, will have been only $72, and with the $72 of contributions his employer will make, a combined total of only $144. This is only one-twenty-seventh of the contributions the 40-year man will have made and had made for him. Yet the two men under the committee proposal would receive absolutely the same monthly benefit, namely, $65 a month.

Mr. President, a system of social security of necessity should introduce considerations of need which a private system of insurance cannot, but it should not be entirely based on need. We should make some provision so that those contributing for a longer period of time and contributing more shall receive a higher benefit. Otherwise we are throwing over completely the principle of insurance, and making the basis purely need and purely assistance.

Mr. President, I hope that the Myers amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. I understand that the increment feature which has been in the law ever since the inception of the program, of 1 percent, has been reduced on the House side to one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. And the Senate committee repealed the increment feature entirely.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. And, in effect, it is a retroactive action on the part of the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct, and the Myers amendment retains the 1 percent for the years up through 1950, but continues it subsequently to 1950 at one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is a question of having one's cake and eating it, too. If we are going to break down the whole social-security system by loading upon it a burden which it cannot support, we will have lost it all.

What is the situation? The Senate Committee on Finance changed the benefit formula by taking 50 percent of the first $100 and 15 percent of all over and above that. What does that mean? It means that with respect to all pensions and benefit payments hereafter, under the old-age and survivors insurance title of the law, those who qualify will receive $80 a month. Under the House bill, with the increment provision included, an individual will receive less by about $18 per month.

We have been generous in this matter. It is true that because we are giving a new start so as to enable old people to come into this system by working a comparatively few quarters, and qualifying for benefits, that is held up as an argument why this increment should be continued in the act. We are doing more than the House bill does. We did more than the House bill did for the next few years, even on the wage base of $3,000, as against $3,600 in the House bill. The House will never take the benefit formula we are trying to give to the old people and also add this increment provision. They were trying to bring their benefit payments up to some reasonable level. We will not obtain both. You can have your increment if you want it, because there are people who are demanding it, but you can give the aged people real benefits by holding to the benefit formula which we have inserted in the bill. As a practical matter you will not obtain both. You cannot expect to obtain both. Here is a provision for $80 per month for all persons who become fully insured, whether they come in under the new start program or they start from an early age in life under this system. It is an adequate provision.

Moreover, Mr. President, this one single amendment will add 1 percent to the total payroll tax of the country; in other words, more than $1,000,000,000 a year added to the cost and weight of the system. Do not break it down. Whatever may be the fine motive and purpose of my distinguished friend from Illinois and my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania—and I do not question the motive and purpose of either Senator—I appeal to them and say, do not break the system down. It is worth more to the people of the United States than the little increment provision. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, do we have any more time left on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proponents have 1 minute left.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Senate committee did precisely what the Senator from Georgia said, namely, it diminished the amount the long-time contributors would receive and increased the benefits of short-time contributors. And it is true that the amendment would cost about nine-tenths of 1 percent.

The Senator from Georgia, however, ignores the fact that we have already increased the wage base to $3,600, which will save one-sixth of 1 percent, and that furthermore, money wages in the past have increased at the rate of 2 percent a year, whereas the actuarial basis followed by the committee in estimating receipts under this provision is a constant base of $2,400.

We may expect on the basis of the past a further 2 percent a year in covered earnings and in contributions per worker. This will increase the revenue by more than the added costs so that in all probability this extra cost of the increment can be financed out of these other savings.

Thus in the century between 1822 and 1922, average wages increased from about $6 a week to about $26, or over four times. In the 28 years since then, money wages have nearly doubled again. Interestingly enough the increase in real wages over long periods of time such as a half century tends to be equal to the increase in real wages.

On the whole, therefore, it would seem that we may expect a further doubling in money wages over the next 30 years or an increase of 2 percent per year compounded. If this happens, then since the benefits on the upper increments of income are less than on the lower and are less than the contribution paid on them, we may expect a further saving. The $200 a month or $2,400 a year man under the Senate formula gets $65 a month and the $300 a month man gets $80. In other words, increasing incomes and contributions by 50 percent only increases benefits by 23 percent.

It is quite possible, therefore, that the addition of the increment factor proposed in the Myers amendment will not cost any more money. If it should, however, we are willing to have the joint contributions increased, but do not see how this would be more than by one-fourth of a percent on each party. In view of these estimates of increasing receipts, therefore, I hope the Senate will adopt the Myers increment amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Have I any time remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; 2 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is best to call an economist also as a witness, since an economist appears on the other side. I call none other than Dr. Slichter, of Harvard, one of the most eminent economists of the country. When this very question was before the Senate Finance Committee, in answer to a question from me—

Would you care to comment on that now? If so, we would be glad to hear you—

He made the following reply:

Dr. SLICHTER. I see no reason why I should not. The view in the Council was that it would be preferable to pay more adequate pensions now rather than to get up to some standard of adequacy 20 or 30 years from now by the method of an increment. If you put an increment into the formula and you say this formula, including the increment, will give an adequate pension, you are really saying—are you not?—that adequate pensions according to your standards, whatever the standard may be, will not be attained until 30 or 40 years from now, until the average person drawing a pension has had the benefit of the increment over a lifetime of employment in industry? If we assume that a lifetime of employment in industry is in the neighborhood of 40 years, that would mean that adequate pensions by whatever standard you accept will not be attained until 40 years hence.

So, Mr. President, we think we are on sound ground, and we ask for rejection of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment lettered "B" offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] for himself and other Senators, on page 267, line 3.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 374, between lines 3 and 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

INCOME-TAX EXEMPTION WITH RESPECT TO $3,000 OF GOVERNMENTAL PENSIONS, RETIRED PAY, OR ANNUITIES

SEC. 210. (a) Section 22 (b) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to annuities, and so forth) is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"(C) Pensions, retired or retirement pay and annuities.—In the case of amounts received from the United Staes, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, as a pension, retired or retirement pay, or as a retirement annuity, so much of such pension, pay, or annuity received during the taxable year as does not exceed $3,000 shall be excluded from gross income. For the purposes of this subparagraph the term 'State' includes a Territory, a possession of the United States, and the District of Columbia. For the purposes of the second sentence of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph the amounts received as an annuity which are excluded from gross income under this subparagraph shall not be considered in computing the amount 'received as an annuity', or the 'amount received in the taxable year', or the 'aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this chapter'. Nothing in this subparagraph shall be deemed to require the inclusion in gross income of any amounts received during the taxable year which are excludable from gross income under other provisions of law."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1950.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, while I dislike to do so, I must raise a point of order against the amendment. The point of order is that it is not germane to the social-security bill.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I withhold it for the moment.

Mr. IVES. In that connection, the Senator from New York would like to point out that the amendment is an amendment to the committee amendment of section 1631 of the Internal Revenue Code, as indicated on page 372 of the bill. Otherwise the Senator from New York would not have offered it.

Mr. GEORGE. The language to which the Senator refers does not deal at all with old-age and survivors insurance nor with the Social Security Act. The amendment is not germane to the bill. When the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into it was agreed that no amendment not germane to the bill would be pressed.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I recognize that the question of germaneness exists, but I still think it is debatable. The Senator from New York would still point out that this is an amendment to the Internal Revenue Code, which is mentioned in the bill. Although it is not applicable perhaps to social security, it is applicable generally to pensions, with which social security itself deals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement——

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Chair rule on the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to rule.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement, that amendments not germane shall not be considered, a point of order can be raised against such amendments. When such a point of order is raised, it is submitted to the Senate to decide whether the amendment is germane. That is done without debate. If the Senator wishes the question whether his amendment is germane to be submitted to the Senate, he may have it submitted.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from New York feels that the amendment is a rather important one, and in view of the fact also that the Senator from New York feels that the amendment is germane to the over-all subject, the Senator from New York would like to have the question submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question submitted to the Senate is, Is the amendment offered by the Senator from New York germane? [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it, and the amendment is held not to be germane.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point a statement I have prepared in support of the amendment which was just now declared to be not germane.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR IVES ON INCOME TAX EXEMPTION FOR RETIREMENT PENSIONS, UP TO $2,000 PER ANNUM, RECEIVED UNDER FEDERAL, STATE, OR MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT SYSTEMS

The purpose of this amendment is to grant an income tax exemption for retirement pensions—up to $2,000 per annum—received by members of Federal, State, or municipal pension systems.

At the present time, a similar privilege of tax-exclusion has been widely extended. Statutory exemptions exclude both benefits paid under the Railroad Retirement Act and the pay of Armed Forces officers retired for medical reasons. Further, a Treasury ruling makes benefits paid under old-age and survivors insurance nontaxable income. The proposed amendment would remedy this existing inequity which exempts these benefits while pensions paid under Government retirement plans are included as taxable income. Such obviously unfair treatment should not be permitted to continue.

Data submitted to me by the Civil Service Employee's Association of New York State and the New York City Employee's Retirement System show clearly the hapless position of many Government pension recipients. It is this small fixed-income group that has suffered most severely from the inflationary squeeze. As prices have risen, their meager fixed incomes have been able to purchase fewer and fewer of the necessities of daily living. Their plight must not remain ignored.

This amendment would both remedy an existing unfairness and help a group which has been particularly hard-hit by recent price rises. An estimate made by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation indicates that—were the tax exemption to be complete, and not limited to income below $2,000—the total revenue loss to the Federal Government would be approximately $7,750,000. This comparatively small loss in revenue is more than offset by the remedial effect of the proposal on a presently inequitable situation. The larger benefits to be achieved should not be precluded by such small cost.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I call up the amendment which I sent to the desk earlier in the day and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 261, in line 21, after the word "director", it is proposed to insert: "or other accountant registered or licensed as an accountant under States or municipal law."

On page 360, in line 12, after the word "director", it is proposed to insert "or other accountant registered or licensed as an accountant under State or municipal law."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me say that the Finance Committee was canvassed on this amendment this morning, and considered it, and decided that the amendment is a meritorious one; and we make the recommendation that it be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 187, which I introduced yesterday; and I now offer it as an amendment, at the proper place, to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

That service or employment of any person to assist the Senate Committee on Finance, or its duly authorized subcommittee, in the investigation ordered by S. Res. 300, agreed to June 20, 1950, shall not be considered as service or employment bringing such person within the provisions of section 281, 283, or 284 of title 18 of the United States Code, or any other Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Washington that the committee is willing to accept the amendment and take it to conference. Of course, there is no similar provision in the House version of the bill.

Mr. CAIN. I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. But inasmuch as the amendment would probably result in direct aid and assistance to the committee which we have already voted to establish, the House probably would not object. At any rate we would be glad to take it to conference, if that is agreeable.

Mr. CAIN. Let me say that the only purpose in offering the amendment is to be of some constructive help to the committee in the performance of its work under Senate Resolution 300, which was agreed to by the Senate this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment D, submitted on June 16. It is the so-called total and permanent disability amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is a very long one. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to have it read in full?

Mr. MYERS. No, Mr. President. I ask that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The amendment submitted by Mr. MYERS, for himself, Mr. GREEN, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MORSE, Mr. NEELY, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. THOMAS of Utah, is as follows:

On page 209, line 14, after the word "benefits" and before the comma insert "or was entitled to disability insurance benefits for the month preceding the month in which he attained retirement age."

On page 254, line 19, strike out "219" and insert in lieu thereof "221."

On page 255, lines 1 and 9, strike out "219" and insert in lieu thereof "221."

On page 259, line 8, strike out "219" and insert in lieu thereof "221."

On page 260, lines 12 and 19, strike out "219" and insert in lieu thereof "221."

On page 263, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"(ii) no quarter any part of which is included in a period of disability (as defined in section 219 (i)), other than the initial or last quarter, shall be a quarter of coverage."

On page 263, line 24, strike out "(ii)" and insert in lieu there of "(iii)."

On page 264, line 1, strike out "clause (i)" and insert in lieu thereof "clauses (i) and (ii)."

On page 264, line 3, strike out "(iii)" and insert in lieu thereof "(iv)."

On page 264, line 7, after "shall", insert "(subject to clause (ii))."

On page 264, line 8, strike out "(iv)" and insert in lieu thereof "(v)."

On page 266, line 7, strike out "or."

On page 266, strike out line 8, and insert in lieu thereof:

"(B) twenty quarters of coverage within the 40-quarter period ending with the quarter in which he attained retirement age or with any subsequent calendar quarter or ending with the quarter in which he died; or

"(C) forty quarters of coverage; not counting as an elapsed quarter for purposes of subparagraph (A), and not counting as part of the 40-quarter period referred to in subparagraph (B), any quarter any part of which is included in a period of disability (as defined in sec. 219 (i)) unless such quarter is a quarter of coverage."

On page 266, line 10, strike out "or (2) (A)" and insert in lieu thereof "or in clause (A) or (B) of paragraph (2)."

On page 266, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

"(4) If an individual upon attainment of retirement age is not, under paragraph (2), a fully insured individual but (were it not for his attainment of retirement age) would have been entitled to a disability insurance benefit for the month in which he attained retirement age or for any subsequent month, he shall be a fully insured individual beginning with the first month for which he would have been so entitled to disability insurance benefits. For the purpose of determining whether an individual would have been so entitled to disability insurance benefits, his application for old-age insurance benefits shall be considered as an application for disability insurance benefits."

On page 266, line 19, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof ", excluding from such 13-quarter period any quarter any part of which is included in a period of disability unless such quarter is a quarter of coverage."

On page 268, line 11, strike out the period and insert "and any month in any quarter any part of which is included in a period of disability (as defined in sec. 219 (i)) unless such quarter is a quarter of coverage, and excluding from such total of wages and self-employment income any wages paid in or self-employment income credited to any quarter any part of which is included in a period of disability unless such quarter is a quarter of coverage."

On page 268, line 17, after the words "shall be" insert the words "(i) for the purposes of benefits under section 202."

On page 268, line 20, strike out the period and insert ", and (ii) for purposes of disability insurance benefits (under sec. 219) shall be the first day of the quarter in which his disability determination date occurred."

On page 268, line 23, after the word "under", insert "clause (i) of."

On page 268, line 24, after the words "closing date", insert "for the purposes of benefits under section 202."

On page 269, line 7, after "(B)" insert "for the purposes of benefits under section 202."

On page 269, line 16, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "or, if the computation is being made for an individual who is entitled to disability insurance benefits with respect to a disability, in or after the month in which occurs his disability determination date for such disability."

On page 273, line 7, after the word "benefits", insert "or his disability determination date."

On page 273, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following:

"(E) For the purposes of this paragraph the term 'primary insurance benefit' includes disability insurance benefit."

On page 297, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS

"SEC. 107. Title II of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 218 (added by section 106 of this act) the following:

"'PERMANENT AND TOTAL DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS

"'Conditions of entitlement

"'SEC. 219. (a) (1) Every permanently and totally disabled individual (as defined in subsection (h)) who—

"'(A) has not attained retirement age;

"'(B) has filed application for disability insurance benefits;

"'(C) is insured for disability insurance benefits; and

"'(D) has been under a disability throughout his waiting period, shall be entitled to a disability insurance benefit for each month, beginning with the first month after his waiting period in which he becomes so entitled to such insurance benefits and ending with the month preceding the first month in which any of the following occurs: he ceases to be a permanently and totally disabled individual, dies, or attains retirement age. Such individual's disability insurance benefit for any month shall be equal to his primary insurance amount (as defined in section 215 (a)) for such month.

"'(2) The term "waiting period" means, with respect to the disability of any individual, the period beginning with the calendar month in which occurred his disability determination date (as determined under subsection (c)) and ending at the expiration of the sixth calendar month following such month.

"'(3) An individual who would have been entitled to a disability insurance benefit for any month had he filed application therefor prior to the end of such month shall be entitled to such benefit for such month if he files application therefor prior to the end of the sixth month succeeding such month; except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply for purposes of determining a period of disability (as defined in subsection (i)), or when a disability determination date occurred.

"'(4) No application for disability insurance benefits filed prior to 7 months before the first month for which the applicant becomes entitled to receive such benefits shall be accepted as an application for purposes of this section.

"'Determination of insured status

"'(b) An individual is insured for purposes of disability insurance benefits if he had not less than—

"'(1) six quarters of coverage (as determined under section 213 (a) (2)) during the thirteen-quarter period which ends with the quarter in which his disability determination date occurred; and

"'(2) twenty quarters of coverage during the forty-quarter period which ends with the quarter in which his disability determination date occurred.

In case such individual was previously entitled to disability insurance benefits, there shall be excluded from the count of the quarters in each period specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) any quarter any part of which was included in a period of disability unless such quarter is a quarter of coverage.

"'Disability determination date

"'(c) An individual's disability determination date shall be whichever of the following days is the latest:

"'(1) The day the disability began;

"'(2) June 30, 1951;

"'(3) The first day of the thirteenth month prior to the month in which he filed such application; or

"'(4) The first day of the first quarter in which he would be insured for disability insurance benefits with respect to such disability if he had filed application therefor in such quarter.

"'Determination of disability

"'(d) The Administrator shall make adequate provision for determination of disability and redeterminations thereof at necessary intervals; he shall provide for such examination of individuals as is necessary for purposes of determining or redetermining disability and entitlement to benefits by reason thereof. An individual shall not be deemed a permanently and totally disabled individual unless he furnishes such proof of his disability as may be required by regulation; and unless the evidence in the case affirmatively establishes his disability. Reexaminations for redetermining the disability of an individual shall be made at periodic intervals except that the Administrator may dispense with such reexaminations of an individual after he has been entitled to disability benefits for 2 years upon finding that such examinations serve no further purpose. Official medical examinations may be performed in existing medical facilities of the Federal Government if services are readily available, and by impartial private physicians, clinics, hospitals, or other medical facilities designated for conducting such examinations. In the case of any individual submitting to an examination to determine his disability there may be paid (1) the necessary travel expenses (including subsistence expenses incidental thereto), either on a flat rate or a commuted basis, of such individual in connection with such examination, and (2) if the examination is made by an individual who is not an employee of the United States, there may be paid, either directly or through appropriate Federal or State departments, agencies, or commissions, the necessary fees, costs of tests, and necessary travel expenses, either on a flat rate or a commuted basis, for such examination. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year from the Trust Fund such amount as may be necessary for the purpose of this subsection.

"'Reduction of benefit

"'(e) (1) Where a benefit is payable to any individual under this section and a workmen's compensation benefit or benefits have been or are paid to such individual on account of the same disability for the same month, such individual's benefit under this section for such month shall, prior to any deductions under section 220, be reduced by one-half, or by an amount equal to one-half of such workmen's compensation benefit or benefits, whichever is the smaller.

"'(2) In case the benefit of any individual under this section is not reduced as provided in paragraph (1) because such benefit is paid prior to the payment of the workmen's compensation benefit, the reduction shall be made by deductions, at such time or times and in such amounts as the Administrator may determine, from any other payments under this title payable on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of such individual.

"'(3) If the workmen's compensation benefit is payable on other than a monthly basis (excluding a benefit payable in a lump sum unless it is a commutation of, or a substitute for, periodic payments), reduction of the benefits under this subsection shall be made in such amounts as the Administrator finds will approximate, as nearly as practicable, the reduction prescribed in paragraph (1).

"'(4) In order to assure that the purposes of this subsection will be carried out, the Administrator may, as a condition to certification for payment of any disability insurance benefit payable to an individual under this section (if it appears to him that there is a likelihood that such individual may be eligible for a workmen's compensation benefit which would give rise to a reduction under this subsection), require adequate assurance of reimbursement to the trust fund in case workmen's compensation benefits, with respect to which such a reduction should be made, become payable to such individual and such reduction is not made.

"'(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term "workmen's compensation benefit" means a cash benefit, allowance, or compensation payable under any workmen's compensation law or plan of the United States or of any State.

"'Termination of entitlement to benefits by Administrator

"'(f) In any case in which an individual has refused to submit himself for examination or reexamination in accordance with regulations of the Administrator, or has without good cause refused to take all steps necessary to obtain and to accept rehabilitation services available to him under a State plan approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (29 U. S. C., ch. 4) after being directed by the Administrator to do so, the Administrator may find, solely because of such refusal, that such individual is not a permanently and totally disabled individual or that his disability (previously determined to exist) has ceased. The Administrator may find that an individual is not a permanently and totally disabled individual or that his disability (previously determined to exist) has ceased, if such individual is outside the United States and the Administrator finds that adequate arrangements have not been made for determining or redetermining such individual's disability.

"'Cooperation with agencies and groups

"'(g) The Administrator is authorized to secure the cooperation of appropriate agencies of the United States, of States, or of the political subdivisions of States and the cooperation of private medical, dental, hospital, nursing, health, educational, social, and welfare groups or organizations, and where necessary to enter into voluntary working agreements with any of such public or private agencies, organizations, or groups in order that their advice and services may be utilized in the efficient administration of this section.

"'Definitions of "disability" and "permanently and totally disabled individual"

"'(h) For the purposes of this title—

"'(1) the term "disability" means (A) inability to engage in any substantially gainful activity by reason of any medically demonstrable physical or mental impairment which is permanent, or (B) blindness; and the term "permanently and totally disabled individual" means an individual who has such a disability; and

"'(2) the term "blindness" means central visual acuity of 5/200 or less in the better eye with correcting lenses. An eye in which the visual field is reduced to five degrees or less concentric contraction shall be considered for the purposes of this paragraph as having a central visual actuity of 5/200 or less.

"'Definition of "period of disability"

"'(i) As used in this title the term "period of disability" means, with respect to any individual, a period of one or more consecutive calendar months for each of which such individual was entitled to a disability insurance benefit and the six calendar months, preceding the first month of such period of one or more consecutive calendar months, except that if such individual ceases to be entitled to disability insurance benefits with respect to a disability because he dies or attains retirement age, the month in which such individual died or attained such age, as the case may be, shall also be included in the period of disability with respect to such disability.

"'Rehabilitation

"'(j) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year from the trust fund such amount as may be necessary to provide rehabilitation services for the rehabilitation of disabled individuals who are entitled to disability insurance benefits or serving a waiting period for such benefits, where it appears that such services may aid in enabling such disabled individuals to return to gainful work. Insofar as practicable, such services shall be provided through utilization of the services and facilities of State agencies (or corresponding agencies in the case of Territories or possessions) cooperating with the Federal Government in carrying out the purposes of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, as amended (29 U. S. C., ch. 4). Agencies providing such services shall be reimbursed for the cost thereof.

"'DEDUCTIONS FROM DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS

"'Events for which deductions are made

"'SEC. 220. (a) Deductions, in such amounts and at such time or times as the Administrator shall determine, shall be made from any payment or payments under this title to which an individual is entitled, until the total of such deductions equals such individual's benefit under section 219 for any month—

"'(1) in which such individual rendered services as an employee (whether or not such services constitute employment as defined in section 210) for remuneration of more than $50; or

"'(2) for which such individual is charged, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, with net earnings from self-employment (as determined pursuant to subsection (d)) of more than $50; or

"'(3) in which such individual fails to submit himself for examination in accordance with regulations of the Administrator; or

"'(4) in which such individual refuses without good cause to accept rehabilitation services available to him under a State plan approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act after direction by the Administrator to do so; or

"'(5) in which such individual is outside the United States if the Administrator finds that adequate arrangements have not been made for determining or redetermining the existence of the disability of such individual. The Administrator may, if in his judgment it will aid in the process of rehabilitation of any individual, suspend or modify the application of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection for any month during which such individual is receiving rehabilitation services under a State plan approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act; except that the Administrator may not so suspend or modify the application of such paragraphs for any month after the eleventh month following the first month for which such suspension or modification was applicable.

"'Occurrence of more than one event

"'(b) If more than one event occurs in any 1 month which would occasion deductions equal to a benefit for such month, only an amount equal to such benefit shall be deducted. The charging of net earnings from self-employment to any month shall be treated as an event occurring in the month to which such net earnings are charged.

"'Months to which net earnings from self-employment are charged

"'(c) For the purposes of subsection (a) (2) of this section—

"'(1) If an individual's net earnings from self-employment for his taxable year are not more than the product of $50 times the number of months in such year, no month in such year shall be charged with more than $50 of net earnings from self-employment.

"'(2) If an individual's net earnings from self-employment for his taxable year are more than the product of $50 times the number of months in such year, each month of such year shall be charged with $50 of net earnings from self-employment, and the amount of such net earnings in excess of such product shall be further charged to months as follows: The first $50 of such excess shall be charged to the last month of such taxable year, and the balance, if any, of such excess shall be charged at the rate of $50 per month to each preceding month in such year until all of such balance has been applied, except that no part of such excess shall be charged to any month (A) for which such individual was not entitled to a benefit under this title, (B) in which an event described in paragraph (1), (3), (4), or (5) of subsection (a) occurred, or (C) in which such individual did not engage in self-employment.

"'(3) As used in paragraph (2), the term "last month of such taxable year" means the latest month in such year to which the charging of the excess described in such paragraph is not prohibited by the application of clauses (A), (B), and (C) thereof.

"'(4) For the purposes of clause (C) of paragraph (2), an individual will be presumed, with respect to any month, to have been engaged in self-employment in such month until it is shown to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such individual rendered no substantial services in such month with respect to any trade or business the net income or loss of which is includible for the purposes of this subsection in computing his net earnings from self-employment for any taxable year. The Administrator shall by regulations prescribe the methods and criteria for determining whether or not an individual has rendered substantial services with respect to any trade or business.

"'Special rule for computation of net earnings from self-employment

"'(d) For the purposes of this section, an individual's net earnings from self-employment for any taxable year shall be computed as provided in section 211 with the following adjustments:

"'(1) Such computation shall be made without regard to the provisions of subsections (a) (2), (c) (1), (c) (4), and (c) (5) of section 211; and

"'(2) Such computation shall be made without regard to the provisions of sections 116, 212, 213, 251, and 252 of the Internal Revenue Code.

"'Penalty for failure to report certain events

"'(e) Any individual in receipt (on behalf of himself or another individual) of benefits subject to deduction under subsection (a) because of the occurrence of an event specified therein (other than an event described in paragraph (2) thereof) shall report such occurrence to the Administrator prior to the receipt and acceptance of a disability insurance benefit for the second month following the month in which such event occurred. If such individual knowingly fails to report any such occurrence, an additional deduction equal to that imposed under such subsection shall be imposed, except that the first additional deduction imposed by this subsection in the case of any individual shall not exceed an amount equal to 1 month's benefit even though the failure to report is with respect to more than 1 month.

"'Report to Administrator of net earnings from self-employment

"'(f) (1) If an individual is entitled to any disability insurance benefit during any taxable year in which he has net earnings from self-employment in excess of $50 times the number of months in such year, such individual (or the individual in receipt of such benefit on his behalf) shall make a report to the Administrator of his net earnings from self-employment for such taxable year. Such report shall be made on or before the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of such year, and shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the Administrator may by regulations prescribe. If the individual fails within the time prescribed above to make such report of his net earnings from self-employment for any taxable year and any deduction is imposed under subsection (a) (2) of this section by reason of such net earnings—

"'(A) such individual shall suffer one additional deduction in an amount equal to his benefit for the last month in such taxable year for which he was entitled to a disability insurance benefit; and

"'(B) if the failure to make such report continues after the close of the fourth calendar month following the close of such taxable year, such individual shall suffer an additional deduction in the same amount for each month during all or any part of which such failure continues after such fourth month; except that the number of the additional deductions required by this paragraph shall not exceed the number of months in such taxable year for which such individual received and accepted disability insurance benefits and for which deductions are imposed under subsection (a) (2) by reason of such net earnings from self-employment. If more than one additional deduction would be imposed under this paragraph with respect to a failure by an individual to file a report required by this paragraph and such failure is the first for which any additional deduction is imposed under this paragraph, only one additional deduction shall be imposed with respect to such first failure.

"'(2) If the Administrator determines, on the basis of information obtained by or submitted to him, that it may reasonably be expected that an individual entitled to disability insurance benefits for any taxable year will suffer deductions imposed under subsection (a) (2) of this section by reason of his net earnings from self-employment for such year, the Administrator may, before the close of such taxable year, suspend the payment for each month in such year (or for only such months as the Administrator may specify) of such benefits payable to him; and such suspension shall remain in effect with respect to the benefits for any month until the Administrator has determined whether or not any deduction is imposed for such month under subsection (a). The Administrator is authorized, before the close of the taxable year of any individual entitled to benefits during such year, to request of such individual that he make, at such time or times as the Administrator may specify, a declaration of his estimated net earnings from self-employment for the taxable year and that he furnish to the Administrator such other information with respect to such net earnings as the Administrator may specify. A failure by such individual to comply with any such request shall in itself constitute justification for a determination under this paragraph that it may reasonably be expected that the individual will suffer deductions imposed under subsection (a) (2) of this section by reason of his net earnings from self-employment for such year.'"

On page 297, line 7, strike out "107" and insert in lieu thereof "108."

On page 297, line 8, strike out "218" and "106" and insert in lieu thereof "220" and "107", respectively.

On page 297, line 11, strike out "219" and insert in lieu thereof "221."

On page 297, line 21, strike out "108" and insert in lieu thereof "109."

On page 307, line 12, strike out "109" and insert in lieu thereof "110."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I submitted the amendment on behalf of myself and nine other Senators. The amendment is referred to as the total-and-permanent disability amendment on the insurance side of this program.

This amendment proposes to restore the disability insurance feature substantially as it was recommended by the House Ways and Means Committee and as adopted by the House itself. This amendment, although it lacked the support of a majority of the Finance Committee, nonetheless received strong support from other committee members.

The Advisory Council on Social Security appointed by the Finance Committee in the Eightieth Congress, recommended—through 15 of its 17 members—that the social-security program be broadened to insure against income loss resulting from permanent and total disability prior to the retirement age of 65.

I might add that the American Medical Association—after long recognition that compensation for wage loss during disability had a beneficial influence upon ultimate recovery—said, through a resolution of its house of delegates in October 1947:

Social-security measures to maintain income such as disability insurance, old-age insurance, and public assistance are likewise of vital importance.

The house of delegates of the American Medical Association has taken no other official stand, although since 1947 some members of the AMA's board of trustees now oppose Federal disability insurance. However, it was brought out at the hearings before the Finance Committee that this opposition was not the official position of the AMA.

I might add that the only physician who served on the Senate Advisory Council joined in recommending disability insurance.

In submitting the disability insurance amendment last week, for myself and nine other Senators, we proposed two changes in the provisions of the House version of the bill. First, we clarified the duty of the applicant to submit proof of disability, placing upon him squarely the full burden of proof. As matters now stand, the applicant must be totally and permanently disabled, making it impossible for him to participate in any gainful employment. This disability must be demonstrable by clear medical evidence; a mere allegation of an aching back or some other ailment will not qualify him.

Moreover, after the disabled applicant's personal physician has submitted a diagnosis showing by medical evidence that the disability is total and permanent, the applicant is then required to go to an independent group of private physicians, specialists, who also make a diagnosis. The cost of this independent diagnosis is met out of program funds, in a fashion comparable to that adopted in many State and Federal programs.

A second change which we have incorporated is designed to expand State rehabilitation facilities. We contemplate earmarking part of the insurance trust-fund money for grants to States in order that they may further develop their existing facilities for rehabilitating disabled workers, and making it possible for them to engage once more in useful employment. But I wish to make it clear that we intend to have this rehabilitation work to be done exclusively by State and local governments by means of programs worked out to meet their individual needs.

The principle of disability insurance is completely consonant with the principle of insuring against wage loss resulting from retirement upon reaching a particular age. Disability is simply a compulsory retirement brought about by aging more rapidly as a consequence of accident or disease. The problems faced through income loss upon retirement are comparable, whether the cause is old age or disability. At any one time, some 2,000,000 people in America between the ages of 14 and 65 are permanently and totally disabled. This amendment would be of but little help to those presently disabled, but in the future perhaps as many as 1,000,000 disabled persons would become eligible for disability insurance payments under the present coverage of social security.

When we consider that 9 out of 10 accidents which lead to total and permanent disability are not work-connected, it is readily evident that workmen's compensation laws and private industrial-accident insurance are scarcely adequate to meet the needs of our disabled. Worse still, the disabled person and his family faced with complete income loss are forced upon the local relief rolls, because public charges, and their needs are but scantily met. Extension of the self-supporting contributory insurance principle to guarantee workers against wage loss is a far preferable solution.

I urge the Senate to adopt the amendment. It will amount to a level premium rate of six-tenths of 1 percent of pay roll—a small cost indeed in terms of the good it will accomplish.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am happy to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator agree with me that the amendment does not provide any medical service under the total and permanent disability sections?

Mr. MYERS. That is quite true.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator also agree that the only time a doctor will be connected with this program will be when he is called in to prove the fact of total and permanent disability?

Mr. MYERS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator see that any socialized medicine is involved in this particular amendment, as is claimed by certain doctors?

Mr. MYERS. Of course, there cannot be, when the house of delegates of the American Medical Association itself went on record in favor of such a provision, and did so as recently as 1947.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I am happy to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In connection with the last statement made, I should like to read into the RECORD the recommendations, in 1947, under a joint statement, planning for the chronically ill, by the American Hospital Association, the American Public Welfare Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Medical Association:

> Other measures which enable chronically ill persons to be cared for at home include improved housing, supervised boarding homes, medical social service, recreational and occupational therapy, and vocational rehabilitation. Social-security measures to maintain income, such as disability insurance, old-age insurance, and public assistance, are likewise of vital importance.

Those recommendations are taken from the Journal of the American Medical Association of October 11, 1947.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I call up two amendments which now lie at the desk, and which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which one does the Senator desire to have stated first?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That offered on page 6, in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. To the amendment proposed by Mr. MYERS, for himself and other Senators, the following amendment is proposed:

> On page 6, line 23, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That no individual shall receive a disability insurance benefit if the disability—
>
> "(A) was incurred, contracted, or suffered while such individual was willfully and illegally engaged in, or resulted from his having willfully and illegally engaged in any felonous criminal action; or
>
> "(B) was incurred, contracted, or suffered while such individual was under the influence of intoxicants, drugs, or narcotics, unless administered upon the prescription of a person duly licensed by law to practice medicine; or
>
> "(C) was occasioned by the willful intention of such individual to injure or kill himself; or
>
> "(D) was occasioned by the service of such individual in the Armed Forces of the United States or her allies, provided he receives a military disability benefit; or
>
> "(E) was incurred as a result of a venereal disease."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the clerk read also the second amendment, on page 9, line 11?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois wish the two amendments considered en bloc?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should prefer to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the two amendments will be so considered. The clerk will state the second amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

On page 9, line 15, after the period, insert the following:

> The Administrator shall, in consultation with recognized private and governmental medical authorities, establish such medical standards, schedules, or guides for the determination of permanent and total disability as are not inconsistent with this section.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the Senator from Pennsylvania and those who joined with him, including my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, on the amendment which they have just offered. It deals with one of the most severe problems that we have in the United States, namely, the problem of those who are permanently and totally disabled, but who are not cared for under workmen's compensation laws.

I believe the total number of these persons will run into the hundreds of thousands. They are at present uncared for, and I think it highly important that we adapt our system of social security so that we may take care of them.

I also want to congratulate the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues for including two safeguards which were not originally in the bill as it was passed by the House. I believe his additions were aimed at tightening up the section on the determination of disability in order to require clear proof and to put the burden of proof upon the claimant and to expand the requirements for examinations. Also, his amendment gives greater emphasis to the linking of the disability benefit system with rehabilitation in every case where there is any possibility of returning the individual to gainful employment. This is vital.

The two amendments which I have proposed would introduce additional safeguards against the possibility of abuse by claimants of permanent and total disability, and would exclude from coverage certain risks which I believe an individual should not seek to have insured by a disability plan.

The first amendment which I have proposed would exclude individuals who incur their disability, first, in the commission of a felony; second, under the influence of intoxicants, drugs, or narcotics, unless prescribed by a doctor; third, by willful self-infliction; fourth, in the armed services, provided they receive a military disability benefit; and fifth, as a result of venereal disease. All these are excluded.

The second amendment makes mandatory the use of Government or private medical facilities in the determination of disability and directs the administrator in consultation with medical authorities to establish standards or guides for the determination of disability.

I have discussed these proposals with the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I believe that I am authorized by him to state that, so far as he is concerned, he is willing to accept them as improving amendments to his amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I think the amendments offered by the Senator from Illinois do improve my amendment. They tighten it up. They will help prevent malingering. Therefore I willingly accept those amendments and incorporate them in my own amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I hope that these improving amendments may be accepted and then, that the entire amendment as proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues may also be agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania modify his amendment to include these?

Mr. MYERS. I modify my amendment to include the amendments just offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. I will take but a minute or a minute and a half, and will leave the remainder of the time at the disposal of the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Mr. President, the Senate Finance Committee opposes this amendment. First, the matter will be in conference anyway. It can be considered fully in conference, and there is little practical advantage in tying the hands of the Senate conferees on all the important provisions in this bill and leaving us at the mercy of the House conferees, although presumably they will have good provisions which they will wish us to take. Yet we are representing this body when it is in conference.

In the second place, this is a very sharply disputed question. It is one on which the Finance Committee took a great deal of testimony. It has been in sharp conflict all the time among the experts who are familiar with this problem.

In the third place, it adds from one-half to three-fourths of a percent to the deductions from the entire payrolls of the country. In other words, it greatly increases the total burden on our economy and brings us back again to the point which I have tried to stress over and over and over, that we have brought forth a bill which is a good bill, which has merit in it; we have given all that our economy can really with assurance shoulder. Yet here are these efforts, by way of amendments which are offered and insisted upon, that would add and add and add to the total cost of this bill.

Mr. President, the insurance companies themselves tried this question of disability insurance. They have practically abandoned it. Why? Because there is no way to insure against disability without opening up the whole system to all sorts of questions. It is possible to insure against premature death, it is possible to insure against arrival at a time when people ought to retire. But when we insure against disability and put the Federal Government into that field, then it is opening up an avenue for the expenditure of vast sums of money, which will certainly embarrass us, particularly when we are here offering the most ambitious social-security program which has ever been offered to the country.

Mr. President, there are 35,000,000 people now under social security, and we are multiplying the advantages of the present system by practically 100 percent, for the past and for the future. We are bringing in 10,000,000 more people. There are 1,600,000 persons under the Railroad Retirement Act. There are about 1,200,000 under the Federal Employees Retirement Act. There are from 2,400,000 to 2,600,000 under the State and municipal system. So that when this bill passes we shall have given a maximum insurance against the real, absolute certainties against which it is possible to take appropriate safeguards, namely, arrival at retirement age, or premature death, to more than 51,000,000 people in the United States.

When we subtract from the total population the men and women in the Armed Forces who do not enter into the labor pool, it is possible to see that about the only people omitted from this system are the farmer, the migrant farm worker, and the occasional domestic servant, together with a few professionals, 400,000 of them, perhaps, who do not want to come under the system.

We want the system to carry itself. We want a system which will be sound. We do not want the Senate to vote it down and change it to the extent that the economy cannot support it. The only way we can support a social-security system is to have an economy that will do it. It will become as worthless as a scrap of paper if we break down the economy. We cannot take from $10,000,000,000 to $12,000,000,000 a year from our economy without passing it immediately back into the economy, without hurt. Therefore, I hope that this amendment, as amended, will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] for himself and other Senators.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call up the amendment proposed by myself, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], with regard to including tips and gratuities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 239, line 21, and on page 319, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

Tips and other cash remuneration customarily received by an employee in the course of his employment from persons other than the person employing him shall, for the purposes of this title, be considered as remuneration paid to him by his employer: Provided, however, That in the case of tips only so much of the amount thereof received during any calendar quarter as the employee, before the expiration of 10 days after the close of such quarter, reports in writing to his employer as having been received by him in such quarter, shall be considered as remuneration paid by his employer: And provided further, That such amount shall not be considered as such remuneration unless there is in the possession of the employer wages of the employee from which the tax required under section 1400 of the Internal Revenue Code can be withheld, or unless the employee remits to the employer with his report an amount equal to the tax required to be withheld with respect to such wages. The amount so reported by the employee to the employer shall be considered as having been paid to the employee by the employer on the date on which such report is made.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to include tips as wages for the purpose of computing contributions and benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance program. I urge the approval of this amendment.

Unless tips are included the whole purpose of the program for the workers affected is defeated. In the case of waiters, bellhops, club employees, and many others, tips are a major part, if not the greatest part of earnings.

Unless this amendment is approved, a great number of workers will be denied benefits based upon their total earnings, which is the principle of the entire insurance program.

The advisory council recommended the inclusion of tips in wages. The House Ways and Means Committee recommended it and the House approved it.

The Senate Finance Committee excluded tips with the comment, "To report tips would greatly add to the bookkeeping."

In my amendment the responsibility is placed squarely upon the employee to report his tips. The employer pays his contribution, just as the employee does, only upon the amount of tips reported. In this sense it is a voluntary system.

This amendment also contains a provision designed to meet the objection that the employer would be liable for the employee's contribution in cases in which the employer had no opportunity to deduct the employee contribution from his wages. This would be true in the case of waiters and others who work on special assignment only.

This objection has been met in my amendment by a provision that the tips could not be counted as wages unless the employer had in his possession wages for the employee from which the employer could deduct the amount of the tax, or unless the employee transmitted with his report of tips a sum of money equal to the employee tax. This should meet all the objections based on so-called administrative difficulties.

Of course I do not consider this objection very sound in the first place. The Bureau of Internal Revenue requires that employers furnish records on the estimated tips earned by their employees. Moreover, in computing workmen's compensation benefits, the injured worker receives a percentage of all his earnings, including tips. Thus, very little additional bookkeeping is required in any event.

It is to be borne in mind that employees who report their tips for social-security purposes would presumably also be reporting their tips for income-tax purposes. It is a compelling circumstance that the employees themselves are demanding this amendment. The Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Union and the American Federation of Labor are urgently supporting this proposal.

This amendment affects several million workers. There are 3,000,000 waiters and waitresses alone. To reject this amendment would be to provide these millions of workers with a protection which would be virtually meaningless.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield time to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] if he wishes to use any time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield 1 minute so that I may propound a question to him?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to return to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to provide for total permanent disability benefits, and ask the able chairman of the Finance Committee this question: Is there anything in the amendment which deals directly with what we refer to as socialized medicine?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think so. I do not think that is a valid objection to the amendment. I think the validity of the objection to it rests upon the grounds which I undertook to express—the difficulty of administration and the added cost to the system, which we must always keep in mind.

Mr. LUCAS. I thoroughly understood the argument made by the Senator from Georgia, and the only reason I propounded the inquiry to him was because on my desk there are many letters from doctors in my State who contend that this particular amendment, providing for total permanent disability benefits, is a part of the socialized-medicine theory. That is something which I could not understand.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think that is a valid objection, any more than I think it is a valid objection to the original bill that it is a movement toward socialism.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, the Finance Commmittee rejected the provision for tips as part of compensation, but we have lowered the earnings per quarter in such way as not to injure persons who might supplement their earnings by tips. I therefore hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. The Senator from New York is not quite clear how the lowering of the number of quarters of employment affects the matter of tips which are a very large part of the income of a great many persons, hundreds of thousands, if not millions of persons.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean that we lowered the requirement that there must be $100 earned in a quarter. They come in with slightly lower than the $25 minimum fixed in the bill. If they earn less than $34 a month they would qualify.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That, effective with respect to service performed after the calendar quarter in which this act is enacted, section 1426 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the definition of employment) is amended (1) by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (15), (2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (16) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and (3) by adding the following new paragraph:

"(17) Service performed by an individual who has attained the age of sixty-five."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this amendment is a very simple one. The social-security law is based upon the fact that when a person is 65 years of age and has contributed under the provisions of the law, then, if he retires, he is entitled to draw certain benefits for the rest of his life. All the amendment provides for is that if a person 65 years of age and eligible to retire decides, instead of retiring and drawing benefits from the Government to help to support him, to continue to work beyond 65 years of age, thereby foregoing benefits from the Government during that period, he shall not pay social-security taxes from the time he becomes 65 years of age so long as he continues to work. It is a money-saving proposition. If he retires, he draws benefits from the Government. If he continues to work, the Government does not have to pay benefits for the years in which he continues to work. Therefore, it should not be collecting social-security taxes from him. It is one way of making a very definite gesture to the elderly persons who have the desire and ambition to work after they become 65 years of age. It is a simple amendment. It costs no money. Actually, it provides a saving to the Government, and I think it is sound procedure.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish to have adopted an amendment under which employees would have to go to an employer and tell him their age, especially so far as women who happen to be at work are concerned. I can see no point to it. We have liberalized provisions in the bill to the extent that an employee may continue to work after 65, and he may actually earn as much as $50 a month in covered employment. He is not obliged to quit. If he does quit he draws his social-security benefits, and he pays no other tax. It would seem that he should be taxed, if for any reason he prefers to work. This amendment has not been studied by the committee. It amounts to a remission of all social-security taxes after a person becomes 65 years of age. I say that we should not be asked to accept an amendment of this kind without having had an opportunity to study it.

Mr. BRIDGES. The amendment was introduced and referred to the Committee on Finance. It has been before the committee for several months. If it has not been studied, it is certainly not the fault of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GEORGE. I have never heard of the amendment. If it was offered, it escaped my attention. Has it been printed?

Mr. BRIDGES. It is printed. It was introduced on March 7, legislative day of February 22. It has been before the committee for 3 months.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from New Hampshire originally introduced the measure as a bill. Therefore it was not considered as an amendment to the pending measure. It was introduced as a bill.

Mr. GEORGE. As a tax measure the Committee on Finance would have no original jurisdiction over the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I call up amendment G offered on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 241, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out "on each of some 60 days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on each of some 40 days during such quarter."

On page 322, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "on each of some 60 days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on each of some 40 days during such quarter."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, this amendment would provide old-age and survivors insurance coverage for a much greater number of agricultural workers than is provided by the bill as reported to the Senate. H. R. 6000 as reported covers all agricultural workers earning $50 or more in cash in a calendar quarter who are "regularly" employed in that calendar quarter. The bill defines an agricultural worker as regularly employed in a calendar quarter if he works for his employer on 60 different days in that quarter or in the preceding quarter. Under the amendment we propose, a regularly employed agricultural worker would be one who worked for a single employer on 40 different days during a calendar quarter. This amendment would, in an average week, result in the coverage of approximately 775,000 agricultural workers.

We are concerned because H. R. 6000 excludes so many persons who are by no means casual or irregular workers. For example, the bill would exclude all the workers who work right through the cotton-chopping season for the same employer because the season does not last more than 45 days at the most. When the same folks return to their employers during the cotton-picking season, they would again be excluded because the 8 weeks of the cotton-picking season do not all fall in the same calendar quarter. Normally, part of the picking is done in the July–September quarter; the balance in the October–December quarter.

Can we justify denying these people insurance protection on the ground that they are not steady or regular employees? We think not. These workers and many others like them work in agriculture at one job or another in the same general locality, during 6 months or more of the year.

The 775,000 additional workers in agriculture who would be covered under our amendment would be persons with sufficient agricultural employment to benefit from such coverage. Moreover, since they would be employed by the same farmer over a period of several weeks, their farm employers would have little difficulty in reporting their wages and social-security contributions. We, therefore, hope that the Senate will act favorably on the amendment we propose and make the benefits of the insurance program possible for these additional agricultural workers.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not care to argue this matter. We have provided coverage for regularly employed farm workers if they are employed for 60 days within a 90-day period. One of our great difficulties in applying social security to farm workers and domestic workers is the problem of administration. Administrative difficulties are very great. The committee went as far as it could in taking care of workers regularly employed on farms, as well as regularly employed domestic servants. I think it would do no good to undertake to reduce the requirements by 20 days. Therefore, I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. It seems to me that the people in this category are more entitled to this kind of insurance protection than any other group of workers, because they are poor and have no other means of income except what they get from this work. It seems to me to be very cruel to prevent their getting coverage under this bill.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] on behalf of himself and other Senators.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I offer my amendment C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 375, line 17, after "assistance" it is proposed to insert the following: "in the form of money payments."

On page 376, line 12, it is proposed to insert after "and" the following: "(2) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance other than in the form of money payments, equal to one-half of the total amounts expended during such quarter as old-age assistance other than in the form of money payments under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditures with respect to any month in such form as exceed the product of $6 multiplied by the total number of individuals who receive old-age assistance under the State plan for such month."

On page 376, line 12, change "(2)" to "(3)."

On page 378, line 20 through line 2, page 379, strike out section 322 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 322. (a) Effective October 1, 1950, section 403 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"COMPUTATION OF FEDERAL PORTION OF AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN

"SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing October 1, 1950, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to dependent children equal to the sum of the following proportions of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to dependent children in the form of money payments under such plan, not counting so much of such expenditures with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $30, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same house, as exceeds $30 with respect to one such dependent child and $20 with respect to each of the other dependent children—

"(A) three-fourths of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $12 multiplied by the total number of dependent children with respect to whom aid to dependent children is paid for such month, plus

"(B) one-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A), and (2) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to dependent children other than in the form of money payments, equal to one-half of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to dependent children other than in the form of money payments under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditures with respect to any month in such form as exceed the product of $3 multiplied by the total number of dependent children with respect to whom aid to dependent children is paid for any month under the State plan; and (3) an amount equal to one-half of the total of sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to dependent children, or both, and for no other purposes."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 1, 1950.

On page 383, strike out lines 4, 5, and 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Section 1003 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows.

On page 383, line 14, after the word "blind" insert the following: "in the form of money payments."

On page 383, strike out lines 17 and 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(A) three-fourths of such expenditures, not counting so much of any expenditures with respect to any month as exceeds the product of $20 multiplied by the total number of such individuals who receive aid to the blind for such month, plus

(B) one-half of the amount by which such expenditures exceed the maximum which may be counted under clause (A);

and (2) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the blind other than in the form of money payments equal to one-half of the total amounts expended during such quarter as aid to the blind other than in the form of money payments under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditures in any month in such form as exceed the product of $6 multiplied by the total number of individuals who receive aid to the blind under the State plan for such month; and (3) an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the blind and for no other purposes.

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective October 1, 1950.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, this amendment would authorize Federal grants to States for the cost of medical, hospital, and other health care for the needy, the blind, dependent children, and other recipients of State aid.

This amendment carries out the recommendations of the Senate's Advisory Council on Social Security. This amendment is supported by all the great professional health organizations—the American Dental Society, the American Hospital Association, the American Medical Association, the American Nursing Association, the American Public Health Association, and the American Public Welfare Association.

Under the terms of my amendment, the Federal Government would provide grants to the States for medical care based on the number of individuals receiving public assistance, in all its forms, in these States.

Each State could receive up to $6 monthly per person for each adult and $3 monthly for each child on the public-assistance rolls. The Federal Government would provide up to 50 percent of the expenditures of each State for medical care for these individuals. The States moreover could apply these grants to the cost of medical care for all individuals as long as these costs do not exceed the total represented by $6 per adult and $3 per child for all individuals on the assistance rolls of the State concerned.

Both the House and Senate versions of the pending bill authorize the use of Federal public-assistance grants to pay for the cost of medical care for the needy. The hitch is in the fact that the maximum limit of $50 per month per individual for public assistance and medical care combined is retained.

This amount is obviously inadequate to meet the cost of any serious illness. It also puts medical care in competition with relief payments.

I believe that the cost of medical care should be considered apart from the cost of normal subsistence. In the long run, this is an economy, since preventive medical care forestalls serious illnesses which make the individuals concerned long-term occupants of the relief rolls. These grants would be administered, under the terms of my amendment, by the public health departments of the various States.

All of us are greatly concerned over the over-all problem of medical care. Here is one field in which there is no controversy and no opposition from the medical and other health associations. On the contrary this amendment is vigorously supported by them. It should be adopted.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have only to say that we are making a real effort to reduce the expenditures under the assistance program, and to increase the benefits under the old-age and survivors insurance, and this amendment would add some $70,000,000 a year to the cost of the Federal Government in matching with the States. I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment lettered "A."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 387, beginning in line 13, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 403. (a) (1) Paragraph (1) of section 1101 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The term 'State' includes Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia, and when used in titles I, IV, V, and X includes the Virgin Islands."

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 1101 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The term 'Administrator,' except when the context otherwise requires, means the Federal Security Administrator."

(3) The amendment made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall take effect October 1, 1950, and the amendment made by paragraph (2) of this subsection, insofar as it repeals the definition of "employee," shall be effective only with respect to services performed after 1950.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, a short time ago the Senate rejected an amendment which would have extended to the Virgin Islands and to Puerto Rico the provisions of the pending bill relative to public assistance. The purpose of my amendment is to extend the provisions of the bill to the Virgin Islands.

The distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] a short time ago pointed out that there was a substantial difference between the economy of the Virgin Islands and the economy of Puerto Rico.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me this matter will be in conference, and I suggest to the Senator, and perhaps to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that I am certain that the conferees will give serious consideration to the subject of the Senator's amendment, which is now covered in the bill as it passed the House. I suggest that perhaps the Senator, rather than have a vote on the amendment at this time, would be willing to withdraw the amendment, for he can be sure it will be considered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was about to suggest to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island that the subject will be in conference, and I am quite sure that there will be on the part of the Senate conferees much sympathy for the amendment. The situation is different in the Virgin Islands, and if the Senator would be content to allow the matter to rest where it is, I think I can assure him that it will have very full consideration by the conferees.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, with that assurance, I shall not press for a vote at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. LEAHY. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, dated June 14, 1950, lettered "D."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 255, line 20, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 22 and insert in lieu thereof:

(A) as an agent-driver or commission driver engaged in distributing to wholesalers, retailers, or consumers, food products, beverages, laundry or dry cleaning services, or any other products or services (other than dairy products); or.

On page 336, beginning with line 18, strike out all down to and including line 20 and insert in lieu thereof:

(A) as an agent-driver or commission driver engaged in distributing to wholesalers, retailers, or consumers, food products, beverages, laundry or dry cleaning services, or any other products or services (other than dairy products); or.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to include in the definition of "employee" certain agent-drivers who are not now included in the Senate committee bill. The Senate committee bill already includes as employees such agent-drivers as meat drivers, bakery drivers, and laundry drivers.

I see no reason why other agent-drivers, such as those who distribute beverages, fuel and ice, and ice-cream drivers, should not similarly be included.

Altogether, those who would be covered as employees under my amendment would be about 48,000. The committee bill already extends this coverage to approximately 75,000 persons.

My amendment does not, I repeat, "not" cover agent or commission drivers who distribute dairy products. The reason for this exclusion is to avoid the difficulty involved in the peculiar relationship between some of these drivers and individual farmers and farm co-ops.

Other than this group, all agent-drivers would be classified as employees. There would be no administrative difficulties involved in this arrangement. Drivers distributing beverages are no more self-employed than laundry drivers. The Senate committee bill defines the latter as employees. Those covered in my amendment should also be so considered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it the purpose of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New York to cover salesmen of such products as clothing, aluminum ware, brushes—salesmen who sell from house to house on commission?

Mr. LEHMAN. No; they would not be included. The intent of the amendment is perfectly clear. It applies only to agent drivers and commission drivers. These are persons driving cars either owned by or under contract or direct control of the producer or main distributor, cars which are specially equipped or adapted to such distribution. Those who merely use cars as transportation incidental to their house-to-house selling are not included within the terms agent driver or commission driver, but are instead salesmen who would be covered only if a new subsection C were to apply to them. And all proposed amendments to add a section C exclude such house-to-house retail salesmen.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from New York for his very clear explanation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall not make a point of order, but I think the amendment offered is subject to a point of order, because the particular language to which the amendment is directed has already today been amended in the Senate. The Senate has included certain agent drivers. The House bill contains a broader provision. The whole matter will be directly in conference, and since it is so difficult to define who an employee is in a particular line of business, and since adoption of the amendment would very often result in bringing in someone who was truly a self-employed person, an independent operator, who did not want to be classed as an employee, but who would be brought under the social-security program nevertheless, the committee was most reluctant to undertake to define literally thousands and hundreds of thousands of employees by undertaking specifically to indicate when a person was employed or when he was a self-employed person.

For the reasons stated, Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment dated June 14, 1950, lettered "C."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 255, line 22, following the semicolon, to strike out "or."

On page 255, line 23, following the semicolon, to insert "or."

On page 255, between lines 23 and 24, to insert the following:

(C) as a home worker.

On page 336, line 20, following the semicolon, to strike out "or."

On page 336, line 21, following the semicolon, to insert "or."

On page 336, between lines 21 and 22, to insert the following:

(C) as a home worker.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, this amendment would extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to approximately 40,000 persons who work in their own homes on a piecework basis.

Most of the work they do is needlework. They make artificial flowers, embroidery, gloves, and lingerie.

Certainly these home workers should be given coverage. They need old-age insurance protection as much as any other group in our population.

Here again is a group of workers who, despite the contractual relationship and the common-law definition of what constitutes an employee, are truly employees in the social definition of the word.

In many other connections these home workers are considered employees. The Fair Labor Standards Act treats these people as employees and the courts have upheld that application. In several States of the Union, home workers are eligible for unemployment compensation. They should certainly be eligible for old-age and survivors insurance benefits.

In many jurisdictions home workers are regulated by law. In my own State these regulations are very detailed and place absolute and specific obligations upon the employer. The home workers in my State are covered by workmen's compensation insurance. I am advised that the same is true in a number of other States.

There is certainly no logical basis for excluding these home workers from coverage or for excluding them from definition as employees under the meaning of the act. Employers in my State, where a large proportion of these home workers are located, are required to keep detailed records on home workers. This amendment, placing them under old-age and survivors insurance, would require no special increase in bookkeeping. Nor would it present any other administrative difficulties.

I hope the Senate will approve the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not have anything to say with respect to the amendment except that the committee has carefully considered it and rejected it. The committee felt it had gone as far as it could in prescribing specific definitions to fit employees, rather than to let them stand under the general rule which is written into the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], for himself and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], on page 385, line 6, the subject matter being the grants in aid to persons who are disabled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada, who voted against the amendment, and therefore is qualified to move to reconsider, has moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are requested.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. May we be advised what is now proposed to be done?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] has moved that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the Long amendment was rejected earlier in the evening.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, one of the sponsors of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], had no opportunity at all to explain his position in support of the amendment. It seems to me the Senate should reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected, in order that the Senator from Wyoming may have an opportunity to explain his reason for supporting the amendment, especially in view of the fact that the amendment was defeated by only one vote. It seems to me that in justice to the Senator from Wyoming he should be afforded an opportunity to explain his reason for supporting the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I regret very much that we are faced by a motion to reconsider the vote on the amendment, after the amendment had been thoroughly submitted to the Senate. Some of us have been at work steadily on this bill since 10:30 this morning, in committee and from the committee directly to the Senate floor.

Mr. President, I desire to ask the majority leader how long he proposes to keep the Senate in session tonight?

Mr. LUCAS. I was hoping we could finish the bill. I thought the Senate was about through with the amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Obviously we are not near the end of the consideration of the bill if there is to be reconsideration of amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. If there is to be a reconsideration of any of the amendments, and we are to have yea-and-nay votes and debate upon them, of course it will take some time. I sincerely hope we may pass the bill before the night is over. If we cannot do so, and some Senator wishes to move that the Senate take a recess, of course he can do so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the amendment offered by me and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] was defeated by only one vote. I am sure many Senators did not have a chance to understand the amendment fully. We had only 5 minutes to debate the amendment on our side. I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote by which the amendment was defeated, since it was defeated by only one vote.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, am I correct in my understanding that we are compelled to remain here until we complete action on the bill, or can we take a recess before that is done?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not interpret the unanimous-consent agreement to compel the Senate to remain in session until action on the bill is completed. Of course, there is a special order for a vote tomorrow. That was entered by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNALLY. Tomorrow will be the same legislative day as today, if we take a recess?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement provides for action on the calendar day of June 20, so that the legislative day does not have anything to do with it.

The Chair also would hold that under the unanimous-consent agreement the motion to reconsider comes under the 5-minute rule; 5 minutes to be allotted to those in favor and 5 minutes to those who are against the motion, if Senators desire to debate the motion.

The Chair was putting the question as to whether the yeas and nays should be ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eleven hands were raised. That is not a sufficient number according to the vote that was had on the amendment.

The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Long amendment was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I call up amendment lettered "G" dated June 14, which I offer on behalf of myself, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 242, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to delete "twenty-four days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six days during such quarter, each day being in a different calendar week."

On page 323, in lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to delete "twenty-four days during such quarter" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six days during such quarter, each day being in a different calendar week."

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, this amendment would extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to approximately 1,000,000 domestics. The domestics who would be covered under this amendment are those who need this coverage most. They are domestics who perform day work 1 day a week for each employer.

These domestics are regularly employed although by different employers. It is unfair and unwise to include domestics who work as much as 2 days for a single employer and then to exclude those who work 1 day a week.

My amendment errs on the conservative side. My amendment provides that the domestic must receive a minimum of $50 in a calendar quarter from the same employer, as well as work 6 days in that quarter.

At the prevailing wage rates of $5 per day in the North and eastern parts of the country, this would mean that the domestic would actually be required to work for 10 days in the calendar quarter. In the South and other areas of lower wage levels, the period required to be worked to be considered regularly employed, would be even longer.

Yet I think this amendment goes a long way in the right direction. The committee bill provides coverage for domestics who are employed as many as 24 days in a calendar quarter. I have adopted the same wage minimum as that provided in the committee bill. This will cover domestics who work 1 day a week in my State.

If other Senators from other States would like to decrease the minimum wage requirement, I would be pleased to accept such a modification.

In any event, I urge the approval of this amendment. I consider it a highly important one for the purpose of extending old-age and survivors insurance protection to those who need it most.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement I have prepared, dealing with House bill 6000.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

H. R. 6000 is an important bill which affects every one of the 150,000,000 American people. It is a measure which is long overdue. But, while the bill contains many important improvements in our social-security program, it does not, in my opinion, go far enough in meeting the needs of our people.

The bill does not cover all the people under the insurance plan; the insurance benefits are not adequate enough, there is no provision for disability insurance benefits; and the assistance provisions are grossly inadequate.

The Senate Finance Committee made a number of changes in the House-approved bill, and I want to give credit first for the improvements which the committee made. There are eight major improvements. These are:

1. Increase in the second step in the benefit formula from 10 percent to 15 percent, including an upward adjustment of benefits for current beneficiaries.

2. Liberalization of the eligibility provision so as to make it easier for persons to become insured for benefits during the next decade.

3. Liberalization of the method of computing the "average monthly wage" for benefit purposes.

4. Inclusion of regularly employed agricultural labor.

5. Inclusion of publishers as self-employed persons.

6. Payment of benefits to dependent husbands and widowers of insured women workers and liberalization of survivors insurance benefits with respect to deaths of insured married women.

7. Increasing the maximum payments for aid to dependent children in which the Federal Government would share from $27 to $30 a month for the first child and from $18 to $20 for each additional child.

8. Increase in Federal grants for maternal and child health from $11,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually; for crippled children from $7,500,000 to $15,000,000; and for child welfare services, from $7,000,000 in the House bill to $12,000,000.

But after making the 8 improvements which I have just listed, the Finance Committee made 12 major crippling changes which deliberalize the House bill. These are as follows:

1. Reduction of the maximum wage based from $3,600 to $3,000 a year.

2. Elimination of the provision for permanent and total disability insurance.

3. Elimination of the increment for years of contributions to the insurance program.

4. Exclusion of tips from covered wages.

5. Exclusion of salesmen and certain other groups, such as driver-lessees of taxicabs and home workers, from coverage as employees.

6. Exclusion of naturopaths, architects, accountants, and all professional engineers from coverage as self-employed persons.

7. Elimination of the provision which would have increased assistance payments by providing a higher percentage of Federal funds under a formula weighted in favor of States with low payments.

8. Elimination of the provision for including an adult relative to aid-to-dependent-children families as a recipient for Federal matching purposes.

9. Elimination of the provision for Federal grants to the States for the needy permanently and totally disabled.

10. Elimination of the provision extending Federal grants for public assistance to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

11. Reducing Federal matching on State supplementary old-age assistance payments to a 50-50 basis in cases where a person becomes an insurance beneficiary after the effective date of the bill.

12. Restoring the 5-year residence requirement for the blind instead of the 1-year requirement in the House bill.

So, in summary, the Finance Committee made 8 major improvements and 12 major deliberalizations. I shall support amendments to correct these deliberalizations, and I hope that the Senate will vote to reverse them.

I am strongly in favor of the amendments which have been introduced to increase the maximum wage base. I favor increasing the wage base to $4,800 a year, which would make it possible to pay an insurance benefit of $95 a month instead of the $72.50 a month provided under the $3,000 wage base reported out by the Finance Committee. I believe that $72.50 a month is not sufficient to maintain an individual at a decent level.

I also favor the amendments proposed to restore an "increment," which would give the contributor an increased benefit based upon the years that he contributed to the insurance system. If the full 1-percent increment were restored to the bill, it would enable a benefit of $100 a month to be paid to persons retiring at the present time and about $114 a month to persons who had contributed for 20 years. These amounts seem to me to be more in keeping with what is required for an American standard of living.

I also favor the restoration of provisions for the payment of permanent and total disability insurance. Under the provisions of H. R. 6000 as passed by the House of Representatives, thousands of permanent disabled individuals would have been provided benefit during the period of their disability. I feel that the elimination of this protection from the bill is undesirable. When an individual has suffered a heart attack and is no longer able to work, when he is suffering from tuberculosis or cancer and is unable to perform his regular job responsibilities, he rapidly uses up his savings under the double strain of loss of income from his job and the necessity for paying for doctors and hospital bills, medical supplies and nurses' services. We now provide disability insurance protection to governmental employees under the Civil Service Retirement Act and under all of the other retirement acts passed by the Congress. We have by Federal legislation provided disability insurance protection to over 2,000,000 men and women under the Railroad Retirement Act. The administrative experience under the Railroad Act and under the Civil Service Retirement Act has been eminently successful. There are 5,000,000 persons covered under these two laws. Between two and three million employees of State and local governments are covered under State and local retirement systems which also provide disability insurance protection. With this wealth of administrative experience, I see no reason why we should not now extend this same type of protection to the workers in industry and commerce who need it so badly.

I believe that we should take immediate steps to extend the insurance program to cover as many persons as possible. I am a cosponsor, along with Senators LEHMAN, DOUGLAS, and MURRAY, of an amendment to extend coverage to an additional 1,000,000 persons, in domestic service. I hope that other Senators will join us in voting for this amendment.

The senior Senator from Montana has offered an amendment to extend coverage to an additional 1,000,000 farm laborers. Farm workers need social-security protection.

The junior Senator from New York has offered an amendment to assure protection to some 40,000 home workers under the insurance provisions of the bill. This is a very desirable amendment.

While I believe that all of these amendments are sound, and I shall vote for them, I believe that we must make a still more far-reaching revision of our social-security program. I believe that a sound social-security program should embody the following fundamental principles:

1. Universal coverage of all persons who work for a living.

2. Protection under the insurance system of all aged persons, irrespective of the length of time that they have contributed to the insurance system or whether they have retired prior to contributing to the insurance system.

3. A substantial increase in the amount of the benefit in order that individuals may retire with security, dignity, and reasonable comfort.

4. Payment of insurance benefits to individuals during periods of disability so that individuals who are sick or disabled may also have security as well as some income, which will make it possible for them to avoid asking for charity and enable them to pay their doctor's and hospital bills from their insurance benefits.

5. Federal grants to the States for public assistance to needy persons for whom the insurance program cannot meet all their needs.

We have made a good start in overhauling our social-security system. But we cannot be content with what we have done so far. We must not wait for another 11 years to make the necessary changes which will bring our social-security system up to date.

Our economy is expanding. Wages have been increasing and in my opinion will continue to increase because of the increasing productivity of our American economic system. Under these circumstances I believe we can provide a more generous, a more adequate, a more comprehensive social-security system which will really bring security to the American people. There are some who are afraid of improving our social-security system because they say it will cost too much. In my opinion these people do not have faith in the future of America. They do not have faith in our economic system. They do not have faith in our political system.

I believe we must go forward in making bold and progressive changes in our social-security system if we are going to meet the needs of our people in a dynamic and changing economy.

Until we have such a comprehensive and progressive social-security system I believe we must improve the existing program. I favor the amendments being offered to increase the coverage of the insurance program, liberalize the amount of the benefits and permanent-disability insurance, and increase Federal grants for public assistance.

Mr. MALONE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement I have prepared.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION

The junior Senator from Nevada is for the maximum of social security that the economic structure of the Nation can support without danger to employment and investments.

The legislation, however, as at present constituted is neither insurance nor pensions, it is neither fish nor fowl; it is a hybrid thing. No definite permanent policy has yet been recommended by the committee.

The payments by both the employee and the employer, starting with a total of 3 percent, within a few years will approximate 7 percent.

The legislation will apparently absorb the greater part of the pensions paid by business. The steel companies are a good example.

The legislation will probably absorb most of the State pension systems within a reasonable time.

It is not a well-thought-out piece of legislation.

The George-Millikin resolution provides for a thorough study of the whole subject—to determine what trend the payments should take, how much social security the economy can absorb, and how much can the program be substantially broadened without danger to the economic system. It is estimated that approximately 8,000,000 people past 65 will not be covered by the legislation. It is obvious that there should be greater coverage.

So, for these and other reasons, the junior Senator from Nevada believes that the results of the proposed study should have been made known before the passage of the legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GEORGE and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] would each vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 81, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS—81

Aiken	Capehart	Dworshak
Anderson	Chapman	Eastland
Benton	Connally	Ecton
Brewster	Cordon	Ellender
Bricker	Darby	Ferguson
Bridges	Donnell	Flanders
Byrd	Douglas	Frear
Fulbright	Knowland	Neely
George	Leahy	O'Mahoney
Gillette	Lehman	Pepper
Green	Lodge	Robertson
Gurney	Long	Russell
Hayden	Lucas	Saltonstall
Hendrickson	McCarran	Schoeppel
Hickenlooper	McCarthy	Smith, Maine
Hill	McClellan	Smith, N. J.
Hoey	McFarland	Sparkman
Humphrey	McKellar	Stennis
Hunt	McMahon	Taft
Ives	Magnuson	Thomas, Utah
Jenner	Malone	Thye
Johnson, Colo.	Martin	Tydings
Johnson, Tex.	Maybank	Watkins
Kefauver	Millikin	Wherry
Kem	Mundt	Wiley
Kerr	Murray	Williams
Kilgore	Myers	Withers

NAYS—2

Butler Cain

NOT VOTING—13

Chavez	Langer	Tobey
Downey	Morse	Vandenberg
Graham	O'Conor	Young
Holland	Taylor
Johnston, S. C.	Thomas, Okla.

So the bill (H. R. 6000) was passed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference thereon with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BYRD, Mr. MILLIKIN, and Mr. TAFT conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed showing the Senate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ARMY ORGANIZATION ACT OF 1950—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8198) to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see pp. 9002–9006 of today's proceedings of the House of Representativcs.)

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the Senator please tell us what is involved in the report?

Mr. TYDINGS. This is a conference report on what is called the Army organization bill, which passed the Senate some time ago, and subsequently had some minor amendments made to it by the House of Representatives.

Under existing law we are required to have cavalry, for example. The old law has never been changed since before the war. This bill modernizes the law and brings it up to date, as the Army, the Air Force, and the Navy bills are all modernization bills.

There is nothing new in this measure, except that it provides for eliminating compulsory things which are not really being carried on.

There is very little difference between the House and the Senate versions of the bill; and the amendments which are in dispute are minor. The conferees were unanimous in regard to the amendments, agreeing after approximately 20 minutes of discussion.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Kenneth W. Spencer, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for a term of 3 years from July 1, 1950. (Reappointment.)

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION—NOMINATION REPORTED ADVERSELY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Martin A. Hutchinson of Virginia, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission for the unexpired term of 7 years from September 26, 1946.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that nomination should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Nelson Lee Smith, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1955.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George E. Sterling, of Maine, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of 7 years from July 1, 1950.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. As in legislative session, I now move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 21, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 20 (legislative day of June 7), 1950:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Donald R. Heath, of Kansas, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the State of Vietnam, to the Kingdom of Cambodia, and to the Kingdom of Laos.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The following-named officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for permanent appointment to the grades indicated, subject to qualification therefor as provided by law:

To be captains

Henry E. Finnegan
Charles M. Thomas
Charles Pierce

To be commanders

Ross A. Gilmore
Gilbert C. Mast
Fred A. Riddell
Ira R. Rubottom
Maurice E. Wennermark
Fred Natella
Jeremiah S. Morton
Robert A. Marshall

To be lieutenant commander

Don A. Jones

To be lieutenants

Robert C. Darling
Miller J. Tonkel
William E. Randall

To be lieutenants (junior grade)

John R. Plaggmier
Leonard S. Baker
Eugene W. Richards
Samuel D. Parkinson

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 20 (legislative day of June 7), 1950:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

Nelson Lee Smith to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1955.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

George E. Sterling to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of 7 years from July 1, 1950.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of all grace, we thank Thee for the many overtures of kindness, mercy, and goodness which Thou art daily extending to us as individuals and to our beloved country.

May we be eager to keep inviolate the faith of our God-fearing fathers. May the spiritual principles upon which they built our Nation continue to be the guiding principles upon which we are relying and enthroning in our individual and national life.

Inspire us with a passionate longing to promote the spirit of fellowship, sympathetic understanding, mutual respect, and unity among all the members of the human family.

Help us to hasten the coming of that glorious day when men and nations shall think and act in terms of humanity and all declarations of independence shall give way to declarations of interdependence and we shall seek one another's welfare.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4692) entitled "An act to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II."

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

JUNE 14, 1950.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
The Speaker,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: It is with sincere regret that I tender to you my resignation from membership on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House.

It has been a great privilege to work with members of this fine committee and only the opportunity to return to a former committee assignment leads me to make this decision.

Sincerely yours,

E. H. JENISON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON RENT-CONTROL EXTENSION

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] as to the conference report to be considered tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. A conference report on the extension of rent control has been filed. In response to the inquiry of my friend, the minority leader, it will be programed for tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will it be first on the program?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; it will be the first order of business.

HOARDING OF FOOD COMMODITIES

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include a tabulation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I called attention to the enormous increase in the amount of food commodities in storage on April 30 of this year compared to April 30, 1949.

I now want the RECORD to show the terrific waste of the taxpayers' money in order to hoard these 11 food commodities in the period from July 1, 1949, to April 30, 1950, as compared with July 1, 1948, to April 30, 1949. It represents an increase of 859.26 percent. Following are the details:

	Carrying charges
	July 1, 1948, to Apr. 30, 1949	July 1, 1949, to Apr. 30, 1950
Butter	None	$1,474,284.50
Cheese	None	311,653.44
Dried beans	None	1,889,409.42
Dried peas	None	564,646.27
Rice	None	623,842.95
Soybeans	$145.75	1,139,437.78
Turkeys	494.75	34,725.49
Dried milk	153,498.83	2,998,555.85
Raisins	268,219.67	714,249.09
Prunes	347,742.38	1,160,298.85
Dried eggs	719,085.20	1,885,889.13
Total	1,489,186.58	12,796,992.77

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, with the concurrence of my friend, the distinguished minority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], whom I did not have the opportunity of consulting previously, I now ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MRS. MARION T. SCHWARTZ

Mr. LANE submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 1169) for the relief of Mrs. Marion T. Schwartz.

MRS. EVELYN M. HRYNIAK

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 2655) for the relief of Mrs. Evelyn M. Hryniak, with amendments of the House thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BYRNE of New York, DENTON, and JENNINGS.

BUNKER HILL DEVELOPMENT CORP.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1082) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon any claim arising out of personal injuries sustained by the Bunker Hill Development Corp., with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after "of", insert "alleged."

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out "corporation, such damages being caused by" and insert "corporation as a result of."

Page 2, line 4, strike out "dust" and insert "dust."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a claim of the Bunker Hill Development Corp."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARTHUR S. HORNER ET AL.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2230) to reimburse Arthur S. Horner, Leah B. Horner, and Maude Brewer, partners composing a firm, doing business as A. S. Horner Construction Co., with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 2, after line 9, insert:

"SEC. 3. Any findings rendered under the authority of this act may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari granted upon the petition of either party: Provided, That the passage of this act shall not be considered an inference of liability on the part of the United States."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Arthur S. Horner, Leah B. Horner, and Maude Brewer, doing business as the A. S. Horner Construction Co."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT J. PETERSON

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2803) for the relief of Albert J. Peterson, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,310.79" and insert "$9,436.61."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IVA GAVIN

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3254) for the relief of Iva Gavin, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, or any limitation upon the jurisdiction of United States district courts to hear, determine, and render judgment upon tort claims against the United States which accrue prior to January 1, 1945, suit may be instituted at any time within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of tort claims against the United States, on the claim of Miss Iva Gavin, of Muncie, Ind., against the United States arising as a result of personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident involving a United States Army Air Corps bus at the intersection of United States Highway No. 25 and Coronette Avenue, near Dayton, Ohio, on August 18, 1943: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as an inference of liability on the part of the United States Government."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to pay out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $5,000 to Iva Gavin, of Muncie, Ind., in full settlement of claims for medical expenses and injuries sustained as a result of an automobile accident involving a United States Army Air Corps bus on August 18, 1943. The committee felt that due to the fact that the statute had intervened, the concurrence of the House in this amendment should be granted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF SHIRO TAKEMURA

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4371) for the relief of Shiro Takemura, together with the Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out all after "appropriated", down to and including "family", in line 9 and insert "to the estate of Paul Toshio Takemura, deceased son of Shiro Takemura, of the county of Los Angeles, city of Los Angeles, State of California, the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Page 1, line 10, after "of", insert "the said."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FELLA H. HOLBROOK

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5019) for the relief of Fella H. Holbrook, together with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$6,229.96" and insert "$4,029.25."

Page 1, line 7, strike out ", and expenses incurred."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM T. ORTON

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5682) for the relief of William T. Orton, together with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after "authorized", insert "and directed."

Page 1, line 3, after "pay", insert ", out of Lanham Act funds."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. LILLIAN COOLIDGE

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5846) for the relief of Mrs. Lillian Coolidge, together with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after line 2 over to and including "Camp:" on page 2, line 1, and insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Lillian Coolidge, of Lancaster, Pa., the sum of $1,656, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for reimbursement for deposits made by her son, Thomas Coolidge, while present on Corregidor, just prior to its capitulation, for the purchase of United States bonds; such sum being an amount equal to the value, as of April 1950, of 18 $100 United States Savings Bonds of the April 1942 issue."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL D. BANNING

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6691) for the relief of Paul D. Banning, Chief Disbursing Officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes, together with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out all after "Department", down to and including "session", in line 4, and insert "such credits being allowed to adjust certain overdrafts in such accounts."

Page 3, line 4, strike out all after "in" where it appears the first time down to and including "stated" in line 6, and insert "such accounts for sums not to exceed those hereinafter stated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. H. CORRIGAN

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6934) for the relief of E. H. Corrigan, together with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "January 15, 1944" and insert "January 17, 1944."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF PATENTS HELD BY VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 1880)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment, and agree to the same.

JOSEPH R. BRYSON,
E. E. WILLIS,
J. CALEB BOGGS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,
HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4692) to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the bill would have reduced the period of the proposed extension of patents for veterans of World War II from twice the period of their service between certain dates to a length of time only equaling the period of service between those dates. This would have inadvertently deprived many veterans of their rights because in many cases the period represented by the Senate amendment would have already expired. The effect of the Senate receding from its amendment is to restore the bill to precisely the form in which it passed the House.

JOSEPH R. BRYSON,
E. E. WILLIS,
J. CALEB BOGGS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE HIGH COST OF MEAT

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the membership that on yesterday I introduced House Resolution 655 asking for a sweeping investigation of the meat industry and the skyrocketing of meat prices. I am sure that every Member of this House is alive to the condition that exists today, especially since it concerns the average housewife and the average worker. Meat prices in the past three or four months have skyrocketed to such a point that the average family cannot afford to purchase meat. Since this is the situation, I am sure this Congress wants to do something to remedy the condition.

I am asking that the House give this resolution its immediate consideration so as to bring about a correction of this condition.

In talking this situation over with wholesale and retail meat dealers in and around Buffalo, N. Y., my home city, I find that they are unable to explain the skyrocketing of meat prices generally. They stated that we are not going through any emergency at the present time and that there is no shortage, yet the prices have jumped in such proportion that it is impossible for them to realize any profits and next to impossible for the housewife to purchase meat at the prevailing prices.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion there is a conspiracy on the part of some group or groups to skyrocket meat prices for their own selfish purposes in order to secure exorbitant profits at the expense of the consuming public.

I believe it is imperative that this Congress act favorably on House Resolution 655.

SPENDING FOR WAR

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we may not be fools, but it seems to me that we do the things that fools would do. We say we want peace; I hope we all agree. If we do, then let us get to the point of doing the things that will bring peace to our minds and to our hearts and to our very beings. Peace to all nations of this world and to all peoples. If we want peace let us try to get it; let us stop spending $14,000,000,000 annually for our armed services and let us stop spending at the President's request another $1,250,000,000 to arm foreign countries. You spent $1,400,000,000 to arm foreign countries last year. You are never going to get peace in the world if you are going to continue this program.

I say we want to do things differently than we are doing them. If we do not this cold war will go on and on, and eventually we will go bankrupt and then we will be of no good to ourselves or anybody else. This administration program is for war.

Get common sense—work for a program to stop arming for war but get a program for peace that will mean peace.

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution (H. Res. 658).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That EDWARD H. JENISON, of Illinois, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Public Lands.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day.

The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

GEORGES GREGORY ALPIAR

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar (S. 2107) for the relief of Georges Gregory Alpiar.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, Georges Gregory Alpiar, of Cashmere, Wash., who was admitted into the United States on a temporary visa, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the first available immigration quota for nationals of Turkey.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OSCAR (OSZKAR) NEMENYI, MARIANNA NEMENYI (WIFE), AND THOMAS JOHN NEMENYI (SON)

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2309) for the relief of Oscar (Oszkar) Nemenyi, Marianna Nemenyi (wife), and Thomas John Nemenyi (son).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record Oscar (Oszkar) Nemenyi, Marianna Nemenyi (wife), and Thomas John Nemenyi (son), as having entered the United States on May 5, 1948, for permanent residence. The said Oscar (Oszkar) Nemenyi, Marianna Nemenyi (wife), and Thomas John Nemenyi (son), shall not be subject to deportation by reason of such entry. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the quota-control officer to deduct three numbers from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, at the end of the bill add the following new sections:

"SEC. 2. That this act may be cited as the 'Foreign Skilled Personnel Admission Act.'

"SEC. 3. When used in this act, the term—

"(a) 'Board' means the Foreign Skilled Personnel Board created pursuant to this act.

"(b) 'Eligible foreign specialist' means an alien, as defined in section 28, subsection (b) of the act of May 26, 1924, as amended, 43 Stat. 168; 8 U. S. C. 224), who is seeking to enter the United States and whose services are urgently needed in the United States by the United States Government or any of its departments, agencies, or bureaus, or by a commercial, industrial, financial, educational, or health institution, or firm, or corporation, public or private, from the standpoint of national defense, public security, or because of highly skilled technical, medical, professional, or scientific training, experience, or ability of such person, such services being prospectively beneficial to the United States.

"SEC. 4. A number of passport visas, not to exceed 3,200 in any fiscal year, may be issued to eligible foreign specialists as nonimmigrants under the provisions of subsection (2) of section 3 of the act of May 26, 1924, as amended (43 Stat. 154; 8 U. S. C. 203), and to their spouses and their unmarried children under 21 years of age, if accompanying or following to join them: Provided, That the passport visas issued to such spouses and unmarried children under 21 years of age shall be in addition to and shall not be included in the total number of 3,200 passport visas to be issued annually to eligible foreign specialists: And provided further, That the admission into the United States of such eligible foreign specialists shall have been recommended to the Secretary of State and to the Attorney General by the Board.

"SEC. 5. Any agency or institution described in section 3 of this act, claiming the necessity of the admission into the United States of an eligible foreign specialist, may file with the Board a petition, in such form as may be prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Board, requesting the permission to import such eligible foreign specialist.

"SEC. 6. Upon basis of a finding that there is an urgent and special need for the services of an eligible foreign specialist specifically identified under the provisions of section 5 of this act, and that the same will yield a substantial benefit to the defense, or the security, or the economy, or the health of the United States, the Board shall recommend the temporary admission of such eligible foreign specialists to the Secretary of State and the Attorney General in a manner provided for by regulations to be promulgated by the Board.

"SEC. 7. There is hereby created a board to be known as the Foreign Skilled Personnel Board which shall consist of seven members. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor shall each appoint one member of the Board. The members of the Board shall select a Chairman from among their number for a term not to exceed two fiscal years.

"SEC. 8. The members of the Board shall receive no compensation for their services as such, but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of the Board. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums of money as may be necessary to enable the Board to discharge its duties. Within the limits of such funds as may be appropriated to the Board or as may be allocated to it by the President, the Board may employ necessary personnel without regard to the civil-service law or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and make provisions for necessary supplies, facilities, and services to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act. It shall be the duty of the Board to formulate and issue regulations, necessary under the provisions of this act, and in compliance therewith, for the admission into the United States of eligible foreign specialists and the members of their families. It shall also be the duty of the Board to report, on July 1 of each year, to the Attorney General on the situation regarding the employment of eligible foreign specialists in the United States.

"SEC. 9. If, at the expiration of 12 months immediately following the admission into the United States of an eligible foreign specialist, the Attorney General shall, upon application filed with the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization by the alien, find that such person has maintained the employment with the agency or institution upon which application such person has been admitted into the United States, he is hereby authorized and directed to amend the record of such alien's temporary admission, and the records of admission of the members of his family admitted under the provisions of section 4 of this act, to show admission for permanent residence as of the date of their respective last entries into the United States: Provided, That no change in employment which may occur by the written consent of the agency or institution importing the alien under the provisions of this act shall preclude such alien from having his record of admission amended according to the provisions of this section: And provided further, That upon being notified by the Attorney General of the amendment of the record of admission of an eligible foreign specialist and the members of his family, admitted into the United States temporarily in accordance with the provisions of this section, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct the requisite numbers from the immigration quota or quotas to which such foreign specialist and the members of his family are chargeable.

"SEC. 10. Any person or persons who knowingly violate or conspire to violate any provision of this act shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, or shall be imprisoned not less than 2 or more than 10 years, or both."

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against the amendment on the ground it is a general amendment to a specific act under rule 16 and not germane.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a point of order that the committee amendment is not germane, is not proper legislative procedure and is general legislation on a private bill. It has been held several times, and the Chair reads from volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, section 3292:

It is not in order to amend a private bill by adding provisions general or public in character.

Under the precedents and under the feeling of the present occupant of the Chair, the Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment is stricken.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLEMENTE SABIN DOPICO

The Clerk called the bill (S. 118) for the relief of Clemente Sabin Dopico.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws Clemente Sabin Dopico, also known as Clementi Sabin Dopico, of Tampa, Fla. (file No. A-6279638), shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment by him of the required head tax and visa fee.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized and directed to cancel any warrants of arrest or orders of deportation which may have been issued with respect to the said Clemente Sabin Dopico.

SEC. 3. Upon enactment of this act, the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the first available immigration quota for nationals of Spain.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE GABRIEL HERRMANN, ET AL.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 330) for the relief of George Gabriel Herrmann, Greta (Marketa) Herrmann (wife) and Alice Hermann (daughter), known also as George Gabriel Herman, Greta Herman, and Alice Herman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record George Gabriel Herrmann, Greta (Marketa) Herrmann (wife), and Alice

Herrmann (daughter) known also as George Gabriel Herman, Greta Herman, and Alice Herman, as having entered the United States on January 16, 1947, for permanent residence, upon the payment by them of the visa fees and head taxes. The said George Gabriel Herrmann, Greta (Marketa) Herrmann (wife), and Alice Herrmann (daughter) shall not be subject to deportation by reason of such entry. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State is instructed to direct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the Austrian quota for the first year that such quota numbers are available, and to deduct one number from the Czechoslovakian quota for the first year that such quota number is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. JUAN A. QUERALT BALLESTE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1452) for the relief of Dr. Juan A. Queralt Balleste.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, Dr. Juan A. Queralt Balleste shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

SEC. 2. Upon enactment of this act, the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the first available immigration quota for nationals of Spain.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUGUSTINO MARLIA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1484) for the relief of Augustino Marlia.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, the alien Augustino Marlia shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of August 20, 1948, the date on which he was admitted as a visitor, upon payment of head tax and visa fee. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARIE HENRIETTE DE BRUYN

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1637) for the relief of Marie Henriette de Bruyn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws the alien, Marie Henriette de Bruyn, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of her last entry into the United States, upon payment of head tax and visa fee. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EFROSINI ABAD

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1672) for the relief of Efrosini Abad.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Efrosini Abad, of Istanbul, Turkey, who is the daughter of a citizen of the United States, shall be deemed to be a child under 21 years of age.

With the following committee amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out lines 3 to 6, and insert "That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, pertaining to the unmarried child under 21 years of age of a citizen of the United States, shall be held to be applicable to Efrosini Abad, of Istanbul, Turkey, who is the daughter of a citizen of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARINA GEORGE PAPADOPOULOS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Marina George Papadopoulos.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, the alien, Marina George Papadopoulos, Las Vegas, Nev., shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date she last entered the United States, upon payment of the head tax and visa fee. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. JOHN R. PORTARIA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2511) for the relief of Dr. John R. Portaria.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, Dr. John R. Portaria, of Portsmouth, Va., shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the first available immigration quota for nationals of China (white).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. BILLY J. KNIGHT AND DOROTHEA KNIGHT

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2556) for the relief of Mrs. Billy J. Knight and Dorothea Knight.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Dorothea Knight, the natural-born daughter of Pfc. Billy J. Knight, deceased, shall be deemed to be a United States citizen by birth.

SEC. 2. That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Mrs. Billy J. Knight (formerly Miss Ellinar Pitterich), who would be entitled to nonquota immigration status but for the death of her husband, shall, if otherwise found admissible to the United States, be deemed to be a nonquota immigrant.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARIANNE BRUCHNER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2629) for the relief of Marianne Bruchner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, Marianne Bruchner, the fiancée of Daniel Reule, a United States citizen veteran of World War II, may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months if otherwise admissible under the immigration laws: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Marianne Bruchner is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to the said Daniel Reule. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Marianne Bruchner, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event that the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Marianne Bruchner, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the said Marianne Bruchner as of the date of her entry into the United States upon the payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THOMAS PFEIFFER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2714) for the relief of Thomas Pfeiffer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Thomas Pfeiffer, who is presently residing in Montreal, Canada, and who is to be adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Ely Beaumont, of Burbank, Calif., shall be deemed to be the alien child of said Mr. and Mrs. Ely Beaumont, citizens of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. GIN SHIBASAKI OKAFUJI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7079) for the relief of Mrs. Gin Shibasaki Okafuji.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States persons who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not apply to Mrs. Gin Shibasaki Okafuji, a native of Japan and the wife of Takeo Okafuji, a citizen of the United States and presently serving in Japan as a civilian employee with the United States Army, and that, if otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, she shall be granted admission into the United States as a nonquota immigrant for permanent residence upon application hereafter filed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Army", strike out the remainder of the bill.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KEIKO UCHIDA AND HER MINOR CHILD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7820) for the relief of Keiko Uchida and her minor child.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding any provisions of the immigration laws or other laws relating to entry into the United States, the Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed to admit into the United States for permanent residence Keiko Uchida, who is the Japanese wife of Gene E. Doane, a citizen of the United States, and their minor child, and that, upon application hereinafter filed, she and her child shall be considered to be nonquota immigrants.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Keiko Uchida Doane and her minor child, the wife and child, respectively, of Gene E. Doane, a citizen of the United States and honorably discharged veteran of World War II."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Keiko Uchida Doane and her minor child."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGINA WATANABE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7970) for the relief of Regina Watanabe (Mrs. Regina Anderson).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race shall not hereafter apply to Regina Watanabe Anderson, of Nagoya, Japan, the wife of Leroi C. Anderson, a citizen of the United States, and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and that Regina Watanabe Anderson may be eligible for a visa on a nonquota status as the wife of an American citizen: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Regina Watanabe Anderson is coming to the United States for permanent residence and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That, in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Regina Anderson and her minor child, the wife and child respectively of Leroi C. Anderson, a citizen of the United States and honorably discharged veteran of World War II."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mrs. Regina Anderson and her minor child."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NOAE KAWASHIMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8440) for the relief of Noae Kawashima.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race shall not hereafter apply to Noae Kawashima, the Japanese fiancée of Taiji Hirayama, a citizen of the United States, and that the said Noae Kawashima may be eligible for a nonquota immigration visa if she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that marriage between the above-named parties occurred within 3 months immediately succeeding the enactment date of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YOSHIE NOZAWA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8451) for the relief of Yoshie Nozawa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race, shall not hereafter apply to Yoshie Nozawa, the Japanese fiancée of Le Roy L. Dugan, a citizen of the United States and presently serving in Japan with the United States Army, and that the said Yoshie Nozawa may be eligible for a nonquota immigration visa if she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that marriage between the above-named parties occurred within 3 months immediately succeeding the enactment date of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JANOS TREBER AND MRS. KATALIN TREBER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5110) for the relief of Janos (John) Treber and Mrs. Katalin (Katherine) Treber.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of the immigration and naturalization laws, the aliens Janos (John) Treber and Mrs. Katalin (Katherine) Treber, his wife, who arrived in the United States at New York, N. Y., on May 9, 1949, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted, as of such date, to the United States for permanent residence. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to make appropriate deduction of two members from the quota for Hungary.

With the following committee amendment:

After "residence" in line 8, insert "upon the payment of the required visa fee and head taxes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. VERA RAUPE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5782) for the relief of Mrs. Vera Raupe.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, Mrs. Vera Raupe (formerly Vera Kohoutek), of Dallas, Tex., who entered the United States at New York, N. Y., on February 6, 1948, as a temporary visitor shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted, as of such date, to the United States for permanent residence. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the quota for Czechoslovakia for the first year such quota is available.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "residence", insert "upon the payment of the required visa fee and head tax."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DR. GEORGE ALEXANDROS CHRONAKIS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6287) for the relief of Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is authorized and directed to discontinue any deportation proceedings and to cancel any outstanding order and warrant of deportation, warrant of arrest and bond, which may have been issued in the case of Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis, of Knoxville, Tenn. From and after the date of enactment of this act, the said Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and order have issued.

SEC. 2. In the administration of the immigration laws, the said Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis shall be considered as having been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of his last entry into the United States, upon payment of the required head tax and visa fee.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the first available quota for nationals of Greece.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARIA CRISTINA D'ANGELO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7204) for the relief of Maria Cristina D'Angelo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, the alien Maria Cristina D'Angelo, Biccari, Italy, legally adopted minor daughter of Antonio Mucci and Mrs. Maria P. Mucci, Newark, N. J., both United States citizens, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born daughter of the said Antonio Mucci and the said Mrs. Maria P. Mucci.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after "to be the", insert "alien."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KAZUKO KAMADA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7228) for the relief of Kazuko Kamada.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, or any of the other provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens ineligible to citizenship, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to permit the entry into the United States for permanent residence of Kazuko Kamada, the Japanese fiancée of Ralph S. Merithew, a citizen of the United States and a sergeant in the service of the Department of the Air Force: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Kazuko Kamada is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to Ralph S. Merithew and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Kazuko Kamada, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156).

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after entry of said Kazuko Kamada, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Kazuko Kamada as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required visa fees and head taxes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERESA GENTILE AND GALLIANO GENTILE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7414) for the relief of Teresa Gentile and Galliano Gentile.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of the immigration and naturalization laws, the aliens Teresa Gentile and Galliano Gentile, of Lacedonia, Province of Avellino, Italy, legally adopted minor children of Galliano Gentile and Mrs. Nunzia Gentile, United States citizens residing in Newark, N. J., shall be held and considered to be the natural-born children of the said Galliano Gentile and the said Mrs. Nunzia Gentile.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after "to be the", insert "alien."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ASAKO TSUCHIDA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8183) for the relief of Asako Tsuchida.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race shall not hereafter apply to Asako Tsuchida, Tokyo, Japan, the Japanese fiancée of James Yoshito Arima, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and that Asako Tsuchida may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Asako Tsuchida is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to said James Yoshito Arima, and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of Asako Tsuchida, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisisons of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after entry of said Asako Tsuchida, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Asako Tsuchida as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required fees and head taxes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TOSHIKO MURAI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8361) for the relief of Toshiko Murai.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race shall not hereafter apply to Toshiko Murai, Nakano-Ku, Tokyo, Japan, the Japanese fiancée of John F. Finnegan, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and the said Toshiko Murai may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Toshiko Murai is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to said John F. Finnegan, and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Toshiko Murai, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after entry of said Toshiko Murai, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Toshiko Murai as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required fees and head taxes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. JOSEPH C. GRANT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8381) for the relief of Mrs. Joseph C. Grant.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions, of the eleventh category of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended (U. S. C., 1946 ed., title 8, sec. 136 (e)), shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Joseph C. Grant (nee Hedwig S. Schneider) the wife of a citizen of the United States on active duty with the United States Navy, insofar as concerns any conviction or admission of the commission of a crime by her of which the Department of Justice and the Department of State have knowledge on the date of enactment hereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HATSUKO TORIKAI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8500) for the relief of Hatsuko Torikai.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race shall not hereafter apply to Hatsuko Torikai, the Japanese fiancée of Frank S. Kino, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and that Hatsuko Torikai may be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Hatsuko Torikai is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to said Grank S. Kino, and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Hatsuko Torikai, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-named parties shall occur within 3 months after entry of said Hatsuko Torikai, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of said Hatsuko Torikai as of the date of her entry into the United States, upon the payment by her of the required visa fees and head taxes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YASUKO HIGUCHI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8581) for the relief of Yasuko Higuchi.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Yasuko Higuchi, the wife of Norman Earl Thomson, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II.

With the following committee amendment:

On line 7, after the name "Higuchi", insert the name "Thomson."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Yasuko Higuchi Thomson."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HISAKO SHIMIZU

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8583) for the relief of Hisako Shimizu.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race, shall not hereafter apply to Hisako Shimizu, the Japanese fiancée of Tomio Tanaka, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and that the said Hisako Shimizu may be eligible for a nonquota immigration visa if she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws: Provided, That the administrative authorities find the marriage between the above-named parties occurred within 3 months immediately succeeding the enactment date of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YURIKO AOYAMA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8600) for the relief of Yuriko Aoyama.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissible because of race, shall not hereafter apply to Yuriko Aoyama, the Japanese fiancée of Thomas A. Twitchell, a citizen of the United States and presently serving with the Armed Forces of the United States in Japan, and that the said Yuriko Aoyama may be eligible for a nonquota immigration visa if she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that marriage between the above-named parties occurred within 3 months immediately succeeding the enactment date of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TOSHIKO KIKYO AND FRANCIS KIKYO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8655) for the relief of Toshiko Kikyo and Francis Kikyo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States persons who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not apply to Toshiko Kikyo and Francis Kikyo, natives of Japan, and that, if otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, they shall be granted admission into the United States as nonquota immigrants for permanent residence upon application hereafter filed.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the provisions of the immigration laws relating to the exclusion of aliens inadmissable because of race shall not hereafter apply to Toshiko Kikyo, the Japanese fiancée of Barre E. Heim, a citizen of the United States and an honorably discharged veteran of World War II, and her son, Francis Kikyo, and that the said Toshiko Kikyo and her above-named son may be eligible for visas as nonimmigrant temporary visitors for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Toshiko Kikyo is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to said Barre E. Heim, and that they are found otherwise admissable under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named parties does not occur within 3 months after the entry of said Toshiko Kikyo and her son, they shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, secs. 155 and 156). In the event the marriage between the above-mentioned parties shall occur within 3 months after the entry of Toshiko Kikyo and her son, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of them as of the date of the payment by them of the required visa fees and head taxes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JUN HIN LUM

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8722) for the relief of Jun Hin Lum.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the provisions of sections 4 (a) and 9 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, pertaining to unmarried children under 21 years of age of a citizen of the United States, shall be held to be applicable to Jun Hin Lum, minor child of Lum Tim, a citizen of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAND PATENT OF THOMAS STEPHENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4065) to provide for the relinquishment of mineral reservations in the land patent of Thomas Stephens.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, upon surrender of patent numbered 1122575 (covering the following: Lot 4 of section 5, lots 6 and 9 of section 6, and lot 1 of section 7, in township 15 south, of range 13 east of the Louisiana meridian, in Louisiana, containing fifty-three and twenty-eight one-hundredths acres) by the heirs or assigns of the patentee, Thomas Stephens, to reissue to the heirs or assigns of the said Thomas Stephens a patent to such land without reservation to the United States of coal and other minerals, or of any right to prospect for, mine, or remove any such coal or other minerals.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. MASA IYOKI

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7071) for the relief of Mrs. Masa Iyoki.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 213 (c)), which excludes from admission to the United States persons who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Masa Iyoki, a former resident of the United States and mother of an American citizen, and that the said Mrs. Masa Iyoki may be permitted to enter the United States as a nonquota immigrant for permanent residence.

With the following committee amendment:

On line 9, after the words "American citizen", change the comma to a period and strike out the balance of the bill.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. DONALD RAFTER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7733) for the relief of Mrs. Donald Rafter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, the provisions of section 13 (c) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, which exclude from admission to the United States aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, shall not hereafter apply to Mrs. Donald Rafter, the wife of Corporal Donald Rafter (R. A. 32068411 6012—A. S. U. Military Police Detachment, Camp Stoneman, Calif.), a citizen of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN YEE HORN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7815) for the relief of John Yee Horn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purposes of section 201 (g) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (8 U. S. C. 601 (g)), Yee Kang Horn, a natural-born citizen of the United States, shall be held and considered to have had 10 years' residence in the United States prior to the birth of his minor son, John Yee Horn, at least 5 years of such residence being after the said Yee Kang Horn attained the age of 16 years, insofar as such section 201 (g) is applicable with respect to the nationality and citizenship status at birth of the said John Yee Horn.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert "That, in the administration of the immigration laws, section 4 (a) and section 9 of the Immigration Act of May 26, 1924, shall be held applicable to John Yee Horn, the minor unmarried child of Yee Kang Horn, a citizen of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YEE BALCHE YEE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8289) for the relief of Yee Balche Yee.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, pertaining to unmarried children under 21 years of age of a citizen of the United States, shall be held to be applicable to the alien Yee Balche Yee, born November 23, 1949, minor child of Yee Kai Teung, a citizen of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANSON HAROLD PEASE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2510) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Anson Harold Pease, a Crow allottee, a patent in fee to certain lands.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, upon application in writing, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to Anson Harold Pease, Crow allottee No. 1322, a patent in fee to the following-described lands in the State of Montana: Lot 8, south half northeast quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, southeast quarter of section 11; lots 1, 3, northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter of section 14, lot 3, southeast quarter southeast quarter of section 15, township 1 south, range 27 east, principal meridian, Montana, containing six hundred forty-nine and fifty-five one-hundredths acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. (a) The lands herein described shall not be sold after the date of enactment of this act to any purchaser, other than the Crow Tribe or a member thereof, unless (1) at least 60 days prior to such sale the superintendent of the Crow Agency shall have been served with notice of the terms thereof and a copy of such notice, together with a description of the lands, shall have been posted by the superintendent in a conspicuous public place at such agency and have remained posted for a period of 60 days, and (2) prior to the expiration of such 60 days no bona fide offer in writing to purchase such land upon the terms specified in such notice, or upon terms more favorable to the owner, shall have been made by the Crow Tribe or any member thereof and a copy thereof served upon the superintendent of the Crow Agency.

(b) A certificate of the superintendent of the Crow Agency stating that notice of the proposed sale was served upon him and was posted by him for a period of 60 days in accordance with the provisions of clause (1) of subsection (a) and that no offer was received in accordance with clause (2) of such subsection, when filed and recorded in the office of the county clerk and recorder of the county in which such lands are situated shall be conclusive evidence of compliance with this section. The superintendent shall furnish the certificate to the purchaser for filing and recording.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PINE RIDGE RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2551), to authorize the sale of certain allotted land on the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the trust allotment No. 4533 of Julia Poor Bear Two Crow, Pine Ridge allottee, described as the northeast quarter of section 32, township 37 north, range 36 west, sixth principal meridian, South Dakota, containing 160 acres, conveyance to be made by deed or the issuance of a patent in fee to the purchaser and to disburse the proceeds of such sale to Julia Poor Bear Two Crow for her benefit.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF LAND ON PINE RIDGE RESERVATION, S. DAK.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2552) to authorize the sale of certain allotted land on the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the trust allotment No. 4534 of Bettie Morrison, now Betty Little White Man, Pine Ridge allottee, described as the southeast quarter of section 32, township 37 north, range 36 west, sixth principal meridian, South Dakota, containing 160 acres, conveyance to be made by deed or the issuance of a patent in fee to the purchaser and to disburse the proceeds of such sale to Betty Little White Man for her benefit.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILBUR J. SCOTT

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3029) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Wilbur J. Scott.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Wilbur J. Scott for the following-described lands in the State of Montana: The northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 34, township 2 south, range 28 east; lot 4 of section 18, township 4 south, range 33 east, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 32 east, Montana principal meridian, and containing approximately three hundred seventeen and eighty-six one-hundredths acres.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LAND ON WINNEBAGO RESERVATION, NEBR.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3128) to authorize the sale of certain allotted inherited land on the Winnebago Reservation, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell a portion of the trust allotment numbered 535 inherited by John D. Decora, Winnebago Indian, described as the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 12, township 26 north, range 7 east, sixth principal meridian, Nebraska, containing 40 acres, conveyance to be made by deed or the issuance of a patent in fee to the purchaser and to disburse the proceeds of such sale to John D. Decora for his benefit.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LAND ON THE WINNEBAGO RESERVATION, NEBR.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3130) to authorize the sale of certain allotted inherited land on the Winnebago Reservation, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the trust allotment No. 144 of Charles Smith, deceased Winnebago allottee, described as the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 3, township 25 north, range 6 east, sixth principal meridian, Nebraska, containing 40 acres, conveyance to be made by deed or the issuance of a patent in fee to the purchaser and to disburse the proceeds of such sale to the heirs, Lot Smith and Helen Seymour Smith, for their benefit.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LESLIE FULLARD-LEO AND ELLEN FULLARD-LEO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3406) for the relief of Leslie Fullard-Leo and Ellen Fullard-Leo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Leslie Fullard-Leo and Ellen Fullard-Leo, husband and wife, Honolulu, T. H., owners in fee simple of Palmyra Island as confirmed by a decision of the United States Supreme Court dated May 12, 1947 (91 Law Edition Advance Opinions, No. 14, p. 1127), the sum of $312,494.42, in full settlement of their claims against the United States Government on account of the use, occupation, and damages sustained by reason thereof, of Palmyra Island: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any one agent or agency, or by any one attorney or firm of attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "Leslie Fullard-Leo and Ellen Fullard-Leo, husband and wife," and insert "Ellen Fullard-Leo, widow of Leslie Fullard-Leo."

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, strike out "(91 Law Edition Advance Opinion, No. 14, p. 1127)," and insert "(331 U. S. 256)."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$312,494.42" and insert "$100,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ellen Fullard-Leo."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

XYLDA L. DRIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4836) for the relief of Xylda L. Driver.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not heretofore appropriated, to Xylda L. Driver, of Tunica, Miss., the sum of $111.24, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for social-security payment on account of the death of her son, William Richard Driver, who died on August 5, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATUXENT DEVELOPMENT CO., INC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6363), conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc., of Southern Pines, N. C., against the United States arising out of the use and occupancy between August 17, 1943, and August 31, 1943, inclusive, of the Pine Needles Hotel property, at Southern Pines, N. C., by the Army Air Forces Technical Training Command under contract No. W202 eng-16862, dated March 3, 1942. In the determination of such claims the company shall, notwithstanding any provision of any contract, release, or other agreement, be entitled to receive fair and just compensation for losses incurred by the company, and damage done to such property, by reason of its use and occupancy by the United States between August 17, 1943, and August 31, 1943, inclusive, and for any property misappropriated or erroneously removed from the company's premises at the time of vacating by the United States.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any statute of limitations or lapse of time, suit upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. In any such suit brought pursuant to this act proceedings shall be had and the liability, if any, of the United States shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of law applicable in the case of tort claims against the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 19, after the words "United States", add a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That nothing in this act does or shall constitute an admission of liability on the part of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ED HOWARD RUSSELL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6709) for the relief of Ed Howard Russell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ed Howard Russell, of Opelousas, St. Landry Parish, La., the sum of $9,180, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for compensation for personal injuries sustained, and reimbursement of expenses incurred as the result of an accident involving an Army vehicle on January 18, 1944, on United States Highway 190 in Baton Rouge, La.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "for", strike out "compensation for personal injuries sustained, and reimbursement of expenses incurred" and insert in lieu thereof "personal injuries and loss of earnings sustained and medical, hospital, and incidental expenses incurred."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LT. COL. F. A. FERGUSON

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6850) for the relief of Lt. Col. F. A. Ferguson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lt. Col. F. A. Ferguson, Corps of Engineers, who was responsible for the excess or erroneous payments under contract numbered W-22-052-eng-1015 for rental and recapture of two Buick sedans of amounts which in the aggregate, amount to an excess of $1,814.68 above the statutory limitation of $1,300 each on the purchase price of passenger-carrying vehicles, less the cost of transportation of $176.08, resulting in a net overpayment of $1,638.60, and he is hereby relieved of financial liability therefor and the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit in the settlement of his accounts as disbursing officer, Vicksburg District, Corps of Engineers, Vicksburg, Miss., in such amounts not exceeding the sum stated herein, which have been or hereafter may be disallowed, as may be necessary to relieve such dibursing officer of financial liability therefor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LANDS IN ALASKA TO THE THIS-SIDE-OF-HEAVEN CHILDREN'S HOME

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6221) to authorize the sale of certain public lands in Alaska to the This-Side-of-Heaven Children's Home for use as a children's home.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the This-Side-of-Heaven Children's Home, of Homer, Alaska, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Alaska, is hereby authorized for a period of 1 year from and after the effective date of this act to apply for the purchase of, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the corporation for use as a children's home, the following-described public lands situated in Alaska:

Lot 1 of section 3 and lots 1 and 3 of section 4, northwest quarter northeast quarter of section 4, township 6 south, range 12 west, Seward meridian, embracing one hundred four and seventy-seven one-hundredths acres; and south half southeast quarter of section 33, lots 3 and 4 of section 34, township 5 south, range 12 west, Seward meridian, embracing one hundred and thirty-two acres.

SEC. 2. That the conveyance shall be made upon the payment by the said corporation for the land at its reasonable appraised price of not less than $1.25 per acre, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the conveyance hereby authorized shall not include any land covered by a valid existing right initiated under the public-land laws: Provided further, That the coal and other mineral deposits in the land shall be reserved to the United States, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under applicable laws and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That such conveyance shall contain the further provision that if the This-Side-of-Heaven Children's Home shall at any time cease to use the property so conveyed for a children's home title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike out lines 19 to 23, inclusive.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPHINE STEVENS GOERING

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6964) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Josephine Stevens Goering.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to Josephine Stevens Goering a patent in fee to the following-described lands, known as allotment 1264 on the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.: the south half of the south half of the north half and the south half of section 29, the southwest quarter of section 28, and the north half of the north half of the northwest quarter of section 32, township 9 south, range 33 east, Montana principal meridian, containing 600 acres.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LAND ON THE CHENA RIVER TO THE TANANA VALLEY SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION, FAIRBANKS, ALASKA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7753) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land on the Chena River to the Tanana Valley Sportsmen's Association, of Fairbanks, Alaska.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the filing of an application within 1 year from the date of this act and the payment of the purchase price by the Tanana Valley Sportsmen's Association, of Fairbanks, Alaska, a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Alaska, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to sell and convey to the said corporation a tract of land described as the north half lot 10, section 7, township 1 south, range 1 west, Fairbanks meridian, Alaska, containing approximately twenty-two and twelve one-hundredths acres: Provided, That the purchase price for the land shall be the reasonable value thereof without improvements, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, but not less than $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 2. The patent issued under this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of the mineral deposits in the land, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under applicable laws and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9: Strike all after the word "as" through the word "acres" on page 2, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "that portion of lot 10, section 7, township 1 south, range 1 west, Fairbanks meridian, Alaska, included in the north half southwest quarter southeast quarter, and the south half northwest quarter southeast quarter of section 7, containing twenty-four and twenty-five one-hundredths acres."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2397) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands in the State of Minnesota to Signa M. Lodoen and Nels R. Lodoen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to Signa M. Lodoen and Nels R. Lodoen, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following-described tract of land in Becker County, Minn., which was mistakably included in a conveyance to the United States executed on January 12, 1938: Eighty-six one-hundredths acre in government lot 3 located in the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25, township 142 north, range 39 west of the fifth principal meridian in Becker County, Minn., and forty-eight one-hundredths acre in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 26, township and range aforesaid, described as follows:

Beginning at an iron pipe at a point which bears south twenty-six minutes east two and five-tenths chains from the quarter corner common to said sections 25 and 26; thence running north seventy-six degrees thirty-four minutes east three hundred and nine feet; thence north thirteen degrees twenty-eight minutes west ninety-four and two-tenths feet to a point on the north line of said northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25; thence south eighty-nine degrees forty-three minutes west two hundred and eighty-one feet to the northwest corner of said northwest one-quarter southwest one-quarter; thence continuing south eighty-nine degrees fifty-two minutes west one hundred and twenty-three feet along the north line of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of afore-mentioned section 26; thence running south four degrees nineteen minutes west one hundred eighty-two and five-tenths feet; thence north eighty-one degrees thirty-four minutes east one hundred forty and three-tenths feet to the point of beginning and there terminating, together with the right of ingress and egress to the above-described premises over and across a strip of land one rod in width and whose center line is located as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point on the westerly line of the above-described tract at a point forty-four and four-tenths feet from the northwest corner thereof, thence running north eighty-two degrees eleven minutes west two hundred ninety-one and five-tenths feet to intersect the north line of the afore-mentioned northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 26: Provided, That in said quitclaim deed it shall be expressed that there is reserved to the United States from the lands so quitclaimed any right-of-way thereon necessary for the management of adjoining property owned by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OIL AND GAS LEASE IN PARK COUNTY, WYO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7916) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to execute an oil and gas lease on a certain tract of land in Park County, Wyo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, and directed to issue an oil and gas lease, as herein provided, covering lot 1 and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 23, township 58 north, range 100 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming, comprising fifty-nine and thirty-nine one-hundredths acres, more or less. The lease shall be issued to the operator who has been in continuous possession of the land described since prior to February 25, 1920, under an oil and gas lease issued by all the persons who located the land as an oil placer-mining claim on October 15, 1915, and shall be held by said operator for itself and the said locators and their successors, as their interests may appear.

SEC. 2. The lease shall be dated May 1, 1946, shall be in the form provided by section 17 of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended by the act of August 8, 1946 (60 Stat. 951 and 43 CFR, 1946, Supp., 192.54), and shall provide for the payment of royalty at the rates regularly prescribed for competitive leases issued under section 17 of said act, as amended, in amount or value of oil and gas removed or sold from nonunitized horizons or zones or removed or sold from or allocated to the lease under the provisions of the Elk Basin Unit Agreement, approved by the Secretary of the Interior on May 29, 1946.

SEC. 3. The lease shall not be issued unless and until, within 6 months from the effective date of this act—

(1) an application for the lease is filed by the operator to whom the lease is to be issued;

(2) the applicant pays to the United States as royalty an amount at the rates provided in the lease to be issued on all oil and gas produced and saved prior to May 1, 1946, from the land to be leased;

(3) the applicant, together with all persons or their successors in interest having a contract or lease with the applicant under which they claim or hold an interest in lots 1 and 2 and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 23, township 58 north, range 100 west, sixth principal meridian, shall relinquish and quitclaim to the United States all their interests and claims of whatever character in the land described, and shall agree that the interests to be held by them or inuring to their benefit under the lease authorized by this act shall be held by them in full satisfaction for every interest or claim which they may have or assert with respect to the land described;

(4) the lease to be issued under this act shall be fully committed to the Elk Basin Unit Agreement, approved on May 29, 1946, such commitment to be effective as of May 1, 1946; and

(5) the applicant agrees and binds itself to reimburse the unit operator, without interest, for the share of investment costs and operating expenses incurred from and after May 1, 1946, and allocated under the unit agreement to the land to be leased.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN ALIEN SHEEPHERDERS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1165) to provide relief for the sheep-raising industry by making special quota immigration visas available to certain alien sheepherders.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for a period of 1 year after the effective date of this act, in any case in which the Attorney General, under the authority of the fourth proviso to section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136), grants permission for the importation of a skilled sheepherder into the United States and the investigation of the application for such importation discloses that—

(1) the employment offered such skilled sheepherder is permanent, and

(2) no immigration quota number of the country of which such alien sheepherder is a national is then available, a special immigration visa may be issued to such alien sheepherder as provided in this act: Provided, That such alien sheepherder is otherwise admissible into the United States for permanent residence.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General shall certify to the Secretary of State the name and address of every skilled sheepherder for which an application for importation under the fourth proviso to section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 has been approved. If a quota number is not then available for such alien sheepherder, the proper consular officer may issue a special quota immigration visa to such alien sheepherder. Upon the issuance of such visa the proper quota-control officer shall deduct one number from the appropriate quota for the first year that such quota is available: Provided, That not more than 50 percent of any quota shall be deducted under the provisions of this act in any given fiscal year.

SEC. 3. (a) There shall not be issued more than 250 special quota immigration visas under this act.

(b) Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as increasing the immigration quota of any country or of altering the requirements for admission of aliens into the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE and Mr. VELDE asked and were given permission to extend their remarks, each in three instances, and include extraneous matters.

Mr. DONDERO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper item.

Mr. HILL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. BLACKNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address by the Honorable Edward M. Sharpe.

Mr. FUGATE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. GOSSETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a short resolution.

Mr. NORRELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article from the Tax Review published in May 1950, by the Tax Foundation of New York.

Mr. RODINO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. WILSON of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article.

Mr. CROOK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article on the subject The Age That Disturbs the Laborer's Mind.

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two separate instances, in one to include a brief press release on Puerto Rican labor and in the other brief newspaper statements.

Mr. HARVEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include the testimony he gave this morning before panel B of the Department of Commerce in opposition to the further reduction of tariffs on lead and lead products.

Mr. GOODWIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. CLEVENGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. HERTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article from the New York Daily News of June 15.

Mr. KLEIN (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks in three separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. MCCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a splendid address recently made by Father Harold J. Martin, at Massena, N. Y.

Mr. FURCOLO (at the request of Mr. MCCORMACK) was given permission to extend his remarks.

BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement follow:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2269)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 624), is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 22. (a) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation undertaken under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law Numbered 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken, he shall so advise the President, and, if the President agrees that there is reason for such belief, the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investigation shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, and shall be conducted subject to such regulations as the President shall specify.

" '(b) If, on the basis of such investigation and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees not in excess of 50 per centum ad valorem or such quantitative limitations on any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation referred to in subsection (a) of this section, or reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any such agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken: Provided, That no proclamation under this section shall impose any limitation on the total quantity of any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption which reduces such permissible total quantity to proportionately less than 50 per centum of the total quantity of such article or articles which was entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during a representative period as determined by the President: And provided further, That in designating any article or articles, the President may describe them by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such other bases as he shall determine.

"'(c) The fees and limitations imposed by the President by proclamation under this section and any revocation, suspension, or modification thereof, shall become effective on such date as shall be therein specified, and such fees shall be treated for administrative purposes and for the purposes of section 32 of Public Law Numbered 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, as duties imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, but such fees shall not be considered as duties for the purpose of granting any preferential concession under any international obligation of the United States.

"'(d) After investigation, report, finding, and declaration in the manner provided in the case of a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, any proclamation or provision of such proclamation may be suspended or terminated by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that the circumstances requiring the proclamation or provision thereof no longer exist or may be modified by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that changed circumstances require such modification to carry out the purposes of this section.

"'(e) Any decision of the President as to facts under this section shall be final.

"'(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party; but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable. Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the general agreement on tariffs and trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
BROOKS HAYS,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
RALPH A. GAMBLE,
HENRY O. TALLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
SCOTT W. LUCAS,
CLYDE R. HOEY,
SPESSARD L. HOLLAND,
GEORGE D. AIKEN,
EDWARD J. THYE,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The Managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment proposed a new section 3 to the House bill which would amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act in several respects. The committee of conference recommended that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Senate amendment made no change in the House bill with respect to increasing the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $4,750,000,000 to $6,750,000,000. The Senate amendment proposed several changes to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. There was no similar provision in the House bill. The conference amendment would amend section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act in two respects, and the differences between the existing provisions of such section 22 and the conference amendment are indicated below.

The first change relates to subsection (a) of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which provides that whenever the President has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation undertaken under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural commodity or product thereof, with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken, the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under section 22 to determine such facts. Such investigations shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, and shall be conducted subject to such regulations as the President shall specify.

In lieu of the existing provisions of subsection (a) of section 22 which provide that the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made after he has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or practically certain to be imported which will affect the above mentioned programs, the conference amendment places upon the Secretary of Agriculture the responsibility of notifying the President whenever the Secretary of Agriculture believes or has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or practically certain to be imported into the country so as to render, or tend to render, ineffective or materially interfere with the above mentioned programs. The conference amendment further provides that if the President agrees that there is reason for such belief on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission which under existing law is authorized to make such investigation.

The second change relates to subsection (f) of section 22 which now provides that no proclamation under section 22 shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party. In lieu of this provision the conference amendment would provide that no proclamation under section 22 shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party; but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of such section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable. Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the general agreement on tariffs and trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection. The effect of the conference amendment with respect to such subsection (f) is to make sure that future international agreements or amendments to existing international agreements give effect to the provisions of section 22 within the framework of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
BROOKS HAYS,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
RALPH A. GAMBLE,
HENRY O. TALLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is practically the bill that passed the House. There is one amendment to section 22 which merely provides that the tariff policies may be carried out notwithstanding any future international agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I yield at this time 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, it is natural, I presume, that the members of the House Committee on Agriculture should be somewhat concerned about this conference report. The House passed a bill increasing the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $2,000,000,000 and that was substantially all the bill contained.

In the Senate there was added what is called the Magnuson amendment, which deals with section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and that was the only question in conference. The matter in the conference report was not dealt with at all in the House bill.

This is a matter of very deep interest to every member of the House Committee on Agriculture. Section 22 seeks to give some protection to our farm programs by providing that if imports coming into this country impair or interfere with those programs or increase the cost of the price-support program, limitations on imports can be made by the President.

The language agreed upon in conference is a complete rewriting of section 22 as contained in the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I realize that there is not much that can be done under the circumstances, except I was requested by members of the committee to propound one question of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

In what is commonly referred to as GATT, with which the chairman, I know, is familiar, that is, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, it is expressly provided that the provisions of law as they existed on November 15, 1947, would be respected; that is, as section 22 existed, and that all agreements would respect section 22 as it then existed. I should like to ask the distinguished Chairman this one question. This provision now contained in subsection (f) of the rewrite of section 22, reads as follows:

(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party; but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable. Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection.

Is it the intention of the conferees that this provision is not intended to limit the authority of Congress to limit the use of section 22 regulations to any greater extent than existed at the time the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade was entered into?

Mr. SPENCE. It only refers to future agreements, of course. We could not enter into any agreements in contravention of any treaty or Executive order. The Constitution of the United States says that treaties are the supreme law of the land, and I do not think anybody would want the Government to enter into an agreement in contravention of a treaty, because the national honor and good faith would be at stake. It provides, however, that no agreement shall be made in the future which would interfere with the operation of this section. We do not say "existing law." It merely says in the future they shall not enter into contracts that will interfere with the carrying out of this policy. It has no retroactive effect and it has no effect on existing treaties.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is the intent of the conferees that future international treaties and agreements shall not be such as to prevent the operation of section 22?

Mr. SPENCE. That is true. They shall not enter into those agreements. Of course, if they enter into an agreement, whatever that agreement is, national honor and good faith compels us to uphold it, but in the future we shall not enter into any agreement that will interfere with the policy of this section.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. Does not this section, as changed in this conference report, change the text of old section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. PACE. It changes the text somewhat, but under the assurance given by the chairman of the House conferees I shall not be disturbed; that it is the intention of the conferees that they shall not enter into any trade agreement hereafter that will violate the intention and the provisions of section 22 as rewritten in this conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from California because the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Washington are both very much concerned with this question.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Indeed we are, and I cannot see why the gentleman from Georgia is so pleased with the assurance given by the chairman.

Mr. PACE. Because he said that it provides that no future treaties or international agreements shall be entered into which violate the terms of section 22 as redrafted in this report; nor will the adoption of this conference report have any retroactive effect in changing the terms of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, which recognized the provisions of section 22 as it existed at that time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCUDDER].

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is very vital to the specialty crops particularly those raised in California. I personally feel that we have gone a long way afield in our neglect to protect American agriculture and American laboring men by the repeal of the peril point in our tariff agreements. I believe this is just another step toward giving further control to the Administration in handling the situation as they see fit. I believe Congress should take some action to see that we protect American labor and American agriculture.

I know you are all very well apprised of the fact that labor organizations throughout this country are now deeply concerned with our repeal last year of the peril point and the escape clause in our trade agreements. As I understand, we shipped into this country 2 years ago about $1,600,000,000 worth of competitive agricultural crops. This country is now supporting the agricultural economy of the world. I believe it is time that we should respond to the demands of the people who are interested in protecting our economy and not give and give. We should try to protect our own American agriculture.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCUDDER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment as it now stands applies only to future agreements and will not be of very much protection, because we have agreements already with so many countries, where the damage is now being done. The Magnuson amendment would have been much better. The gentleman from Kentucky talks about honor, and that the country has to stand by these treaties. They are not treaties. They were not ratified by the Senate. They are agreements only. Future Congresses should not be bound. We should have a perfect right now to legislate on this for the interests of the American agricultural producers.

Mr. SCUDDER. The gentleman is right. We should adhere to the Magnuson amendment.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCUDDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. If these are treaties, is it not a fact that escape clauses were written into the reciprocal-trade treaties which would give the President the power to renegotiate? Is not that a fact?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes, under certain conditions.

What does the Magnuson amendment do? The Magnuson amendment places the responsibility in the Secretary of Agriculture. He not only makes the complaint, he tries the case and he renders the verdict. You talk about the administration wanting more power. Where could the administration have more power than that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The Secretary of Agriculture does not want the power arbitrarily to make the complaint, try the case, render the verdict, and pronounce the judgment. He sees the impropriety of it. So under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture has the authority to express his opinion, after hearing evidence, as to what action should be taken. He refers it to the President. The President puts in operation a bipartisan agency of the Government, the Federal Tariff Commission.

You talk about the administration grasping for power. If the administration wanted power, a good way to obtain that power would be to give this whole authority to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture does not want it and the President does not want him to have it.

One of the perils of this bill, if you had put the Magnuson amendment on it, is that I am sure it would have been vetoed.

Wherein is there any peril to the agricultural interests of the country when you refer these tariff matters to a bipartisan board? By doing that you take them out of politics.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What difference is it whether the power is vested in the Secretary of Agriculture or in the President—the administration still has the power, does it not?

Mr. SPENCE. The administration has no power to control this bipartisan Commission and justly so.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. It is a discretionary power.

Mr. SPENCE. It is almost a judicial question and they arrive at a conclusion after having a hearing. The proper organization to do this is the agency of Government which has had the experience and the agency of Government which is created for this very purpose; that is the Tariff Commission.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. Is it a statement of fact that the State Department had a great deal to do with the writing of section 22 as it now stands in the bill, and if that is the fact, why should not the Secretary of Agriculture have something to say about it?

Mr. SPENCE. The Secretary of Agriculture did not want it. The Secretary of Agriculture saw the impropriety of it. A man cannot be a prosecutor and judge at the same time. The Department of State agreed with the Department of Agriculture that the Department of Agriculture ought not to have this power and that it ought to be administered as it has been. But they give the power to the Secretary after a hearing to make the recommendation to the President. The Secretary of Agriculture could not set in motion the Federal Tariff Commission. The President had to set that in motion. So, in conformity with orderly procedure the Secretary of Agriculture makes the complaint to the President, and the President refers it to the Tariff Commission for its judgment. What could be more orderly procedure than that?

What kind of chaotic procedure would it be to give all of this power to the Secretary of Agriculture, to make a complaint, to hear the evidence and then to render a verdict.

Mr. HOLMES. It is true, is it not, that the State Department did have a great deal to do with the drafting of the language here?

Mr. SPENCE. I think the State Department and the Department of Agriculture got together on this. There was no contrariety of opinion. They agreed on it. The State Department did not think the Department of Agriculture ought to have this power, and the Department of Agriculture did not want it. The President, I know, did not want them to have it, because the President is charged with the duty of seeing that there is orderly procedures of government. This, as far as I know, met with the approval of all of the departments of Government. I do not see why it would not meet with the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HOLMES. It is practically the reverse of the Magnuson-Morse amendment, is it not?

Mr. SPENCE. Why worry about that amendment? It was never in our bill. We brought the bill back here substantially as it was passed by the House.

The Magnuson-Morse amendment never was in the House bill. It was in the Senate bill. Nobody was very insistent that it stay in the Senate bill after conference.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. The Magnuson-Morse amendment, of course, gave priority of responsibility to the Secretary of Agriculture with regard to the imports of agricultural commodities where we might have a surplus already in this country. We are passing on a bill today to add $2,000,000,000 additional to buy up surplus commodities in this country. Now, the Magnuson-Morse amendment gave a priority of responsibility to the one man in the United States, who, whether we like it or not, we have to look to, who ought to have the responsibility.

Does not the action of your committee make the Department of State more dominant than the one man in the United States who should have a clear responsibility here? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. SPENCE. My answer to that is a categorical no. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority and the duty to make a complaint. He makes a complaint to the President, the only person in authority that he could make a complaint to, and he sets in motion the Tariff Commission.

Mr. HORAN. I would like the gentleman to explain the language of the reconstructed paragraph (f) as the committee has recomposed it, because I have read it at least 20 times and I cannot understand it. I doubt very much if anyone on the floor understands it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. As I understand it, the present law, section 22, which we did not consider here, was amended in the Senate by what is known as the Magnuson amendment. These programs were initiated heretofore by the President. Under this conference report, under the agreement amongst the conferees, the Department of Agriculture initiates the program, and he makes recommendation to the President of the United States. The President then refers this report to the Tariff Commission. I think the Department of Agriculture and the Tariff Commission certainly ought to be consulted. That is the status of this section now.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. With reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] whether or not reference to the Tariff Commission is mandatory on the President, or if it means if the President agrees with the Secretary of Agriculture that there is reason for such belief, then he refers it?

Mr. SPENCE. I do not think we pass acts that are mandatory on the President. He has the right to exercise his judgment. I think in every instance the President would refer it to the Tariff Commission if he found it was based upon fact.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I wonder if the conference committee realized that they were doing two things. I have the same difficulty which other gentlemen have in understanding what the words mean in the amendment, but apparently they mean that the provision in the original section 22, which agricultural groups did not like because of its effect upon marketing agreements, has now been ratified and confirmed by the new amendment to the bill that is now before us. Did the conference committee in doing that realize that they were in effect setting aside the whole theory of marketing agreements as we have worked upon it in the United States?

Mr. SPENCE. No, we did not.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I hope the gentleman realizes it now.

Mr. SPENCE. The gentleman is referring to an amendment that was proposed in the Senate. It was not considered in the Senate. We had ample opportunity to consider the bill in the House. It was passed by an overwhelming vote in the House. That amendment was not considered in the House. The managers on the part of the Senate were not insistent upon it in conference. Do you expect the managers on the part of the House would press for an opportunity to adopt an amendment which the Senate conferees did not insist upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, with this new section 22 in the bill, placed there by the conference report, the President must veto this bill.

It is an inescapable conclusion that the United States Congress will be returning to agricultural isolationism in this country because this provision takes completely out of the reciprocal trade program everything having to do with agriculture, and any commodity or any item processed from such an agricultural commodity. This provision tears the biggest hole in the reciprocal trade program that has ever been torn in it by any action of Congress since its inception.

Let me warn this Congress that once you return to the Smoot-Hawley tariff principles in any large segment of our public economy, you are going to tear down the economic fabric of this country, as well as industry. Let me warn the Congressmen if you think you can put in the power of one man, the President of the United States, the right to set quantitative limitations, to set the tariff, and to set how much international trade shall interfere or compete with our domestic production, with a power and discretion that can be changed at any time—and then not have other nations put into the power of a dictator the same powers in retaliation, you are mistaken. Such action moves against private enterprise in international trade, and invites Government manipulations and Government trading. Under such a broad section, all talk of private enterprise in international trade and the operation of economic principles is complete nonsense. Peculiarly, this proposal is backed by some who declaim most loudly against State interference, arbitrary powers in the Executive, and so forth, on the domestic scene. This is economic absolutism of the worst type, and this is agriculture through a certain bloc running wild.

If the President does not veto this bill, he should immediately withdraw or have the administration withdraw the sponsorship of the bill to approve the ITO charter prepared at the International Conference on Trade and Unemployment that was held at Habana. This was the Habana conference to reduce the limitations on goods in international commerce, to cut down existing arbitrary trade barriers, and to take the first steps to do away with state trade. Its purpose was to take away from the hands of one man in any government the power to decide arbitrarily what part any nation's economy should play in international commerce and to write a system of basic rules mutually agreed upon for the encouragement and facilitating of private enterprise in international commerce. The purpose of the ITO charter was specifically to get away from quantitative restrictions; yet here is this committee coming in, in direct violation of the administration's policy, and in direct violation of the bipartisan policy called the reciprocal trade agreements program that we have voted and followed and which has built up international good will over the past decade and a half. Now, may I disagree with the chairman of the committee and say that he is completely in error when he states that this new section does not affect any current commodity or agreement. Under these reciprocal-trade agreements there are certain items or commodities that you can change and are therefore under this section as the last sentence of this particular provision section 22 states:

Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the general agreement on tariffs and trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection.

And that refers exactly to the current agreements because it specifically links the operation of this subsection to any commodities covered by escape provisions of the general agreements. This is a concealed attempt to put over on the country a change from a bipartisan policy that has worked well; namely, the reciprocal trade agreements policy. This action on this bill will not only cost the taxpayers and consumers two billion more dollars, but will effectively kill the bipartisan reciprocal trade agreements policy as to agricultural products, and will make the administration's support of the principles of the ITO charter a meaningless sham.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could share the complacency of my good friend from Georgia over the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in connection with the revised section 22, but it looks to me as though under this section that has been written into the conference report what we are actually doing is turning the agricultural program, at least insofar as perishable commodities are concerned, over to the State Department to administer, lock, stock, and barrel.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Not being too sure what the section was intended to mean, I was gratified to have the assurance of the chairman that under this section no trade agreements can hereafter be entered into which will violate section 22.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Georgia is right. I am going to get some additional information, I think, from the man who knows more about section 22 than anyone in the House; I am going to ask the gentleman from Michigan, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency to explain just exactly what paragraph (f) means and what it does.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I express my appreciation to the gentleman from California for the opportunity to do so. I think we need some background, however, thoroughly to understand subsection (f). We must take into consideration that under reciprocal-trade agreements there is the most-favored-nation clause. Under existing law and under the proposal the decision of the President as to the facts under this section shall be final. Under existing law section 22 provides:

(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

There is always the thought behind that that the program of the President wherein he increases duties to protect an agricultural program domestically may have that offset and completely nullified by an international agreement to which this country is a party. I do not use the term "treaty" because somewhere along the line somebody has drawn a line of demarcation between a treaty and a trade agreement and it has not yet been explained to me where the difference between a treaty and a trade agreement lies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as I said, the existing law, section 22 (f), provides that no proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

I just explained that under my understanding of that the program of the President by which he increases the tariffs under section 22 to protect a domestic program might be completely nullified by any new international agreement in respect to tariffs.

Section (f) as it is written in the conference report replaces section (f) in existing law and attempts to protect the program of the President in respect to the increase of tariffs for the protection of domestic programs against nullification by treaties and agreements in the future. Although it starts off by stating that—

No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party—

That language being to protect the present international agreements against nullification by any action which the President might take under section 22, it nevertheless goes on to state—but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable.

When I signed the conference report I had definitely in mind that that language was an attempt to prevent the possible nullification of any program under section 22 by any new international agreement, and I think that we may rest assured that if section 22 means anything and if subsection (f) means anything, it means simply, first, that present international agreements are respected and cannot be nullified or amended or modified through the program authorized in section 22 and that hereafter the section 22 program as proclaimed by the President is protected against nullification, modification, or amendment by any international agreement.

Let me just say this in general. Section 22 has never been used, and so long as it is permissive on the part of the President or the Secretary of Agriculture to use the authority contained in section 22, it is not going to be used in contravention of any international agreement and, I might say, it is not going to be used in the future any more than in the past. I might say also that where the existing law provides that the President shall activate this program, the proposed changes in the conference report in effect make no difference whatsoever in that particular.

We recognize the President as the head of the executive establishment, and when we use the word "President" in these laws, we do not necessarily mean the President as an individual. What we are referring to is the same as we refer here to Mr. Speaker, when we mean all of the ladies and gentlemen of the House; we refer to the ladies and gentlemen of the House when we address our remarks to the Speaker. So, when we refer to the President we refer to the executive establishment over which he has control. So, it does not make any difference in this law whether it says Secretary of Agriculture or the President, because the President has the responsibility for the program, as he should have. The reason why, I understand, the conferees substituted "Secretary of Agriculture" for the word "President" was that the Secretary of Agriculture might be expected to be watching this more closely than he would otherwise, and that he would activate the program, and then we go on to say that after this program is activated, that the President shall, if he finds the facts to be basically true, increase the tariffs not to exceed 50 percent. So, I cannot see where the President is compelled to do anything under this proposed amendment any more than he was compelled to do anything under the existing section 22. Where the law says that he shall increase the tariffs not to exceed 50 percent, of course, he is in full compliance with the law to increase them one one-hundredth of 1 percent. Now, after he has announced and proclaimed this program, there is nothing to prevent the President from amending or modifying the program, so it becomes more or less an innocuous thing because if the United States wants to enter into an agreement in contravention of an existing section 22 program, then in anticipation of that all the President has to do is to amend the section 22 program to conform with what he wants to do in the international agreement.

So the basic difference, as I see it, between existing law and this amendment lies in the protection which subsection (f) at least attempts to give and, according to my understanding, does give to existing programs. It is at least a declaration of policy on the part of Congress that we want the domestic agricultural programs respected and not nullified by subsequent international agreements.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman has omitted to read or comment on the bottom sentence on page 2.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that.

Mr. FULTON. I believe that that does change the law as regards the current agreements.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will read that in connection with the most-favored-nation clause in the reciprocal trade agreements, he will readily understand why that is in there, because under the reciprocal trade agreements the most-favored-nation clause causes these to apply to all countries that want its benefits.

Mr. FULTON. Does the State Department approve this section specifically? Can that be answered by the committee?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I can say this, that the State Department had a representative in the conference and the Department of Agriculture had a representative in the conference. They came down and worked with the conferees. I had little or nothing to do with it. I was more concerned with trying to get some mandatory provisions in here than perhaps I should have been, knowing that the program had never been used. Nevertheless, I think we were left with the impression from suggestions made by the State Department and the representative from the Department of Agriculture, which are embodied in the conference report, that these were compromise proposals and would assure that the program would be satisfactory to the President. Because it seemed to be satisfactory and I believe was satisfactory to these representatives of the State Department and the Department of Agriculture, we may assume that it is in keeping with the President's program and will be approved by him. Otherwise, of course, then we are confronted with the very paradoxical situation of the executive department coming down and recommending one thing and the President vetoing it.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I was concerned with the last sentence of subsection (f) for an entirely different reason than the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It seems to me the last sentence negatives the provision you have there to protect against decreases in future trade agreements.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am afraid the gentleman will have to ask somebody else for a specific interpretation of that, except that my understanding of it is that where you enter into a general tariff agreement with an escape clause in respect to some particular country, then the escape provisions, as it says here, of such general agreement shall not be deemed a violation of this subsection as provided for that particular country.

I think there is grave doubt as to whether they perhaps cannot be used to nullify the program, which is the weak point of the whole situation. I think there is some doubt about it. But I want to reiterate, if there is any meat to our debates here, and if the departments use the debates in determining legislative policy and intent, then let us stress the fact that when we accept this conference report we accept it with the understanding that no international agreement shall be entered into, notwithstanding any ambiguous language in this report, which will nullify the program which is laid out by the President.

That is my understanding of it. I do not think I would have signed the conference report, had I understood otherwise.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Will the gentleman from Michigan ask the gentleman from Kentucky if that is his understanding also?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am asked to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is his understanding that, generally speaking, notwithstanding any ambiguous language in the act, it is the intent of the Congress, if they adopt this conference report, to prevent the nullification of any program set up under section 22 by any future international agreements.

Mr. SPENCE. Within the framework of the act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If this conference report goes through, and we borrow $2,000,000,000 more to buy commodities, will the commodities be given to these foreign countries by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SPENCE. That is going a little further than I care to go to answer the question. I do not think it is germane here.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that when you get additional surplus commodities in this country and do not know what to do with them, and pay the farmers for these commodities, instead of letting the price go down to our own people, the Secretary of Agriculture will distribute them to foreign countries, thus depriving the people in this country of low commodity prices?

Mr. SPENCE. I yielded to the gentleman to ask a question and he has made a political speech.

Mr. RICH. I would like 5 minutes to make a political speech.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. We seem to face this interesting situation, Mr. Speaker; there appear to be marked differences of opinion on the floor as to just what this new language means. Also, it seems obvious from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON], the gentlemen from Washington [Mr. HORAN and Mr. HOLMES] that this is not satisfactory to anyone. It appears to be unsatisfactory to those who are supporters of the reciprocal trade agreements and it is not acceptable to those who have tried for some time to keep section 22 provisions from invading the Marketing Act theory of agricultural legislation.

We should support what I understand to be the intent of the other body and return this respectfully to the conference committee for further study to see if that committee can come to an agreement as to what the amendment means and what should be done about it.

Mr. Speaker, it would be better not to adopt this amendment at all, but to leave the section 22 provisions as they are. They are clearer and better than this wording. We should not adopt this conference report as it is now worded.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from California that the Magnuson amendment does clearly prevent any inroads by the reciprocal trade agreements into section 22 of the AAA Act?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That was my understanding of the intent of the Magnuson amendment. But the Magnuson amendment has been scrapped in favor of what I understand to be wording presented to the subcommittee of the other body, refused by it, and then brought to the conference and adopted by the conference committee. So that we now have this very difficult situation as to just whose wording it is and what it is intended to say and do.

Mr. JOHNSON. The other body adopted the Magnuson amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Therefore, they might revamp their present conference report and include the specific wording which the Magnuson amendment contains which would solve the problem from our viewpoint.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. I compliment the gentleman from California because although he is on the other side of this particular question, I being a supporter of the reciprocal trade agreements, he feels exactly as I do—that it is not clear. If it is not clear, then we should have the chairman of the committee, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to state at this time whether the Secretary of State and the State Department approve this section as written.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. If the gentleman from Kentucky heard that question, he can answer it.

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] 2 minutes to answer the question.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The conferees have brought back to the House the bill as passed. In addition to that, we compromised on the Magnuson amendment. You speak about the conferees going back for another conference. The House conferees agreed with the Senators on a compromise of the Magnuson amendment. If we had represented the views of the House entirely we would not have brought back the Magnuson amendment or any part of it. Some of the Members here want the Magnuson amendment as it passed the Senate. It was not adopted by the House and was not offered in the House. We did the best we could. The compromise was satisfactory to the State Department, to the Department of Agriculture, and was satisfactory to the conferees on the part of the Senate who brought the Magnuson' amendment before us. Why should we go back for further conference when the compromise was entirely satisfactory to the Senators? We were not instructed by the House to approve the Magnuson amendment or any part of it. This is what it does. It is stated in the report:

> The effect of the conference amendment with respect to subsection (f) is to make sure that future international agreements or amendments to existing international agreements give effect to the provisions of section 22 within the framework of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

We all understood it that way. It was unanimous by the conferees. I am sorry the compromise is not satisfactory to those of you who want the Magnuson amendment as adopted by the other body. We made a compromise that was satisfactory to both the House conferees and the Senate conferees. Why send it back for further conference?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. SPENCE. I do not have 5 minutes. I am yielding to the other side in conformity with the wishes of the senior minority member of the committee. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BRAMBLETT].

Mr. BRAMBLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] would like to have at this time.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Will the gentleman from Georgia make note of the fact that no one as yet has answered my question; that this wording as now in the bill definitely invades the theory of marketing agreements, upon which most of the perishable fruits and commodities have built their protection. I do not wish to take the time from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I repeat what I said. It may not be satisfactory to those who wanted the Magnuson amendment adopted in full. The Magnuson amendment was not offered or adopted on the floor of the House. We did the best we could by modifying the Magnuson amendment, and brought back that which we thought would be satisfactory to everybody. I think it is clear to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Do you agree or disagree with this——

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I agree to exactly what this amendment says.

I quote from the conference report:

> The effect of the conference amendment with respect to such subsection (f) is to make sure that future international agreements or amendments to existing international agreements give effect to the provisions of section 22 within the framework of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. FULTON. May I again repeat my question to the chairman of the committee, that he advise us specifically whether the new section 22 in the conference report is approved by the Secretary of State or the Department of State, or disapproved. We should know that.

Mr. SPENCE. The Department of State and the Department of Agriculture both approved the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WERDEL].

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Speaker, I think it might be well if we just reviewed as quickly as we can what really is being discussed here. I think we shall then understand why the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of State are in agreement upon this language brought back by the conference committee.

In the first place, the law as it now stands prohibits any proclamation that would violate a treaty or other agreement entered into. The Magnuson amendment atempts to aid the farmers of this country and particularly our domestic market by providing the reverse, that no treaty can be renewed or entered into in violation of section 22.

The committee has come back with this proposal: That the act as it is now prohibits any proclamation in violation of the treaty. Then they take the Magnuson language and say, that those treaties will not be entered into except—and I think this is important—that they comply with the full extent of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

For many years the farmers of this country have been at a loss to know what to do to protect themselves because these general agreements on tariffs and trade have been written in violation of the intent of Congress when the law was passed. If we now pass this act we give a blessing to a violation of the congressional intent in the past. That is what we do when we pass this law; that is what this language of the conference committee does; that is what we are asked to do today. Without regard to the grounds or the basis of the gathering of more power by the Secretary of State in these general agreements we today, in effect, by congressional act bless it, say it is good for the future, and we want it for all time to come, and we do not want the Secretary of Agriculture to interfere.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in these very brief 2 minutes I would like to sum up the legislative situation that we face here at this time. In the first place, the Commodity Credit bill with which the conference report deals, was passed by the House, and the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment, of course, was not a part of it, nor was that principle voted upon in the House when the bill was before us. In the Senate the amendment we have referred to here as the Magnuson-Morse amendment was adopted.

Subsection (f) of section 22, which the amendment would replace provides:

> No proclamation under this section—

Referring to section 22—

> shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or of the international agreements to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

The Magnuson-Morse amendment reverses that theory and recites this:

> No international agreement hereafter shall be entered into by the United States, or renewed, extended, or allowed to extend beyond its permissible termination date in controversion of this section—

A reversal of the principle. But the conferees ignoring both principles came in with a completely different concept, which in my opinion, at least, went outside of what was intended by either the Magnuson-Morse amendment or the language of section 22 as it now reads. They add a new thought as pointed out by the previous speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. WERDEL], the new principle being the negation of section 22 by subordinating that section to the terms of article 2 of what is called GATT, or the general agreements on tariffs and trade. Under these conditions, without the House committee's having had any hearings on the principle involved in this conference agreement, when the conference committee agreement is not in accordance with either the terms of the present law or the Magnuson-Morse amendment, and when it is a very complicated matter in itself and naturally goes beyond anything that has been done by either House, it seems to me the logical thing for this body to do today would be to send this bill back to conference by rejecting this report.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this time to ask the chairman another question, if I may, along this line: If the language is adopted as now written, it would result in a congressional ratification of the limitations on section 22 now contained in the general agreement on tariffs and trade, would it not?

Mr. SPENCE. What limitations?

Mr. HOLMES. The limitations in section 22 involving permissive action of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SPENCE. What are the specific limitations?

Mr. HOLMES. Those limitations that the Secretary of Agriculture has of a permissive nature to invoke if he sees fit the handling of the quotas and the amounts of imports of agricultural commodities that are in competition with surpluses in this country.

Mr. SPENCE. I do not know just what the gentleman has in mind. I do not think he would have that authority in contravention of agreements that have been made by our Government. He certainly would be bound by those agreements. We are bound by the agreements. We merely provide here that in the future no agreement shall be made that will interfere with the carrying out of the tariff policy of the United States. I do not think we can pass any act here that would give any agency of the Government authority to override the agreements we make with other nations as long as those agreements are in effect. I think this liberalizes section 22.

Mr. HOLMES. I feel sure it would mean approval of the limitations on section 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS). The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, we should keep in mind the thing that has been high-lighted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], that we are bringing back in substance the bill that was passed by the House. I think, too, that we should recall that many agricultural leaders familiar with the problem are urging the increase in the authorization for the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry on its program. It must not be jeopardized. It would be jeopardized by the defeat of this conference report.

Furthermore, I want to endorse, as one of the conferees, what was so well stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the effect that hereafter it is obviously the purpose of this legislation to say to the President, and it constitutes a mandate, that no agreement be entered into if in violation of section 22. We have strengthened section 22. Agreements cannot be made in the future that are not made in contemplation of the content and the spirit and the basic principles of section 22. To that extent I think it represents a break with the past.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot agree with my friend from Arkansas that we have strengthened section 22. We have a conflict here. We have the general agreements on tariff and trade where the Secretary of State is dominantly interested, and we have section 22 where the Secretary of Agriculture should be dominant.

The action of this subcommittee puts the Secretary of State, in my opinion, in a more prominent position than the Secretary of Agriculture. Yet this afternoon we are adding $2,000,000 to the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation to take care of surplus agricultural crops.

I would also like to add for the RECORD that we passed a commodity-credit authorization bill on March 27. A meeting was held over at the other side of the Capitol at which, in accordance with the understanding, representatives of the State Department met on March 27 the staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate Agriculture Committee and members from the office of the Senate Legislative Counsel. There is where section (f) as now substituted for the Magnuson-Morse amendment was drawn up, and it is hung on what should be an agricultural bill. If any legislation should be recommitted to the committee for further hearings, this is it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Is it not true that the term "strengthening the bill" means it strengthens the bill in favor of the State Department over agricultural products?

Mr. HORAN. Absolutely; it endorses GATT completely. The members of the four committees, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs, are vitally interested in this, and yet here we are writing this vital legislation in sorry haste.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact also that under these reciprocal-trade agreements the President has the power to reduce them and he can handle this affair to suit himself and we will have to take just what comes to us from foreign countries, regardless of what this bill calls for?

Mr. HORAN. Yes; even eggs from Communist China.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain statements and excerpts.)

BILL VITAL TO FARMERS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this legislation is vital to the farmers. It contains an authorization for $2,000,000,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation to help the farmers. It is based upon the theory that to help the farmers, the entire country, and the entire economy will be helped. And, I believe that it will. We were convinced, as conferees, that the President would veto the bill if the Magnuson amendment was kept in the bill. We were convinced of that, and being convinced that we could not get by with it without a veto, and realizing the urgency and the need for this legislation to help the farmers, we then decided to write a different amendment, and the amendment written, I believe, will meet with the approval of the President of the United States, and I believe he will approve this bill.

There was one other situation last year concerning potatoes that really caused the adoption of this amendment in the Senate, and when we analyze the allegation that was made about the potato program, it is not of any great significance; it does not amount to anything in the world. The charge was that we were permitting the importation of potatoes from Canada into our country where we had a support program, and where they could get a higher price for their potatoes than they could get in Canada, and they were exporting them. That sounded awfully bad. It is true, absolutely true, that some potatoes were imported, but they were imported from the provinces in eastern Canada by the growers of potatoes who normally, in fact, always, invariably marketed their potatoes in the United States. They have no other market for them. So, they did last year just exactly what they have done heretofore. They did not increase the amount of imports at all; they only amounted to 9,000,000 bushels out of a crop of 400,000,000 bushels in the United States, and at the same time over on the western part of the United States we were exporting potatoes to Canada. It is true that we did not export as many as we imported on the eastern seaboard, but the difference was not great. It was a matter of minor importance, and that one thing caused the Magnuson amendment to be adopted more than any other one thing I am told.

LET CONSUMERS BENEFIT

May I say one word here about the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who, a while ago—and I hope he listens to me—made a significant statement. He said, "Why do we not let the prices of these perishable products go down when we have a surplus, and let the consumers of the country get the benefit of that lower price?" The gentleman made that statement, if I understood him correctly, and I agree with him 100 percent. That is exactly what we should do, and that is what the Brannan plan proposes; that is exactly what the Brannan plan proposes, and I believe a lot of people will agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I should like to ask the gentleman a little further about the so-called Magnuson amendment and the amendment adopted by the conferees. Am I to understand that the Magnuson amendment is strengthened or weakened by the action taken by the conferees?

Mr. PATMAN. It all depends on the way you look at it. Under the Magnuson amendment the Secretary of Agriculture would have complete control. He would file a complaint, he would hear the testimony, he would be the judge and the jury and the executioner. He would be everything. It would be unfair. So under the Magnuson amendment as amended by this committee of conference we leave it up to a bipartisan board, the Tariff Commission, to decide. Would not the gentleman rather have a bipartisan board composed of both Democrats and Republicans decide an important issue like that, rather than have a member of the President's Cabinet have complete and full control and charge? That is the question involved here.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman try to answer this one for me, so that I may get something definite? I am sure the gentleman can answer it. Under your language as opposed to the Magnuson amendment, which would be more effective in stopping the dumping of these foreign products over here?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know that you would want to stop them entirely from Canada. That is one reason we changed this, after we were convinced the President would veto the bill.

Mr. COLMER. I mean those things on which we do want to stop dumping.

Mr. PATMAN. Canada is our best customer. If we stop the importation of 9,000,000 bushels of potatoes a year, they could ruin us on 25 or a thousand other things.

CRITICISM OF SECRETARY BRANNAN ANSWERED

There was a meeting held at St. Paul, Minn., on April 3, 1950, of Production and Marketing personnel of the Department of Agriculture. Secretary Charles Brannan addressed this meeting. He has been criticized for permitting the committeemen who attended this meeting to be paid.

In a letter to the Comptroller General, the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren, Secretary Brannan answers these charges, and I believe his answer is full and complete, should end the controversy and stop the false allegations.

The letter to Mr. Warren is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
June 1, 1950.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General.

DEAR MR. WARREN: I appreciate the opportunity you have given me to outline the nature and circumstances of the meeting of Production and Marketing personnel held at St. Paul, Minn., on April 3 and 4, 1950, which I addressed and about which there has been some criticism on the floor of the Senate.

First, something about the character of the meeting. This was an ordinary staff meeting of the same type and purpose as many others held by this agency and other agencies and bureaus of the Department of Agriculture for many years, and, I am confident, held by many other agencies of Government from time to time. There were about 2,322 Production and Marketing Administration committeemen at the meeting. Of this number, about 245 were county committeemen and about 2,077 were community committeemen. The per diem and travel expenses of the county committeemen amounts to approximately $8,100. The per diem and travel costs of the attending community committeemen amounts to approximately $34,000. If I understand Senator AIKEN'S statements correctly, he objects only to the presence at the meeting of the community committeemen. It is clear from the following excerpt from the record that Senator AIKEN does not object to the presence of the county committeemen at this meeting:

"On April 3 and 4 the county committeemen of the Production and Marketing Administration for the State of Minnesota met in St. Paul. This was an annual meeting, a perfectly proper meeting called for the purpose of developing an agricultural conservation program for 1951.

"These programs have generally been beneficial to each of the 48 States and to the national agricultural economy.

"The 2-day meeting of the county committeemen at St. Paul was for a perfectly logical and legitimate purpose.

"However, Mr. President, an incident connected with this meeting was, in my opinion, neither logical nor legitimate" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 11, p. 5050.)

The farmer committeemen carry out the programs authorized by the Congress and which are assigned to the Production and Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture. It is undoubtedly the most efficient and least costly means of accomplishing the task. Please note that the county committeemen and the community committeemen do identical types of work. Only the geographic area of responsibility is different, although the county committeemen act in a somewhat supervisory capacity over the community committeemen. Both county and community committeemen receive the same scale of remuneration, paid from the same sources and for the same types of service.

Section 7 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1938, as amended, provides as follows:

"The Secretary (of Agriculture) shall designate local administrative areas (communities or townships) as units of administration of programs under this section. No such local area shall include more than one county or parts of different counties. Farmers within any such local administrative area, and participating or cooperating in programs administered within such area, shall elect annually from among their number a local committee of not more than three members for such area and shall also elect annually from among their number a delegate to a county convention for the election of a county committee. The delegates from the various local areas in the county shall, in a county convention, elect, annually, the county committee for the county which shall consist of three members who are farmers in the county. The local committee shall select a secretary and may utilize the county agricultural extension agent."

In accordance with this provision of the law, annual and nonpartisan elections are held in each agricultural community in the United States. In 1949 elections were held in 29,106 communities and that many community committees were elected with about 87,000 committee members. These committeemen are charged with the responsibility of administering the PMA programs in their communities for 1950. They do not receive a fixed salary for their services but do receive a daily wage and travel expenses. This is an important variance from the status of the usual Federal employee, who when in travel status receives his salary plus a travel per diem, plus railroad fare or care mileage.

In administering the PMA programs for the fiscal year 1948–49, community committeemen were paid an average of $6.30 per day for an average of 6.5 days spent in carrying on PMA program work. The balance of the time which they devoted to program work was performed without remuneration from any Government sources whatsoever. Nearly all committeemen spend considerably more of their time in program work for which they receive no compensation. They are working for improved conditions for agriculture and for the Nation and their remuneration comes from the satisfaction in this service.

County committeemen received an average of $6.90 per day for an average of 44.1 days' work on the programs during the same fiscal year 1948–49. They, too, work many more days than they are compensated for.

It is noteworthy that the committeemen would receive approximately the same amount of money throughout the year for work done whether or not they made this trip to St. Paul. There is just so much money available for the reimbursement of community committeemen and when that sum is used up they continue to work thereafter without remuneration. The implication that representative American farmers could be bribed or induced to attend a meeting by the offer of $8 per day plus 5 cents a mile for travel is unthinkable, unwarranted, and unjust to American farmers.

All of these committeemen are elected to their positions annually and, although many are reelected year after year, it is necessary to carry on a program of training in order that the new members may be acquainted with their duties and both the new members and the old members acquainted with the changes in the programs as those changes are authorized from time to time by the Congress and established by the Secretary.

Conferences for the purpose of training and instructing new committeemen occur annually throughout the entire United States. Some of these conferences are held in smaller groups at various places throughout the State with the State committee people traveling to these various meetings. The method of instruction is left to the discretion of the State committee people, many of whom find it desirable to bring the committeemen together once a year for a general discussion of programs.

The conferences are carefully planned and are hard-working affairs. The farmer committeemen who attend receive appreciable benefit from the straight program training and instruction which is made available to them. It has also been found that in the conduct of these conferences a very useful purpose can be served by providing committeemen with the opportunity to hear firsthand the views of some of the leading agriculturalists in the country. This has led to the general practice of inviting well-known and accepted agricultural leaders to participate on conference programs. For example, the principal speaker at the Vermont State PMA conference this year was Senator GEORGE D. AIKEN. The North Carolina State PMA conference this year invited Senator CLYDE R. HOEY as its main speaker. Senator SPESSARD L. HOLLAND spoke at the Florida State PMA conference. It has been a generally accepted practice when time would permit for the Secretary of Agriculture to attend one or more of these State conferences throughout the year. Each of the two preceding Secretaries of Agriculture had spoken at an identical type of meeting in Minnesota and at many other such meetings in other States.

The two Senators from Minnesota were invited to attend this meeting. Senator EDWARD J. THYE did not attend. The invitation to him and his reply are attached. Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY did appear on the program.

In 1948 the then Secretary of Agriculture, CLINTON P. ANDERSON was the principal speaker and discussed existing and proposed farm legislation.

The same kind of an invitation or notice of Mr. ANDERSON'S expected attendance at the meeting was issued in which attention of the committeemen was called to the fact that per diem and travel would be allowed.

So that you may judge the character of the remarks made by me during the session, I have supplied you with a transcript of a recording taken at the meeting. I also have a recording for your use if you care to check against the written transcript. I especially invite your attention to the fact that this was a discussion of the farm problem. No reference was made to a political party or to a political candidate (unless Allan Kline is now a political candidate). The listeners were not exhorted to vote in one fashion or another on any issue whatsoever; in fact, the question of voting is not mentioned specifically or by innuendo.

Without respect to the question as to whether or not such meetings are sound administration or are authorized by law—my views on these two points being very clear that they are both wise and lawful—I believe these conclusions are inescapable:

First, the community committeemen who attended this meeting will have received at the end of the year no more money than if they had not attended this meeting. Approximately so much money is available each year for administrative costs and when these funds are exhausted, the farmers continue their work without remuneration. They would have earned this money before the year was out in some other fashion.

Second, there is nothing about the convening or conduct of this meeting which is in any wise different from many other meetings which have been held this year and in previous years throughout the country by this and many other agencies of government.

Third, there is nothing different about this meeting than previous meetings held in this State, even including the nature, phraseology and character of the notice or invitation sent to the community committeemen.

Fourth, community committeemen and county committeemen are engaged in the very same type of program and, therefore, if, as it is already acknowledged, this meeting was perfectly proper as far as county committeemen are concerned, it very logically follows that it was equally proper as far as community committeemen are concerned.

Fifth, the fact that Senator HUMPHREY addressed this meeting in political terms cannot be charged to those who organized the meeting or to the Secretary of Agriculture. Senator THYE, a member of the opposite party, was invited and could have spoken as vehemently on the other side of the same issues if he had chosen to do so. I do not believe it wise to exclude members of Congress from these meetings and I assume that Senator AIKEN agrees for he has availed himself of such opportunity subsequent to the date he took exception to the St. Paul meeting.

Obviously, if there is any additional information which we can supply to you with regard to this matter, we shall be pleased to do so.

Yours truly,

CHARLES F. BRANNAN, Secretary.

FARM PROSPERITY CAUSES NATION'S PROSPERITY AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF HOME AND FARM OWNERSHIP

If anyone believes that our Government is going in the direction of socialism or communism, he will be greatly disappointed in what the president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards has had to say.

The president of this organization, Mr. Robert P. Gerholz, predicts that three out of four families in the United States will own homes. He says that a majority of the people own their own homes now. Socialism or communism would cause the people to divide what they have with others who do not have anything. As long as people are home owners, they are not going to be Socialists or Communists because they are not willing to divide their homes.

More people own their homes and farms today than ever before in history. More people own their automobiles and personal property of all kinds than ever before in all history, so the trend is not toward socialism, it is in the opposite direction.

Mr. Gerholz says that home ownership in the United States declined steadily from 1890 to 1940, but since the war this trend has been dramatically reversed. Therefore, the time in our country when socialism was probably stronger than at any other time was from 1890 to 1940.

I am inserting herewith a statement concerning this important subject that appeared in the Washington Post Sunday, June 18, 1950. It is as follows:

An expanding market—growing with a rising standard of living—will make home owners of three-fourths of American families.

This is the prediction of Robert P. Gerholz, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. In making it, he urged the housing industry to "move into the unreached market of 45 percent of American families."

The potential market by 1956, according to the official, is for 12,000,000 new homes. Even now, he observed, a majority of American families are home owners for the first time on record.

Writing in the current issue of NAREB's news letter, Gerholz viewed optimistically the outlook for home ownership over the Nation.

"Public taste and esteem for home ownership is at a new high," he declared. "We should never forget that the proportion of American families who owned their homes was in almost steady decline from 1890 to 1940. Since the war this trend has been dramatically reversed."

As factors contributing to increased home ownership, he named:

1. General economic expansion, which has made home ownership possible for many families who were unable to reach it in the prewar era.

2. The amortized insured mortgage, which has been an important factor.

3. Increased use of automobiles, which has made suburban neighborhoods of modestly priced homes more accessible to work centers.

Right now, Gerholz asserted, home ownership is at the highest level ever. He noted that an increase of 6,000,000 home owners occurred between 1940 and 1947—a gain of 40 percent.

"This pickup in home ownership is sound," he said. "Fifty-seven percent of all home owners are free and clear of mortgages. Seventy percent of our farms are free and clear. Equities generally are sounder, with carrying charges that require a smaller proportion of the family budget than was the case in the prewar era."

Home values, the official wrote, are good. He cited a recent NAREB survey which found that about half of all new home production is in the $8,000 and under price range.

Average selling prices of all houses—new and used—have been reported by the Federal Reserve Board at around $7,000, he said. Prices paid by veterans for homes bought under the GI bill average well under $7,000.

Gerholz said that the housing industry has broken all past building records and is well on the way to do it again this year. The number of new homes put under construction this year is 53 percent greater than in the same period of 1949, he reported.

Will this building pace continue?

In 1949, he said, a Government survey showed that there was still an unmet market for 7,000,000 homes in the next 5 years. If we add to this the number of families who say they might buy a house by 1956, the potential 5-year market is for 12,000,000 homes.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I have just interrogated my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], in an effort to get his valued opinion as to the merits of the conferees' substitute for the so-called Magnuson amendment.

I regret exceedingly that his time and all time is so limited that I could not follow that colloquy further. For, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced from the meager oportunity that I have had to study the conferees' substitute that it will not prove as effective as the Magnuson amendment in the goal sought of protecting our American agricultural interests against the importation of foreign products.

Frankly, I have never felt that the Magnuson amendment went far enough in attaining this goal. It was permissive and placed too much discretionary power in the Secretary of Agriculture rather than mandatorily providing the machinery to protect our American growers; but now it appears that the conferees have so weakened the already weakened Senate provision that the American farmer can expect little protection from this legislation if and when it becomes the law.

The American producer of agricultural products should have some real protection from similar products produced in countries with comparatively low standards of living. Certainly, he has a right to expect that consideration for the domestic market. To illustrate: We have in my section of this country an infant tung-oil industry. Tung oil is essential to our national defense, as well as for domestic uses. The development of this industry in this country has been accentuated for national-defense purposes particularly since World War I when the foreign supply was cut off and it proved a great boon during World War II. This House, realizing this, last year passed my bill, H. R. 29, for a mandatory support price on tung oil. That provision was subsequently adopted in the Senate in the over-all agricultural bill, and is now the law of the land. But notwithstanding that the Secretary must support tung oil at approximately 23 cents per pound the importers and brokers, who are more interested in fees than in the domestic economy, so manipulate the market with the importation of foreign—principally Chinese—oil that they are able to undersell the domestic growers because these Chinese and other foreign oils are produced with cheap coolie and Indian labor.

Realizing the importance of this industry and out of a desire to protect my American growers, more than 5 years ago, I introduced a bill, which is still pending before the Congress, to provide for a duty of 5 cents per pound on this imported oil. I have been unable to get favorable action on this proposed legislation because of the foreign policy with reference to foreign trade.

Of course, we all believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is necessary to help our foreign allies in the fight against communism in this troubled world; but it certainly does not make sense for us to fight communism with one hand and to help it with the other. In this particular case of tung oil that is exactly what we are doing under the present policy.

We are, in effect, assisting Communists in China in their effort to take over the great Chinese nation by permitting them to ship this cheaply produced and inferior grade of oil into this country to undersell our American growers. At the same time we are also threatening an industry built up largely because of our national defense needs without which we would be at the mercy of the Communists in the event of another war. More than that, we are asking the American taxpayer through this support program to subsidize the Chinese Communists. No, it just simply does not make sense. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the conferees have seen fit to weaken rather than to strengthen the so-called Magnuson amendment. And, while I dislike very much to vote against this bill increasing the Commodity Credit capital, I find it very difficult because of this action to go along with this legislation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing today with an instrumentality that has done more for agriculture than any other agency of the Government. In 1933 when the Commodity Credit Corporation was set up by law, wheat was about 30 cents, corn about 20 cents, cotton about 6 cents, and tobacco about 5 cents. It has given a stability to the farming industry that it otherwise could not have had. It has given an incentive to the farmers to stay on the farm and produce the necessary crops.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania spoke of the injury he thought this act would do to labor by increasing the price of farm products. I have never seen labor prosperous unless agriculture was prosperous. Prosperity does not become spotty in the United States. We are either all prosperous or all depressed. No agency has done more to create this condition than the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Are you going to destroy the usefulness of this corporation which needs the money we are giving it now, the borrowing capacity, by discussing these technical questions which mean so little when we consider the over-all purpose and effect of the legislation and, if they do not meet with your entire approval, sending back this conference report and causing further delay? The purpose of passing this act was to give to agriculture the support they needed in this crop year. We failed in that by the delay. It is essential that this conference report be passed immediately, so that the borrowing capacity of the Commodity Credit Corporation will be increased by $2,000,000,000 in order that they can carry out the functions for which they were created and which are essential to the stability of agriculture.

We have not done anything to weaken section 22. You will find in the operation of this act that the full purpose for which it was created will be carried out. We could not give anybody the authority to make any agreements not in conformity with international trade agreements.

The treaties of the United States are the supreme law of the land. The international agreements, whether they are made with the formality of a treaty or not, pledge the faith and honor of the United States. We have to carry out our international agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will approve of this conference report and will give the Commodity Credit Corporation the opportunity to continue to function and continue to render the services it has rendered in the past and to give a stability to agriculture which it otherwise would not have; to give an assurance to the farmer that he will obtain a living price for his products which will keep him on the farm; and which will give this basic industry an assurance that it may in the future rely upon the support it has had in the past and give the American people the assurance that the farmer will still produce.

This is a basic industry, an industry upon which we all rely.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAVITS) there were—ayes 71, noes 39.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the bill be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot understand why this should go over until tomorrow, when we have the votes here now to defeat it, and we should defeat it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am simply carrying out an agreement made with Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Sometimes the leadership desires to accommodate Members who may not be present on a certain day. I assume that is why the gentleman from Massachusetts made the request.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to accommodate the majority side, and withdraw the point of order.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

JUNE 20, 1950.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully submit my resignation as a member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH B. MITCHELL.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 659) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That HUGH B. MITCHELL, of Washington, be and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Education and Labor.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION OF MEMBER TO COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 660) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That RICHARD BOLLING, of Missouri, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Banking and Currency.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENSES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 635 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to investigate and report to the House not later than January 3, 1951, with respect to the following matters:

1. The extent and nature of expenditures made by all candidates for the House of Representatives in connection with their campaign for nomination and election to such office.

2. The amounts subscribed, contributed, or expended, and the value of services rendered, and facilities made available (including personal services, use of advertising space, radio and television time, office space, moving-picture films, and automobile and other transportation facilities) by any individual, individuals, or group of individuals, committee, partnership, corporation, or labor union, to or on behalf of each such candidate in connection with any such campaign or for the purpose of influencing the votes cast or to be cast at any convention or election held in 1950 to which a candidate for the House of Representatives is to be nominated or elected.

3. The use of any other means or influence (including the promise or use of patronage) for the purpose of aiding or influencing the nomination or election of any such candidates.

4. The amounts, if any, raised, contributed, and expended by any individual, individuals, or group of individuals, committee, partnership, corporation, or labor union, including any political committee thereof, in connection with any such election, and the amounts received by any political committee from any corporation, labor union, individual, individuals, or group of individuals, committee, or partnership.

5. The violations, if any, of the following statutes of the United States:

(a) The Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

(b) The act of August 2, 1939, as amended, relating to pernicious political activities, commonly referred to as the Hatch act.

(c) The provisions of section 304, Public Law 101, Eightieth Congress, chapter 120, first session, referred to as the "Labor Management Relations Act, 1947."

(d) Any statute or legislative act of the United States, or of the State within which a candidate is seeking nomination or reelection to the House of Representatives, the violation of which Federal or State statute, or statutes, would affect the qualification of a Member of the House of Representatives within the meaning of article I, section 5, of the Constitution of the United States.

6. Such other matters relating to the election of Members of the House of Representatives in 1950, and the campaigns of candidates in connection therewith, as the committee deems to be of public interest, and which in its opinion will aid the House of Representatives in enacting remedial legislation, or in deciding any contests that may be instituted involving the right to a seat in the House of Representatives.

7. The committee is authorized to act upon its own motion and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made to the committee under oath, by any person, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in such complaint are immaterial or untrue. All hearings before the committee, and before any duly authorized subcommittee thereof shall be public, and all orders and decisions of the committee, and of any such subcommittee shall be public.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such public hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress, to employ such attorneys, experts, clerical, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony, as it deems advisable. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any subcommittee, or by any member designated by such chairman, and may be served by any person designated by any such chairman or member.

8. The committee is authorized and directed to report promptly any and all violations of any Federal or State statutes in connection with the matters and things mentioned herein to the Attorney General of the United States in order that he may take such official action as may be proper.

9. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties prescribed by law.

That said committee is authorized and directed to file interim reports whenever in the judgment of the majority of the committee, or of a subcommittee conducting portions of said investigation, the public interest will be best served by the filing of said interim reports, and in no event shall the final report of said committee be filed later than January 3, 1951, as hereinabove provided.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this is the customary resolution passed every 2 years for the routine investigation of campaign expenditures. It is introduced by the majority leader. I know of no opposition and there are no requests for time on this side.

Does the gentleman from Ohio desire some time?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I would like about 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] 3 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has explained, this is a resolution that is adopted every campaign year by the House. It applies to the election of Members of the House. This is an agreed piece of legislation by the leadership on both sides of the aisle and certainly should be adopted. It is a nonpartisan effort to keep track of elections, and in the spirit of good government I think we should adopt this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of the business today and other special orders previously agreed to, I may address the House for 40 minutes, and revise and extend the remarks that I make at that time and include statements by the Honorable Harley Hise, chairman of the Board of the RFC, and Hon. Harvey J. Gunderson, Director of the RFC.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE USE OF CHEMICALS, COMPOUNDS, ETC., IN THE PRODUCTION OF FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 323 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the people of the United States are vitally interested in wholesome food; and since many individuals and firms have been placing adulterated dairy and meat products and other foods on the market and have by chemical processes together with pure adulteration reduced their nutritional value, specifically in various cheeses and meat products; and

Whereas an increasing proportion of the Nation's food supply is being industrially processed and the industrial techniques of processing food have a direct bearing on the quality of the national diet and the standards of public health; and

Whereas chemicals, compounds, and synthetics on an increasing scale are being introduced and used in the production, processing, preparation, and packaging of food products; and

Whereas under existing law there is no requirement that the chemicals, compounds, and synthetics be demonstrated to be nontoxic before being so used in the production, processing, preparation, and packaging of food products; and

Whereas chemicals, compounds, and synthetics are being used to reduce or displace in foods important nutritive ingredients; and

Whereas the trend represented by the use of these chemicals, compounds, and synthetics presents a serious problem not only to the health and welfare of people but also to the future stability and well-being of our entire agricultural economy; and

Whereas many pesticides and insecticides of known toxicity are being exposed for use in connection with the growing of fruit, vegetable, and forage crops and for the eradication of insect pests, the uncontrolled use of which threatens contamination of the food supplies of the Nation with resulting ill effects upon the health of the people; and

Whereas the use of commercial fertilizer containing excessive quantities of inorganic chemicals is definitely involved in the matter of plant, animal, and human nutrition and health: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That there be, and hereby is, created a select committee to be composed of seven Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation and study of—

(1) the nature, extent, and effect of the use of chemicals, compounds, and synthetics in the production, processing, preparation, and packaging of food products to determine the effect of the use of such chemicals, compounds, and synthetics (A) upon the health and welfare of the Nation and (B) upon the stability and well-being of our agricultural economy;

(2) the nature, extent, and effect of the use of pesticides and insecticides with respect to food and food products, particularly the effect of such use of pesticides and insecticides upon the health and welfare of the consumer by reason of toxic residues remaining on such food and food products as a result of such use; and

(3) the nature, effect, and extent of the use of chemicals, compounds, and synthetics in the manufacture of fertilizer, particularly the effect of such use of chemicals, compounds, and synthetics upon (A) the condition of the soil as a result of the use of such fertilizer, (B) the quantity and quality of the vegetation growing from such soil, (C) the health of animals consuming such vegetation, and (D) the quantity and quality of food produced from such soil, and (E) the public health and welfare generally.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation and study, together with such recommendations for legislation as it may deem advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof authorized by the committee to hold hearings, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary, to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of all agencies in the executive branch of the Government. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and reserve 30 minutes to myself.

I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution deals with the use of chemicals in food. The resolution consists of three parts: The first has to do with substances of a chemical nature used in food; the second, with the use of insecticides and pesticides and their effect upon food; and the third, the use of chemicals in fertilizers and the residual toxicity that may carry over to the food.

Both the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] have sponsored this type of legislation over a period of time. I believe we will all agree that FRANK KEEFE is probably one of the outstanding crusaders on public health that we have in the country, and as a result of 10 years of investigation into public health and welfare he deemed it necessary to have an investigation of this type. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who some 40 years ago first became interested in the health of the Nation, also deemed that we should have an investigation of this type.

I might point out one or two instances to show what effect the use of chemicals has on human beings. For example, in the bread hearings before the Food and Drug Administration we found that two companies alone last year sold 10,000,000 pounds of chemicals to be used in the manufacture of bread. These were substitutes for fluid milk, butter, or essential oils, and other organic material, and also eggs. We do not know what effect this may have. The Food and Drug Administration informs us that only where the toxicity is evident, where it will have an immediate effect upon the test animals, can they determine with any degree of accuracy just what effect it might have on human beings. We find, however, that continued use over a long period of time does have an effect or may have an effect. Since the beginning of the war more than 500 applications have been made to the Food and Drug Administration to use new chemicals in foods.

In the other body I believe Senator GILLETTE is conducting an investigation into the economic impact of the use of these substitutes, the so-called chemicals, instead of the farm products that ordinarily would go into bread; that is, milk, eggs, butter, lard, and so forth. But that is purely on the economic basis; this investigation has to do with the health of the individual. We find evidence that certain chemicals used continuously do have a toxic effect on human beings, but just how much is a question.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELANEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I want to commend the gentleman and his committee for bringing out this resolution, because in the last few years there has been such a marked increase in the use of artificial materials in foodstuffs. We have not yet been able to determine their full and ultimate effects. In addition, there are possible bad results on human beings from the widespread use of DDT and other chemicals to kill certain insects or weeds in lands where cattle graze. It has been demonstrated that some do produce changes in the milk of those cattle. Over a period of time certain deleterious effects seem to be produced in the human being who consume that milk. With the development of so many new drugs and remedial measures to fight disease and pests, we have entered a field that must be explored painstakingly in order to determine whether or not we may be seriously endangering the health of our people in ways that may not become apparent in some cases until months or years after the food is consumed. Therefore, there is no more important measure before us from the standpoint of protecting the health of our people than this one designed to get to the bottom of these problems by comprehensive, careful, scientific studies. I am sure there will not be any opposition to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELANEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. In my district a farmer cut the grass where a new outdoor theater was to be built. It had been sprayed with certain chemicals. He cut the grass, he took it home and fed it to the cattle and killed the entire herd. That is the effect of certain chemicals on animals.

Mr. DELANEY. That is exactly what this resolution seeks to investigate and remedy. It is an effort to give information to the public.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I might point out and read sections of a letter I have received from Dr. Paul B. Dunbar, Commissioner of Food and Drug Administration. This letter will clarify a great number of questions that I might be called upon later to answer. He states:

> The principal problem encompassed in these resolutions is the use in food of chemicals, insufficiently tested to determine their toxicity, to effect some real or fancied improvement or to protect food during production or storage against attack by pests.
>
> Under the present terms of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938, interstate traffic is proscribed in food which contains a poisonous or deleterious substance, whether added or not, which may render the article injurious to health. The law also forbids traffic in food containing an added poisonous or deleterious substance unless it is required in production or cannot be avoided by good manufacturing practice. Where it is required or cannot be avoided, the Administrator is authorized to prescribe tolerances limiting the amounts added so that the over-all quantity of toxic substances in our food supply will be held within the limits of safety to public health.
>
> More than 500 chemicals have been proposed for use in food since the beginning of World War II. Most of these were untested for toxicity or their effects upon nutritional values, or had been insufficiently tested to determine with finality that they could be safely used. Where a chemical is not spectacularly toxic and does not kill test animals promptly, it may require complex and tedious tests of long duration to determine, first, whether or not it is in fact a poisonous or deleterious substance and, second, if so, just how toxic it is and whether it can be safely used within some specific limitation.
>
> While most food manufacturers conscientiously refrain from using ingredients about the safety of which any doubt remains, there has been a tendency among some to use these chemicals before sufficient facts were available to establish their safety. Each of our annual reports since 1944 recites instances of such use.
>
> It has been suggested that the law should contain a provision relating to the use of new substances in food parallel to the present requirements with respect to new drugs. These requirements were embodied in the act of 1938 after a new drug, which had been marketed without adequate testing to determine its safety, had resulted in more than 100 deaths. The law now requires that a drug must be adequately tested to determine its safety for its intended use before it is distributed in interstate commerce. It is not necessary for the Government to show, as it must in the case of foods, that the article when consumed as directed may endanger health. The promoter of a new drug must assume the burden of showing its safety before the law permits its distribution.

This resolution will put into effect the recommendations made in this letter by Dr. Dunbar.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] has so ably explained, this resolution does create a special or select committee for the purpose of investigating various chemicals, synthetics, compounds, and other materials used in the manufacture of foodstuffs.

For a long time the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], our colleague who, because of illness, is unable to be with us today, has been giving careful study and attention to this entire problem. The gentleman from Wisconsin has spoken many times on the floor of the House to substantiate the need for an investigation such as this. He introduced a resolution in the House for the creation of a special committee for this specific purpose, as did the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], whose name appears as the author of this particular resolution. It has been their joint effort which has resulted in this resolution being presented, first to the Committee on Rules, where it was approved by a unanimous vote, and then on the floor of the House today for the attention of this body.

This is an important matter which strikes across all party lines and affects every individual citizen, man, woman, and child, in this country. As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD], an eminent physician in his own right, has so ably pointed out, this legislation, and the difficulties which may be cured as the result of its adoption, may well affect the future lives of our children and our children's children yet unborn. So I am hoping this resolution will be adopted, and I know of no one who opposes it. On the other hand, there are many Members who are very much interested in this committee being formed and this investigation being made.

I want to take this time, however, to point out that this resolution, in establishing the committee and in setting forth the reasons for its creation and the need for it, carries in the last paragraph on page 4—and I would like anyone interested to carefully read that paragraph—the usual provision giving to the special committee created by the resolution the right and "authority to sit and to act, either as a committee or as a subcommittee, during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary, to employ upon a temporary basis such technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of all agencies in the executive branch of the Government."

Then I wish to call special attention to the last sentence in the resolution, which reads:

> Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

These provisions and these sentences I have read to you are identical with those that are usually included in every resolution setting up a special committee upon which subpena power is conferred. The language is identical with that which was included in the resolution which established the Select House Committee for the Investigation of Lobbying Activities, over which there has been considerable discussion as to the use of the subpena power or the attempted use of the subpena power by the chairman of that committee without consultation with, or the knowledge or consent of the full committee.

Before I took the floor to bring to your attention this matter, as contained in this resolution, which is identical language with that contained in the resolution setting up the lobbying committee, and identical with the language used in the establishment of other special committees, I conferred with the Parliamentarian of this House, who advised me that this language I have quoted does not confer upon the chairman of this special committee the power to issue subpenas except by and with the consent and authority of the majority of the committee, and that the consent and power of the committee can be conferred upon the chairman to issue subpenas only by action of a majority of the committee, spread upon the minutes or records of the committee.

So I want to make it very clear to those of you who have questioned me about this matter that the chairman of this special committee, like the chairman of every other special committee which has been constituted by similar resolutions containing the same language, can act only in an administrative capacity in the issuance of subpenas and the signing of subpenas, and not then unless full and complete authority to issue such subpenas has first been conferred by the full committee through actions spread upon the minutes and the records of the committee.

I hope this statement will for all time fix just what authority is conferred on special committees by the adoption of resolutions such as this, carrying language such as that which I have just mentioned.

I have brought up this matter because there were a number of Members of this House who informed me they would not vote for this resolution, or for any other such resolution, if it would give any arbitrary power to one Member of the House to issue subpenas without consultation with or the authority of the full membership of his committee. I hope we have clarified the situation to the satisfaction of all Members of the House, and that they can all now support this resolution, with that understanding, and with my word as a Member of this House as to the statements which have just been made to me by the Parliamentarian as to what the parliamentary rules are in connection with language of this type appearing in resolutions creating select or special committees.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Am I to understand from what the gentleman said that the power conferred under previous resolutions of this type gave the chairman the right to subpena anybody he wants to?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, no; it never conferred such right. Language such as this has never conferred the right upon the chairman of the committee to issue subpenas unless he was first authorized to do so by action of his committee. Any right that has been so exercised has been exercised, in my opinion, wrongfully, if not illegally. Instead, I have tried to make it clear that the provision, as contained herein, and as contained in the usual resolution setting up a special committee, only gives the chairman the power to act as an administrative official. He is the officer of the committee who signs the subpena, or he designates some other member of the committee to sign it, but he cannot sign any subpena and bind the committee unless he is first authorized or directed to do so by a majority vote of the committee. So the committee at all times controls the issuance of subpenas unless it delegates that authority, by a resolution spread upon the minutes of the committee, to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FELLOWS. And if a subpena is issued without authority of the committee, as the gentleman has indicated, the man who receives that subpena or upon whom it is served and who does not answer it would not be in contempt, would he?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Of course, if the subpena is not issued legally, it is not a legal subpena, in my opinion—if there is any law left in the land, which I believe there is.

Mr. FELLOWS. And he would not be in contempt.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No man could be in contempt for failing to answer a subpena which was not a legal subpena. Of course, any lawyer will agree with that, I think.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman knows that recently the courts have indicated that a minority of any committee, or a minority of a subcommittee has no authority, and in a recent perjury case I believe the courts determined that no person could be held to be guilty of perjury committed before a subcommittee or a committee at which a majority was not present.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes. I think, if I understand the gentleman correctly, what he is indicating is that the courts have held that unless a quorum is present, or a majority of the committee acts, that the action of the committee is not binding and that a minority cannot bind the full committee or act legally; is that correct?

Mr. ELSTON. Yes, and under the same circumstances, would it not follow that a chairman representing himself, a minority of the committee, would have no general authority to issue subpenas unless he was authorized by a resolution.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is exactly what the Parliamentarian advised me as to the rules of the House, and is what I believe the law is. Because a discussion had developed over this particular question in connection with actions of the chairman of the lobbying committee, a number of the Members of the House had advised me they would not, or could not, vote for this resolution unless the matter was clarified. For that reason I went to the Parliamentarian, and I went to other officials of the House for information, and I have attempted to clarify the matter on the floor so that there could be no hesitancy on the part of anyone in voting for this resolution because the power of subpena, by this wording, is conferred upon the full committee and not upon the chairman.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. JACOBS. I was just going to say it depends, of course, upon the language of the resolution.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have just called attention that this was generally the language which has been used in other resolutions and was used in the previous lobby resolutions. Unless the language of a resolution adopted by the House itself specifically confers power directly upon one individual, then this language and rule obtains. This is generally the type of language used in the establishment of a special committee with reference to the granting of power to subpena and compel the production of documents, papers, records and other material.

I hope the situation is clarified so there is no longer any question in the mind of any Member of the House, and that we can all join in support of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this type of resolution. There is an old saying, "Tell me what you eat, and I will tell you what you are." I am certain what we eat is important. There is nothing that people are more interested in more than food. It is the first thing most of us want after our first breath of air.

I became interested in the use of sprays, fertilizers and chemicals about 10 years ago when they first came in general use.

Much research has been carried on in finding new uses for chemicals in food. I sometimes feel that the Agricultural Department works overtime in trying to find substitutes for nature's food.

When I was State director of health in Nebraska, we made some special studies on the use of chemicals in food. Since that time I have been interested in reading some of the work that has been printed by scientists and the amount of experimental work upon the use of chemicals in food. This resolution goes further. It goes to the use of sprays and insecticides and fertilizers as used upon the land on which they are trying to raise more and more crops.

Recently there have been some scientific papers printed which show that certain chemicals in food and minerals in fertilizers and sprays, seem to have a tendency to produce some vascular diseases, kidney diseases, and diseases of the nervous system.

Some experts in animal disease seem to feel that the virus X disease which has been found in cattle, and which was found last year in Nebraska, might come from the use of certain sprays and fertilizers used on the plants which they fed to the animals. This is a very broad resolution. I think it is very necessary because of the use of chemicals substituting animal and vegetable fats in food. As the gentleman from New York reports, there were two bakery companies that used some 10,000,000 pounds of chemicals in bread last year. The Department of Agriculture tells us that if we used 3 percent more wheat in our bread there would be no surplus of wheat today. As I look at the resolution, it goes not only to the chemicals in food, which are several hundred, but it goes to the use of fertilizers used in raising the food. It goes to the use of sprays and insecticides used upon plants to kill certain insects and pests.

It is a good resolution. It is a long continuing one. It is one that cannot be finished in a year's time. It should be a continuing study. There are more and more scientific men printing papers and scientific reports showing that certain diseases in human beings have been increased, not only by the use of chemicals in food but by sprays and fertilizers that are being used.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have been disturbed not only by the things mentioned by the gentleman from Nebraska but particularly by these sprays used in agricultural areas. They use a spray called DDT in connection with the Japanese beetles. I am worried for fear it might affect or destroy the bees, because the bees are responsible for the fertilizing of our fruits and plants. If we destroy the bees we might destroy human life.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. That is correct. Certain human diseases are being increased perhaps because of these mysterious elements.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I hope they go deeply into that matter of sprays.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. HUBER. Why would it not be appropriate for the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture to study this matter, rather than to set up a special committee?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I have no objection, but I think the Committee on Agriculture probably is quite busy on problems particularly affecting agriculture. This goes further. It goes into the public health. It goes into chemicals used in foods, into sprays used, and insecticides, and it goes into the use of fertilizers—what happens to food when we use certain fertilizers and sprays. It is a broad question in which the country is vitally interested.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution. I am glad that a previous speaker paid tribute to the work done upon this subject by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], who is unfortunately unable to be here today. Nothing would please him more than the passage of this resolution. It would be a recognition of his own interest and work over the years. As I say, I support the resolution. I am very glad it has been brought up and I hope it will pass unanimously.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] as she may desire.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope this legislation will be passed. There is so much that is not known about the values in food today, the poisons that may be in them, and just the sheer lack of vital essences. I hope exceedingly there will be no question about the passage of this resolution.

I join with my colleagues in expressing the thought that this will give our colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], the sense of accomplishment in some of the work to which he has given so much energy.

Mr. Speaker, the whole problem of essential values in the food the people of this country buy and eat is one of basic importance to our future. Thirty years of research has shown pretty conclusively that systemic lack of only one needful item, iodine, is directly responsible not only for much of endemic goiter, but also of much feeblemindedness, deaf-mutism and certain other such crippling physical and mental conditions among our people. Animal research has shown that soil deficiencies influence food values and the results to the animals are bad. It would seem equally possible that the same might be true of humans. In addition there has been no adequate research on such questions as: First, the result of the new methods of food preservation on the value of the food when eaten; second, the actual chemical changes caused by tincans and other containers, and so forth.

This resolution seems to bring the hopes some of us have had closer to fruition.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DELANEY: On page 1, strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING FOR THE USE OF THE BUREAU OF OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 651 and ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7873) to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this resolution authorizes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7873) which is reported, I believe unanimously, by the Committee on Public Works. It is a bill to provide for the construction of a building for the use of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance.

I know of no objection to the rule at this time. I am glad to yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, as far as I know there is no objection to the rule on this side.

A bill very similar to the one made in order by this resolution was passed by the House in the Eightieth Congress, but in the closing days it was not acted upon by the other body.

The bill is a good housekeeping measure which would apparently save money because these various bureaus are now housed in rented quarters in Baltimore and elsewhere, paying very large rentals and being in very inefficient quarters.

I hope the resolution is adopted and that the bill itself will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

(Mr. WHITTINGTON asked and was given permission to include in the remarks he proposes to make in general debate on the bill, H. R. 7873, certain tabulations.)

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7873) to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7873, with Mr. HUBER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

H. R. 7873, TO AUTHORIZE CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS FOR THE BUREAU OF OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill, as amended, authorizes and directs the Administrator of General Services to make use of Government-owned land, without exchange of funds, or to acquire by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, the necessary land in or near the District of Columbia for the construction of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, Social Security Administration, Federal Security Agency.

The bill provides authorization for the withdrawal of not to exceed $11,500,000 from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund for the construction of a building or buildings. While the language of the bill is broad enough to authorize the condemnation of land for the building or buildings, it is contemplated that the buildings will be constructed on lands owned by the Government or on lands donated to the Government.

There were hearings on the bill and a number of proposals were made to donate lands near Alexandria and near the District of Columbia. The Government owns land in Suitland and near the Bethesda Hospital. The General Services Administrator, however, would be vested with discretion as to the location of the building or buildings.

In the event that suitable Government-owned or donated lands are not available, it would be necessary for Congress to make an additional authorization for acquiring lands since the present authorization is intended for the construction of the building or buildings. The committee, however, believes that the Administrator should have the power to condemn if it is necessary as such power would probably encourage donations if there were no Government-owned land available.

Hearings were conducted and printed copies of the testimony are available to all who are interested.

The need for a building or buildings was brought to the attention of the committee by the Acting Administrator of the Federal Security Agency and favorable reports were submitted by the Federal Security Administration, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Services Administration as shown by the report of the committee. All agreed that a new building was needed. The difference was as to location. The representatives from Baltimore wanted it in or near Baltimore.

A similar bill, H. R. 3907, was reported favorably by this committee on May 17, 1948, but no action was taken thereon. It also provided that the building was to be located in or near the District of Columbia just as the present bill stipulates. There was an increase in the cost of construction from the time of the estimate submitted in 1947 and the estimate submitted in 1950. The previous bill, introduced in June 1947 and reported on May 17, 1948, authorized $9,500,000. As brought out in the testimony at the hearing, the bill under consideration increases the facilities. Among other additional facilities, there would be provided an extra 40,000 square feet, and there are changes in the walls, with provision for better finishes.

The General Services Administration designs and constructs Federal buildings generally. It is authorized to construct the proposed building or buildings in the pending bill and while the selection or approval of a site is vested in the Administrator, the Federal Security Administration will be consulted and would under the bill be required to approve the plans for both the building and the site.

It was suggested that the building be located in or near the city of Baltimore. An amendment to the pending bill to so provide was rejected by the committee.

There is need for the building, and the committee is satisfied that the building or buildings are long overdue. The committee is further satisfied that economy will be promoted by authorizing its construction.

As stated, the bill does not provide for a direct appropriation. Under existing law the administrative expenses of the Bureau, including the rentals now paid in the city of Baltimore, are paid out of the trust fund. The bill provides for the withdrawal of funds from this trust fund for the construction of the building. The hearings disclose that it will be more economical to construct a new building than to continue to rent quarters.

The Social Security Act was passed in August 1935. Space for record-keeping operations of the old-age insurance program was not available in Washington. Quarters for this unit were obtained in the Candler Building in Baltimore. The other headquarters employees of the Bureau, as well as those of the Social Security Board, remained in Washington.

A building known as the Social Security Building was authorized in 1938 and constructed thereafter. Defense and war needs necessitated the allocation of this building to other occupancy. However, it is now occupied, for the most part, by the Social Security Administration—other than the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance—and other units of the Federal Security Agency.

In 1942 the growth in the units of the Bureau remaining in Washington, plus the acute shortage of space in Washington, resulted in the transfer of these remaining units to Baltimore, where they are housed at the present time.

The growth in employment in the headquarters units of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, the marked expansion of files and records, and the consequent growth in the space occupied and the rents paid are all reflected in the tabulations furnished me by the Deputy Commissioner of the Social Security Administration, marked "Exhibits 1 and 2," which, under unanimous consent previously granted, I attach hereto, as follows:

EXHIBIT 1

Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance—number of employees in Baltimore (excludes field office staff)

Date	Number of employees	Functions and type of work performed
		Division of Accounting Operations	Remainder of central office
Dec. 31, 1936	2,399	Establishment and maintenance of accounts of earnings of persons covered by the program.[1]
June 30, 1937	2,258	....do....
June 30, 1938	4,167	....do....
June 30, 1939	4,464	....do....
June 30, 1940	4,556	....do....
June 30, 1941	4,295	....do....
June 30, 1942[2]	4,620	....do....	Policy making and direction, program research, and field management.[3]
June 30, 1943[2]	4,850	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1944	4,648	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1945	4,688	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1946	4,637	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1947	5,146	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1948	5,282	....do....	Do.
June 30, 1949	4,939	....do....	Do.
Apr. 30, 1950	[4] 4,873	....do....	Do.

[1] The work of maintaining wage records involves extensive use of tabulating machinery, largely performed in a highly routinized manner by a large number of clerical employees of the lower civil-service classification grades.

[2] Reflects move in June, July, and August of 509 central office employees from Washington to make room for war agencies.

[3] Includes the Director's Office with the usual personnel, budgeting, methods, procurement and service staff, legal, claims policy making and program research staffs, and also the units responsible for managing field operations of the Bureau.

[4] Includes Division of Accounting Operations employees, 4,140; remainder of central office employees, 733; total, 4,873.

EXHIBIT 2

Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance—data on rental of space in Baltimore

Fiscal year	Building	Acquired (square feet)	Released (square feet)	Total (square feet)	Occupied at end of year
					Candler Bldg.	American Meter Bldg.	Equitable Bldg.	Southern Supply Bldg.	Wilkes-Barre	Paca-Pratt Bldg.	Fallsway Bldg.	Miller Bldg.
1937	Candler	126,108		126,108	126,108
1938	do	93,671		219,779	219,779
1939	do	33,212		291,096	252,991	38,105
	American Meter	38,105		292,111	254,006	38,105
1941	Candler	1,015
1942	do	12,016
	Equitable	48,209
	Southern	34,728		387,064	266,022	38,105	48,209	34,728
	Supply
1943	Candler	8,239
	Equitable	1,256		396,559	274,261	38,105	49,465	34,728
1945	American Meter		8,729
	Wilkes-Barre	5,400		398,230	274,261	34,376	49,465	34,728	5,400
1947	Equitable	2,253		400,483	274,261	34,376	51,718	34,728	5,400
1948	do	1,876
	American Meter		34,376
	Paca-Pratt	51,600
	Fallsway	40,000		459,583	274,261		53,594	34,728	5,400	51,600	40,000
1949	Candler	389
	Wilkes-Barre	5,352		465,324	274,650		53,594	34,728	10,752	51,600	40,000
1950	Paca-Pratt	78,702
	Fallsway		40,000
	Miller	45,000		549,026	274,650		53,594	34,728	10,752	130,302		45,000
				Annual rental costs, 1950
				$658,180	$281,025		$108,010	$18,000	$18,278	$183,446		$49,421

It is apparent that from the very beginning the lack of proper housing has been a constant problem. As time has gone on these problems have become more serious. A principal concern is the Division of Accounting Operations of the Bureau. This division is responsible for the wage records of some 95,000,000 workers. There are about 4,200 employees in this division and 2,900 of them work in the Candler warehouse building. The others are located in the Southern Supply, the Paca-Pratt, and the Miller buildings, and there is a small unit of 183 people working in Wilkes-Barre.

The Baltimore space is not only badly located but it is badly equipped. Lighting and ventilation are poor, the washrooms are a disgrace. Elevator service is inadequate. There is no restaurant service except that which is improvised by an employee organization. There is a high percentage of female employees, many of whom must work a night shift, which means that they are released around midnight in Baltimore's waterfront district. It is necessary to operate two shifts and, on occasion, three shifts. The elimination of the double shift will result in a savings of at least $300,000 a year. Other economies would amount to about $200,000 annually. This annual savings added to the rental of $658,000 results in an economy totaling more than $1,158,000 annually which amortized would pay for the building in 11 to 13 years.

Proposals were submitted to the Committee for the construction and lease of a building to the Government. Such proposals were rejected. The Government can construct and operate its own buildings more economically and satisfactorily than it can lease buildings. It is less expensive as taxes are saved. It is more flexible and satisfactory.

As shown by the report of the Committee, the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds consisting of Mr. ANGELL, Mr. MACK of Washington, and Mr. PICKETT visited the Candler Building in Baltimore 2 years ago. The Members reported unanimously that the building was unsuitable and unfit and recommended the construction of a new building as the present quarters are not only inadequate but wholly unsatisfactory.

The building should be located in or near the District of Columbia. A building in Baltimore would be better than no building. The activity to be housed in the building is national and should be located in Washington or vicinity. It is a typical departmental activity. It is important for good administration that these activities be located in close proximity to the headquarters of the Social Security Administration and the Federal Security Agency.

Such a location is necessary because of the frequent contacts with other Government agencies located in Washington, including the Bureau of Internal Revenue which collects the social-security taxes. The Bureau has frequent occasion also to consult the disbursing office of the Treasury, the Veterans' Administration, the Maritime Commission, the Bureau of the Census, the Agriculture and Labor Departments, including the service agencies such as the Bureau of the Budget, the General Services Administration, the Civil Service Commission, and the General Accounting Office.

The statistical records of the Bureau are of great value to other Government agencies. The location, therefore, should be close to these other agencies.

It was urged that the removal from Baltimore to Washington or vicinity would be inconvenient to many employees who have acquired homes. During the war and in preparing for war, a number of Government agencies were transferred to other cities. The transfer from Washington to those cities involved inconvenience. Some of them have been returned to Washington. This also involved inconvenience. It is not a question of payrolls for any community or city. The question is the convenience of the people of the United States. The question is to provide adequate and convenient offices for the transaction of public business. Moreover, no one city has a monopoly on civil service employees. They come from all over the country. Many Members of Congress have urged that this Government unit be returned to Washington. Under the terms of the bill, the building may be located between Washington and Baltimore. It must, however, be near the District of Columbia. Such a provision is sound.

The House has passed and the Senate is now considering H. R. 6000, the effect of which would be to add many responsibilities to the Bureau. The program is already large. An adequate building, located in or near the District of Columbia, which will probably take 2 years to construct, with ample time for relocation of the employees, is in the public interest.

The Administrator of the General Services and the officials of the Social Security Administration are human. So are the Members of Congress. They are sympathetic with employees who leave home and come to Washington and then go back home. They are sympathetic with any employees who have bought homes in Baltimore, but they can probably sell their homes for what similar homes will cost them in Washington. There is no testimony to show that housing is more difficult in Washington than it is in Baltimore or that the cost of housing is higher.

Again, the gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. FALLON] and other Members from the Baltimore area are interested in the building remaining near Baltimore, but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BEALL], who is also a member of the Public Works Committee, is interested in the building being near the District of Columbia in Montgomery County. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is interested in the building being in Virginia. The committee felt that the Administrator of General Services and the Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, after the appropriation was made would be in better position to select a site that would be fair to the public and other employees, but the committee insisted that the site should be in or near the District of Columbia. A site near Laurel, Md., belongs to the Government. It would be between Washington and Baltimore. The Government owns a site near Bethesda. The Government owns 425 acres of land in Suitland. Owners offer to donate lands but the Government should be careful to accept donations. There must be adequate utilities. The cost of the site is far less than the cost of the building. It may be that a reduction in the cost of construction would enable the building to be constructed with $11,500,000, and have funds from this amount to acquire a site.

The Public Works Committee was advised that the National Security Council, of which Mr. Stuart Symington is the head, had not formulated a policy with respect to the location of offices in the future in Washington or other large cities. Pending the formulation of such a policy, while the committee would like to have had a recommendation from the Administrator of General Services and the Federal Security Administrator as to the site, in the circumstances, the committee left to them the selection of the site.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKETT. I heard the chairman of my committee say a moment ago that this bill provides for the acquisition of land already owned by the Government, or the acquisition of land by a donation, upon which this building might be constructed.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman will pardon me. This bill provides that the Administrator of General Services shall have the power to acquire land, not land already owned by the Government, or to use land already owned by the Government or acquired by donation, as the gentleman well knows. The gentleman will pardon me for making that correction.

Mr. PICKETT. Yes. I wanted to be sure I did not misunderstand the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have given the gentleman the correct information. I say then, to emphasize, that this building is intended to be constructed on land presently owned by the Government or on land that may be donated to the Government. We felt that to give the Administrator the right to acquire land would assist him in his bargaining powers, because there appeared before the committee citizens from Alexandria, Silver Spring, and other localities that wanted to make a donation of land. However, it is desirable that there be a location in reach of the other agencies and that is adequate. For that reason, we retained the provision here that would provide for acquiring land. It is fair to say that the authorization of $11,500,000 would contemplate that if it is necessary for the Government to acquire a site, the Administrator will have to come back and get additional legislation so that that site may be approved.

Mr. PICKETT. I understand, then, that notwithstanding the language that is in the face of the bill itself, it is the intention of the committee that there shall be no land purchased by the authorities who are to administer this program until they come back to Congress and show the necessity therefor and get permission therefor.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is the intent of the committee. I may also add that the bill we reported 2 years ago carried with it an authorization of $9,500,000, and it embraced the same language, but it was contemplated in the bill it should be located on Government-owned property, as I recall at Suitland. In order to clarify the matter, while the Administrator probably has the right to accept a donation, we have affirmatively provided for a donation. So in all the circumstances, in the general public interest, there is no dissent from the proposition that a building for this agency is needed, that the authorization will result in economy to the fund, and that in the 2 or 3 years that will elapse in the construction of the building there will be adequate opportunity for these 4,000 employes, some of whom own homes in Baltimore, according to the testimony before our committee, to readjust themselves and find homes in or near Washington.

I trust that the bill will be promptly passed, or reported.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there remains very little to be said that has not already been said by our able and distinguished chairman in regard to this project. There is no controversy except the question as to where this building will be located. Under the terms of this bill, we leave that question to the agency that will administer the law.

The Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance does not have a home. As has already been testified to, they are now located in a rented building in the city of Baltimore some 38 or 40 miles from Washington. They need a home. It was shown beyond any reasonable doubt that it is necessary that they have a building of their own. The only restriction in this bill as to where it shall be located is that it shall be in or near the District of Columbia.

The administration of this law should be the first consideration, for the welfare of the entire country, and the desire and wish of the agency that administers the law should be the second consideration. It seemed to the committee that they should have the right to say where this building should be located, for the good of all.

The money for the building, of course, will not come out of the Federal Treasury. It comes out of the funds belonging to the old-age and survivors insurance, as has already been shown. The report of the committee is practically unanimous. May I say that in their eagerness to obtain the location of this new building several citizens came before us and offered land to the Government without cost. However, the committee believed that because of the various offers and the fact the Government already owns land in and near the District of Columbia which might be available, the suggestion was carried out in the proposed legislation that the agency itself should determine where to locate this new building.

Mr. Chairman, the bill ought to pass. It ought to be passed without a dissenting vote, because it is a good-housekeeping bill. It is really an economy measure when one considers the rent we are now paying in the city of Baltimore and when one considers the additional cost to the agency as a result of the inconvenience and inefficiency occasioned in its present quarters in the administration of the law itself. When we consider those two things, it must be apparent to everybody that the amount of $11,500,000, which is the estimated cost of a new building, will be a good investment on the part of the agency. It will amortize itself at least within 15 years. I am in favor of the bill and hope it passes without a dissenting vote.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON].

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my distinguished chairman and our distinguished ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], as to the need for this new home for the Social Security Agency. I guess I am more familiar with the location of the facilities they have there than most any Member of the House. I believe they need a new building for many reasons, as stated by the chairman. I believe that the efficiency which can be attained by a new building would, over a period of time, more than offset the expenditure.

However, I do disagree on one point, and that is on moving the location of this building into the District of Columbia or within the immediate area. My reason is more or less a human reason. We have taken into consideration the cost, the type of construction, and the efficiency in many ways, but we have not taken into consideration the human equation. Fourteen years ago this department was organized in Baltimore with a very few employees. It has grown now to the point where they have 5,000 employees, most of them recruited from Baltimore.

As you know, many of you are familiar with the Social Security Agency, the type of employee is of low grade. I do not mean the character; I mean according to our social security records. These people cannot afford to uproot themselves and move into an area where there is a higher cost of living and higher rental expenses. It would be necessary, if this agency were moved into Suitland, or some place near Washington, where they would have to commute from Baltimore, that they would have a 30- or 45-minute trip to the train station, then they would have a 45-minute period of traveling on the train, and when they reached their destination in Washington it would be necessary for them to go to Suitland, which is another 40 minutes, which altogether means 2 hours every morning in commuting time, and 2 hours to go back home in the evening.

Anybody who would have to spend that much time to and from his job is going to have a decreased efficiency, to the point where they might be separated from Government service or the Government will lose in that part of the efficiency.

They have another alternative, and that would be to resign their positions and look for work in Baltimore. As many of you know, we are already having our problems in most of the large cities with unemployment. Other than that, they would have to move to the Washington area, which is already overcrowded. Many of those people, after 13 or 14 years, are very deeply rooted as citizens of Baltimore. They have bought homes and are raising families and sending them to school in Baltimore. It would be necessary for Washington to absorb about 15,000 people, figuring three to a family, and it would be necessary to provide schools for those children. I doubt very much if it could be done under the conditions that now exist.

I questioned an official of the Social Security Agency and asked many questions in regard to why the agency should be located in Washington. He said, "We have many conferences and it would save time." I asked him how many people were involved in those conferences, and he said a very small number. So you are just making it convenient for less than a hundred people at the cost of 4,900 people. So I am offering the same amendment that I offered in committee, that in designating the location of this property it be designated in the Baltimore area.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK].

OASI ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Mr. MACK of Washington. Mr. Chairman, when a bill very similar to that which is now under consideration was before the Public Works Committee of the Eightieth Congress, I, at first, was inclined to oppose it.

I regarded some of the proposals which were then being advanced by the Social Security Administration as being highly impractical and visionary. I suspected that agency's request for a new office building might be also. I felt that perhaps these bureaucrats, by this legislation, were merely seeking to obtain more comfortable and luxurious quarters for themselves.

Also, I was disinclined, due to the financial condition of the country to spend money for any building which we could possibly get along without.

At that time I was named by the then chairman of the Public Works Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], on a special committee of four members to make a special study of the need for or lack of need for a new accounting building in Baltimore for the Social Security Agency. The other members of this special committee were the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT], and the then Member of Congress, Mr. Coffin, of Michigan.

As we left for Baltimore, I doubt if any of the four members of this committee was any more convinced than I was that there was any great need for this new building.

The accounting offices of OASI were then, and still are, housed in a 9- or 10-story structure in the waterfront warehouse district of Baltimore, known as the Candler Building.

The Candler is not an office building. It is a warehouse and loft building. It was never intended to house office workers. It is noisy and dirty, illy lighted and illy ventilated, and totally unsuitable and inadequate both in size and arrangement for the purposes for which it was and is now being used. All of these factors make it a most undesirable place to work and one that contributes to inefficiency and unnecessary costs of operation.

I am quite sure that the directors of any private insurance company would not long tolerate conditions, for any building for which they were responsible, that are as bad as those in the Baltimore OASI accounting offices, to continue longer than necessary.

Commissioner W. E. Reynolds, of the Public Buildings Administration, in commenting on this building, told the committee hearings in May 1948 that—

> It is one of the worst conditions we have in the Federal establishment anywhere in the United States.

I am sure all four members of the special committee who inspected the property will concur in saying that Commissioner Reynolds' statement was no exaggeration.

There is ample money in the old-age insurance reserve fund to permit this expenditure of $11,500,000 for a new accounting office. This reserve fund on May 30 of this year contained a reserve of $12,413,200,000. This fund is the difference between what the OASI has collected in 2-percent withholding taxes from employees and employers and the amount paid out in benefits to persons on OASI pensions.

This fund is still growing by leaps and bounds. Last year's collections from a 2-percent withholding tax were $1,816,000,000, while pay-outs were $721,400,000. In short, the income of this fund last year was more than a billion dollars larger than the fund's expenditures.

Even when benefits are increased by about 80 percent, as is proposed by the bill H. R. 6000, now under consideration, the reserve fund still will grow in size for some years since on last January 1, the withholding tax to support this fund was increased from 2 to 3 percent.

If we do not authorize this $11,500,000 for the construction of a new accounting office, the old-age and survivors insurance department must continue to occupy inadequate and unsatisfactory rental quarters. The annual rental on these is $645,762. The erection of a new building will save this $645,762 rental charge.

But the savings in rentals are not the only ones that will be made possible by a new building. Large savings will be obtained from the greater efficiency that will be secured from conducting operations in a new modern office building rather than in carrying these on in a loft or warehouse structure that was never intended for office purposes.

Because of the inadequate size of the building space available it is necessary to operate the accounting office crew on a two-shift basis. The night shift is paid a 10 percent wage differential above that paid day workers. The new building, by providing adequate space for a one shift operation will save $300,000 a year in wage costs.

Also because of the two-shift operation, it is necessary to employ extra supervisors and guards and this adds another $151,000 to the costs of the present operation. This expense of $151,000 would be eliminated if a new building is constructed.

Furthermore, light and heating costs are more in the present building than they would be in a new one and the cost of char forces also are greater. These extra costs are estimated by the department at $98,000 a year.

The Department estimates that the savings from elimination of the night force, by lessening the need for a double force of supervisors and by cutting heating and lighting and guard and char services costs that total savings of $509,000 annually can be made in addition to the saving of $645,762 in rents.

The total savings in rent and from more efficient operations will exceed $1,100,000 a year if this new building is provided. These savings will make it possible for this building to pay for itself in approximately 14 years, including the cost of the building plus interest on the investment during the period the building is in use.

These facts, I think, prove quite convincingly that a new building for Old-Age and Survivors Insurance is not only needed, but also that the $11,500,000 spent on its construction will be a good investment.

I hope the bill will pass and construction of the new building will start at the earliest possible moment. Certainly no private company would continue to tolerate operation of its accounting offices in a building so unsuitable and inadequate as are provided by the present OASI rental quarters in Baltimore.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

In answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Baltimore [Mr. FALLON], I simply wish to say and have the RECORD show that regardless of the reasons he advances why this building should be located in Baltimore, the public interest comes first; and when the public interest is considered it seems to me that the judgment of the committee was wise when it specified that the new building should be erected in or near the District of Columbia. I think that decision was a proper one, and I hope the House will sustain the committee when the issue is reached.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. FALLON. The gentleman will remember that I did not insist that the building remain in the city of Baltimore for many reasons; among others, because most of the large corporations and manufacturers are trying to move to the outskirts of Baltimore to avoid the congestion of the city and to secure more desirable daylight locations on the outside of the city.

My second reason for offering the amendment, as I explained before, and as I will explain when I offer it today is that it should not be in any large city but that it should be in an area where there is less chance of its being destroyed in wartime by being in a target area such as Baltimore and Washington may be designated. It should be out of that congested area but accessible to Baltimore so that these people would not have to move their homes into an already crowded section like Washington.

Mr. DONDERO. I appreciate the gentleman's comment and I do remember that two sites were offered to the Government in or near the Baltimore area.

Mr. FALLON. That is right, but I did not offer the sites.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Permit me to state with respect now to the distance from here to Suitland, there is a magnificent parkway from here to Suitland, and after you cross the Anacostia River bridge it takes but a matter of 7 or 8 minutes to reach Suitland. The testimony showed that there were sites available within a 10 or 15 minutes drive from Washington in Silver Spring, and likewise near Alexandria. The testimony further showed that there was a desirable tract of land on the recently authorized Baltimore-Washington Parkway that would be available near Laurel.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. BEALL. Is it not a fact that the Naval Ordnance Laboratory owns several hundred acres out near Silver Spring just off Georgia Avenue? I think that is only about 5 miles from the Capitol.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes, and I think two sites in that area were offered to the committee by citizens of that area.

Mr. BEALL. In addition to that, the Government owns several hundred acres out in Montgomery County and its immediate vicinity.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes, between here and Baltimore.

Mr. BEALL. No; I mean in the vicinity of Silver Spring.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. BEALL. In Montgomery County. The Naval Ordnance Laboratory is about 5 miles from the Capitol here.

Mr. DONDERO. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the subcommittee that went to Baltimore during the Eightieth Congress to look over the existing office space available in the Candler Building, I would like to add what additional weight my remarks may give to the words of our colleague from Washington [Mr. MACK], demonstrating the absolute essentiality of getting the people who handle the facilities in the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Bureau out of their present quarters and into a building that is adequate to take care of the work that they must prosecute in order to do a good job for the agency. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK] has very graphically described the conditions we found to exist over there.

There is one matter I think he overlooked, and that is the structure of the Candler Building that is now being used is such that to get from certain floors of the building to other floors you have to go up or down a few floors, as the case might be, and transfer to another elevator before reaching the desired destination. In an office building requiring efficient management, that is an intolerable situation. Of course, the building was a warehouse when it was taken over for the purpose it is now being used. I am sure that in the renovation of that building they did the best job they could. It is a fine commentary on the lack of efficiency in Government agencies for the people who work in the Candler Building to have to use that method to go back and forth to confer with each other even within the building in which they are housed to do their labor.

There is an absolute necessity for the construction of a new building. This bill does not call for the expenditure of one single tax dollar from the United States Treasury. The money will come from the trust fund of the agency which will occupy the building to be constructed. A large annual saving below what is now being paid out of that fund for rent will result in increasing the credit to the trust fund in a few years.

I am not entirely satisfied with the argument about where this building is going to be located. I would like to know right now where the agency in charge of choosing the site is going to put it. During the course of the hearings I raised that question with Mr. Reynolds, Commissioner of Public Buildings. This issue has been before the Congress on previous occasions and has been talked about for a number of years. Certainly somebody ought to have come up with an idea of where they want to put it. Certainly with all the land the United States Government owns in the vicinity of the District of Columbia and with all of the available spots that have been offered to the Congress as places where it could be constructed when the land is donated, they ought to have been able to pick out some place, come in and say to the committee and this Congress, "We are going to locate the building there and we ask for your approval of the legislation." I feel that way for more than one reason. In the first place, Congress ought to know what it is doing when it does something, but in an instance of this kind it is absolutely impossible because there is not a Member of this House that has the time, if he had the power, to go out and locate the best place to put a building and then come back and convince the other 434 Members that it ought to go to that place. But, the agency in charge here should tell us where it ought to go, and then let us pass upon the question of whether it suits the Congress or not, by writing a definite location into this bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The members of the committee thought generally as the gentleman did, but it is fair to say that at present the General Services Administration and the other agencies of the Government are rather subject to a directive of the over-all security agency of which Mr. Stewart Symington is Administrator, with respect to additional buildings in Washington, Baltimore, or any other city, and we thought that the very best that could be done was to follow the language of the bill reported in the Eightieth Congress and the language of the bill reported in this session here that it should be on Government-owned land or on land donated to the Government.

Mr. PICKETT. I would like to say this, that I know of no reason why the National Resources Board, to which my chairman has referred, cannot be amenable to a law passed by Congress, and if we write in this piece of legislation where this building is to be constructed, then the Resources Board cannot have a whole lot to say about it. I quite agree with my chairman that the committee, of which I am a member, has done the very best it can do under the circumstances, and my remarks are not to be understood as being directed against the committee, of which he is chairman. My remarks are to be understood as being directed at the Resources Board, the General Services Administration, and the others that have had more than 2 years to pick the site where they want to put the building. With hundreds of acres already owned by the Government in this area, they have not been able to decide it yet.

Now then, there is a large tract of land at Suitland that has been referred to in this discussion. As I recall, there is something over 400 acres of land out there, 425 acres to be exact, that is not now being used for any purpose. It was once thought that this building would be located at Suitland on land already owned by the Government. Well, it appears that the Resources Board does not think that it is best for the security of the area for it to go there; at least, it has not decided that it is. But, if it is not safe to put this kind of a structure at Suitland or some other place where we already own the land in the area, then we ought not to put any other kind of a building in that same spot. We ought to sell all that 425 acres to somebody who wants to make use of it in private industry. I think it is high time for them to give a little thought and make up their minds about using the land we already own on which to construct the necessary public buildings or whether we are just going to keep it and let it lie idle.

Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be passed, but the next time some Government agency, bureau or commission comes before the committee of which I have the privilege of being a member and wants authority to construct a building, I want them to pick out the site before they come down, tell me where they want to put it, and then I can make a definite decision.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. DONDERO. Neither have I, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the necessary land in or near the District of Columbia for the construction of a suitable building or buildings, for the use of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, Social Security Administration, Federal Security Agency, and to prepare plans for such building or buildings and, by contract or otherwise, to construct and equip such building or buildings. The selection of the land to be acquired, and the plans for such building or buildings shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Security Administrator. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Federal Security Agency from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $11,500,000, for the purposes of this act. The sums so appropriated may be transferred to the General Services Administration for the purposes of this act, including any amount determined by the Administrator to be necessary for the payment of salaries and expenses of personnel engaged in the preparation of plans and specifications, field supervision, and general office expenses. Funds so transferred may be consolidated on the books of the Treasury Department in a special account for direct expenditure in the prosecution of said work, and the Administrator is authorized to prepare drawings and specifications for such building or buildings prior to the approval by the Attorney General of the title to the site thereof.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after "directed", insert "to make use of Government-owned land without exchange of funds or."

Page 1, line 5, after "condemnation,", insert "donation."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "acquired" and insert "used."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FALLON: On page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out "or near the District of Columbia" and insert in lieu thereof "the close vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Md."

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, there is very little to add to what I have already said in the general debate, except to reiterate that this problem is a human problem as well as a problem of efficiency in the Federal Government. There has been no difference of opinion between the chairman or any other members and me in regard to the need for this building. There is a definite need for it, and it was outlined by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MACK] who made the inspection. Everything they said was true. Since then I may say there is an additional need because of the congestion that is ever increasing in that area.

However, I believe consideration should also be given to the 4,900 employees who will be uprooted from the city of Baltimore and brought over to the city of Washington. The reasons I outlined were first, the expense. The second, was the decrease in the efficiency of these people if they are caused to use 4 hours of their day in commuting. The other reason was that 13 or 14 years ago these people purchased homes in Baltimore City. At that time, as you know, real-estate values were down, and down very low. If it were necessary for them to move today it would be necessary for them to come into a high-priced area, such as the Washington area, and many of these people cannot afford it because the average salary is less than $3,000 a year.

I have been told by Mr. Mitchell that it is necessary to be near the city of Washington because of the many conferences they must have between the heads of the Agency in Baltimore and the heads of the Agency in Washington. I asked how many people were entailed in that particular group, and he said a very few. So it is just a question whether the people who make the policy of the Agency can for their convenience move 4,900 people into the city of Washington.

It was brought out by the chairman that for the safety of the records of this particular organization it might be necessary to locate it outside of Washington some place. For the same reason it would be necessary to locate it outside of Baltimore some place.

But I feel in the selection of this land every consideration should be given to these 4,900 people who will be affected by this move. I ask the committee to please see the wisdom of the amendment and with the thought of these humans in their heart support this amendment.

Mr. BOLTON of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] because to move the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance from Baltimore to Washington would cause unnecessary hardships and distress to a great majority of approximately 5,000 Government employees now employed by this Bureau, who would necessarily be compelled to sever their connection with the Government and look for a job elsewhere because they could not possibly afford the expense of commuting from Baltimore to Washington.

I agree with the comments noted in the hearing before the committee that the present quarters of this Bureau in Baltimore are not only inadequate, unduly expensive, dirty, and unsanitary, creating an over-all picture tending to inefficient working environment, but that the location of the building itself, in the water-front section of Baltimore, surrounded by wholesale markets, second-rate saloons, and cheap boarding houses, is undesirable for many reasons, and particularly from the standpoint of safety for young women employees going to and from daily work at all hours of the day and night.

Therefore, a new building in another location in Baltimore designed especially to meet the requirements of the Bureau, is needed and I would recommend that such an improvement is imperative.

But what I do not understand nor agree with is the attempt to move the Bureau from Baltimore to a location in or near the District of Columbia.

Many good and desirable locations are available in Baltimore, where necessary public utilities are already installed, where this building could be located, and if erected in Baltimore would obviate the necessity of disturbing the living and economic conditions of 4,723 employees and their families.

I feel it is difficult to dispute the contention that if these employees were working in a modern structure in Baltimore, they could render just as efficient service as they could in Washington, and certainly the Bureau would have a much larger potential reservoir of manpower in Baltimore to draw from than they could find in the vicinity of Washington.

This Bureau has now been located in Baltimore nearly 14 years. Naturally, during this long period the employees have been associated with civic groups, churches, schools, social and other activities.

Do you think it fair to ask this large group of employees to change their whole environment overnight?

Many of them have purchased homes and become part of the neighborhood in which they live—their children attending the public or private schools, as the case may be. Do you think that you should ask such a large segment of our society, particularly a group that can be classed in the moderate-income group, to sacrifice their homes in fine communities and move to a section where they can ill afford to pay a higher shelter cost?

Some of these employees bought their homes at a price as low as $4,000 to $5,000 back in 1937 and 1938 and they are comfortably situated. I say to you, can they get themselves as well situated if they are called upon to locate elsewhere, as has been suggested?

The chairman of the committee suggested they would have 2 or 3 years to prepare themselves for this change, but I say to you that when employees are only making $2,500 a year, it is going to be impossible for them to move from their present location into the territory of Washington because of the very decided increase in shelter rent they are going to be called upon to pay.

One of the outcries around Washington has been the housing shortage. Why aggravate this situation by attempting to move a group of 5,000 families or thereabouts, already comfortably housed in Baltimore.

Remember, we are dealing with nearly 5,000 employees whose average income is $3,000 per year, the great majority making around $2,500. Therefore, commuting by the majority of these employees to a location like Suitland or other suggested location in and around Washington would be impossible because the fare to Washington would cost them at least $19.95 per month, together with the carfare to Suitland from Washington of 36 cents per day. You can readily see that this is a prohibitive cost of $27.15 per month for this group of employees, to say nothing of 4 hours consumed daily going to and from work. I say prohibitive, because no one can sustain a family on $2,500 to $3,000 per annum today and take on an extra burden of $27 per month. If the building were built anywhere in or around Washington the transportation costs would be almost the same.

If this Bureau were moved to Washington it would mean that the great majority of these employees would necessarily be compelled to sever their relations with the Bureau and seek employment elsewhere. I ask you, do you think this is fair to this class of our employees?

You must also remember that this Bureau is one of the large employers of labor in Baltimore, and to suddenly throw 5,000 people on the labor market in our city would create a condition for this type of employees that may prove quite distressing.

This Bureau can operate just as efficiently in Baltimore as it can elsewhere, and certainly, when we take into consideration the experienced help necessary to man the Bureau, you cannot escape the conclusion that it can operate more efficiently in Baltimore than elsewhere under the circumstances.

So, in conclusion, may I suggest favorable consideration of this amendment—

First. Because of the inconvenience, expense, and possible actual distress that would be sustained by a great majority of these employees, with low incomes of approximately $2,500 to $3,000 per annum, who would necessarily be dislocated economically and socially, to their extreme disadvantage.

Second. It is obvious that the Bureau would be able to operate more efficiently in Baltimore because of the availability of experienced help.

Third. Because of the large reservoir of manpower to draw from around Baltimore in comparison with other suggested locations.

Fourth. Because there is nothing to be gained on the part of the Government in moving this Department to locations around Washington.

Fifth. As long as there is a possibility of war, it does seem the part of wisdom to locate all such bureaus outside the environs of Washington whenever and wherever possible because of civilian defense and other obvious reasons, such as housing and shelter programs for those who will necessarily be compelled to live near Washington in the event of hostilities.

Sixth. Because there is no good reason offered why this Bureau should be moved from Baltimore to Washington.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as was stated in the opening argument, the amendment now proposed was that proposed in the committee and overwhelmingly rejected. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] are both members of the Public Works Committee. We hold them in high esteem. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] wants the building located in the vicinity of Baltimore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BEALL] wants it in or near the District of Columbia.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] stated he was advised that about 100 top officials would be interested. I have a statement here. I speak by the record. I asked Mr. Mitchell to give me a statement in writing, as to why the building should be in or near the District of Columbia. I followed the reasons given. I also speak from page 76 of the hearings. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] asked Mr. Mitchell how many employees there were in the category where these conferences were held. Mr. Mitchell said a relatively small number—a comparatively small number to the 5,000. I am sure that in advising the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] that 100 persons would be interested he had in mind the category referred to on said page.

But, frankly, as I stated in the beginning, the question of the national interest is involved. All Members of Congress are entitled to be considered when it comes to employing these persons. At present they are limited to Baltimore. Under the Civil Service Act they are divided among the States. If it is practicable that division should be continued. We do not know how many own homes. There was no testimony before our committee. There was testimony that some owned homes. There was testimony that some lived in Washington.

Two years ago we reported a bill that this building should be located in or near the District of Columbia. That is the exact language we use today. We can reach Suitland, Md., where you have the Census buildings and other important buildings, in 10 minutes. The new highway from Washington to Baltimore will reach land owned by the Government within 10 minutes. If those people desire to continue to live in Baltimore, they could reach the site in a short time when the new parkway is constructed. They could reach land in or near Silver Spring or Alexandria in 10 or 15 minutes from the Capital.

I repeat, there is no more shortage of housing in Washington than there is in Baltimore, according to the testimony before the committee. This is not a new question. It is a question that arose when we brought back the departments from Kansas City, which were sent there during the war; when we brought back departments from other cities, which were located there during the war. It is not the question of a payroll. The question is the general public interest. I asked the Social Security Administrator to tell me what agencies were contacted. I followed him in listing the agencies that should be in contact with the old-age and survivors' insurance. When Members of the House or Senate call up, we ought not have to wait until they can communicate with Baltimore. The Internal Revenue Department has to contact them to collect amounts due in taxes. This agency should be close by.

There are other agencies as I have said: The Disbursing Office of the Treasury, the Veterans' Administration, the Maritime Commission, the Bureau of the Census, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, and other agencies, including the General Services Administration, the Civil Service Commission, and the General Accounting Office. Then in addition Members of Congress instead of those in Baltimore or in Cumberland or some other place have to be considered in the allocation of these employees. There were 2,000 employees when it was started in Baltimore. The number was stepped up during the forties, and it may be stepped up now to 7,500 if H. R. 6000 now pending in the Senate should become law.

In all of the circumstances the committee, feeling most kindly, as all of us do toward the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON], and toward the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BEALL], said to them that under the terms of this bill the Government owning land between here and Baltimore on or near the proposed Baltimore-Washington Parkway, the Government owning land in the District, and the Government owning land in Montgomery County, Md., nearby, that we have provided in this bill that this building shall be located in or near the District of Columbia. We had a closed session of the Public Works Committee. We were advised that at the present time the agency of which Mr. Symington is the chairman having to do with further construction in all great cities was not prepared to make a report. It may be a year before this appropriation is available and 2 years before the building is constructed.

In the public interest I ask that this amendment be defeated in the House as it was defeated in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired, all time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FALLON: After the word "land" in line 6 on page 1, strike out the words "in or near the District of Columbia" and insert in lieu thereof "between the District of Columbia and Baltimore City, Md."

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state my reasons for offering this amendment, as many of you will remember, just a short period ago, 3 or 4 weeks, we had a bill that was passed by the House giving the Government the right to construct a new parkway from the District of Columbia to Fort Meade. It was brought out during debate on that bill that along that highway the Government owned 52 square miles of land. My reason for offering this amendment and taking the building out of the Washington area is because nobody has yet defined just what distance is embraced by the word "area," either from Washington or from Baltimore. If it be Stuart Symington's judgment that 15 or 20 miles were within the area, then the agencies would have a much wider latitude in selecting the property.

Now, getting back to the national interest phase of this bill, all the States of the Union have their accounting done at this agency. It is no closer to California located 5 miles from Washington than it would be 5 miles from Baltimore.

Just a few short years ago, 2 years, I believe, to be correct, this agency was negotiating for a building in Baltimore; they were negotiating to buy and establish this agency in the suburbs of Baltimore, the northern end, which is further away from Washington. My understanding is that they would have purchased the building known as the Maryland Casualty Building could they have agreed on a price with the Maryland Casualty Co., but the Maryland Casualty Co. would have been forced to build another building for its own use, and they did not get together on the matter of price.

I am not in favor of this limitation. I submit that if the bill is changed as suggested in my amendment that the departments would have a wider latitude in which to choose a site. The Government already owns 52 square miles along the site of the Baltimore-Washington parkway. Assuredly within this vast area they could select a site that would be on an expressway and more accessible than it would be in the city of Washington or at Suitland. So, in my judgment, this language will really improve the bill and give the agency a much wider latitude in which to select its site.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON].

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Maryland is very appropriate from his standpoint, but it restricts very drastically the latitude allowed the agency which shall select this site. As I understand it, under the amendment the agency is restricted to the selection of a site between Washington and Baltimore.

Numerous sites have been offered to this committee free, gratis, for nothing, in the immediate vicinity of the District of Columbia that the agency should have the opportunity and the privilege of considering so as to finally select the best site there is. Two or three sites have been offered on the Virginia side of the river. One of these sites is within 5 minutes of any one of the bridges across the Potomac River. In other words, it is at the very doorstep of every other Federal agency in the District of Columbia. Yet, if this amendment were adopted the agency would be prohibited from considering any of those sites. In the same way we have several sites offered in the area of Maryland known as Silver Spring, some of them probably very suitable. This amendment would prohibit the agency from even considering the desirability of those sites.

The bill as framed is fair to all sides, the bill as framed gives the agency full authority to look over all of the sites that have been offered and to adapt the one that is most suitable for its purpose. I hope that this restrictive amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no objection on my part to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] thinking about this matter as he does, but I do wish to call his attention to the fact that his amendment definitely restricts the powers that be in the choosing of a location for this building because they would be limited to a very definite area.

For his information and for the information of the members of the committee there are other locations that are equally accessible to Baltimore that may be used. For instance, there is a highway known as Columbia Pike, on which the Naval Ordnance Laboratory is located, a direct road from Washington to Baltimore, used by a great many people. If the Department should decide to go out there the road could not be used or that particular location could not be used under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the pending amendment will be rejected.

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEALL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FALLON. The gentleman realizes that in offering this amendment and my other amendment I have not selected any particular site. The only purpose of my offering the amendment is to make this building convenient to the people who are already with this agency.

Mr. BEALL. The gentleman is familiar with the Columbia Pike. It runs to Ellicott City and if the building were situated out there it would be equally convenient to Baltimore. The road is not nearly as heavily traveled and would be more accessible to people in northwest Baltimore than the Baltimore-Washington Highway.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to and that the Department will be given the right to choose its own location.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments to the bill close in 5 minutes, and that that time be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, this is virtually the same amendment that has been overwhelmingly defeated not only by the Committee on Public Works, but by this Committee. As I stated, we feel most kindly toward our devoted friends, the gentlemen from Maryland [Mr. BEALL and Mr. FALLON], both of whom are members of our committee, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. We followed the language of the bill of 2 years ago. After considering this bill for many weeks, we could not improve on the language "in or near the District of Columbia" in fairness to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] where sites that were pronounced to be desirable were offered in Virginia, and in fairness to the gentlemen from Maryland [Mr. BEALL and Mr. FALLON] where sites were offered in Montgomery County and elsewhere that I am sure are desirable, and in accordance with the terms of this bill where we provide that donations might be accepted. But, we do urge that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON] be defeated because, according to the testimony before the committee, the one site between Washington and Baltimore was in the vicinity of Laurel, near the proposed Baltimore Parkway, and the Government owns that, just as the Government owns land in the vicinity of Bethesda and just as the Government owns land out here that you reach in 10 or 12 minutes from the Capitol over that magnificent parkway in Suitland, near Andrews Field, near the buildings of the Department of the Census. In all the circumstances, in view of the fact that the committee gave consideration to this amendment and to the other views advocated by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON], keeping in mind that no one knows how many of those people own their homes, whether rents are higher or lower than in Washington, keeping in mind that there may be 2,000 more who are to acquire homes, should they not be given the opportunity to acquire them where they will give the best service to all of the Members of the House and of the Senate? I repeat that in the general interest, aside from payroll, aside from the interest of any Member and in fairness to all the Members of Congress, the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The consideration of this bill brings to my mind memories of 15 years ago when I was a member of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means that conducted hearings on the Social Security Act and considered it and drafted it and recommended it to the full Committee on Ways and Means. The Social Security Act has brought great benefits to the people of America. I remember well then the argument made against it that it was socialistic. If anything, it is sound, dynamic democracy functioning in these days. I remember well the insurance companies were fearful that it would destroy their business. We now know, as a matter of fact, that insurance underwriting has increased throughout the country three times as much as it was 15 years ago and that insurance companies are now going into the banking business, the finance business, and all fields of activity to put the premiums they receive into operation and to make a return to build up their reserves to meet their future liabilities. I remember the fight very well, the hard fight we had to pass it through this body and through the other body. While this relates to the building, it brings back memories of the constructive legislation proposed by the immortal Franklin D. Roosevelt and put through by a Democratic administration, designed to preserve and strengthen the family life of America. That is what the Democratic Party has always stood for from the days it was formed and established by Thomas Jefferson, the party not only of the people but the party to preserve and strengthen the family life of America.

(Mr. WHITTINGTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks, and in the remarks he made in presenting the bill to include certain tables.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FALLON].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUBER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7873) to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 651, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY

Mr. PRICE submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 8198) to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN] is recognized for 40 minutes.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of the Washington Post and the first Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in his testimony before the Expenditures Committee of the Senate but a few days ago said:

> Administration argument that the transfer of the RFC to Commerce because it deals with business affairs * * * is fallacious. * * * There should be a shift of a half-dozen other Federal agencies such as the Tariff Commission, Federal Trade Commission to the Commerce Department.

I am happy to say that the Members of this House with but few exceptions are in accord with all that Mr. Meyer said.

Mr. Speaker, for some reason unknown to me and to many of the Members of this House, one of the most vicious hatchet jobs ever undertaken is now being performed upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the successful financial history of which has never been equaled by any other Federal agency since the establishment of this Government.

Personally, I am disposed to feel that the President acted on bad advice when he proposed to transfer the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has always been an independent agency of Government, to the supervision and control of the Secretary of Commerce, and certainly, and I am not alone in feeling so, inasmuch as both Democratic and Republican members of the Senate committee who were in attendance at the current hearing, the Honorable JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, United States Senator from Arkansas, the Honorable KARL MUNDT, Republican Senator from South Dakota, revealed themselves as hostile to the proposed shift.

As for me, I cannot understand why anyone should for a moment condone the injury that would result to the small-business man of America by destroying the integrity and independence of action on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, it is needless for me to remind you, sir, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has always been self-supporting and has never called upon the Congress to appropriate a single dollar from the Federal Treasury to pay its operating expenses. On the other hand, the profits which that corporation has earned have been in the sum of $559,000,000, and during the course of its operation, it has turned over to the Federal Treasury out of its profits the huge amount of $308,736,000. This profit has been used to help pay the ordinary cost of government operation, while, at the same time, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation created for its own use—and out of profits a reserve of some several hundred million dollars which they now use as a revolving fund in order to continue to make loans to small-business houses.

In his appearance before the Senate Expenditures Committee, Mr. Eugene Meyer declared without equivocation that—

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation independence of action would be destroyed if the transfer to the Department of Commerce were made as proposed.

Mr. Meyer further argued, and I am in hearty agreement with his argument that—

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a lending institution should not be made subject to the direction of any executive department where other considerations, one-sided or political in nature, could possibly come into play.

He was not alone in his contentions that argument has the full support of the American Bankers Association, which also opposes the transfer on the grounds that it might lead to the use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation facilities for purely political purposes.

> Any future Secretary of Commerce—

Said Mr. C. Francis Coche, chairman of the American Banking Association's committee on Federal Legislation—> could use this power to direct the lending activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to accomplish some political objective not in keeping with the sound operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or in the best interests generally of the Nation's business and national economy.

Mr. Speaker, after having read the Washington Post's factual report of the Senate hearing, I asked for and received a statement made by Mr. Harvey J. Gunderson, Director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is a short factual, businesslike statement, and one that begs no issues.

Mr. Gunderson addressed himself solely to the desire of maintaining the economic, financial, and political independence of RFC, and certainly, there are few men in these United States who have worked more intimately, disinterestedly, harder, and honestly in behalf of the Nation's economy and the small-business groups than have Mr. Harvey J. Gunderson. When Mr. Gunderson said that was expressing his personal opinion, unbiased and free from prejudice, I know that he spoke the truth for other than the truth is not in him.

Mr. Speaker, let me read for the benefit of my colleagues in this House that short factual statement of this great public official, who in simplicity, clarity, and frankness, spoke these words:

> STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 24 BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS BY HARVEY J. GUNDEESON, DIRECTOR, RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION, JUNE 15, 1950
>
> Mr. Chairman, the comments that I am about to make on Reorganization Plan No. 24, which would place Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce, are presented, not as the official view of the Corporation resulting from action by its Directors, but entirely as my personal opinion arrived at by attempting to be unbiased and free of prejudice in estimating the facts as I know them at this time.

I have been with Reconstruction Finance Corporation since 1932 and I believe that I am fairly familiar with its business and its transactions engaged in since that time, especially as to those that have occupied the attention and its efforts since 1945 at which time I became a member of its Board of Directors.

The Corporation was conceived and has operated as a creature of the legislative branch under guidance of the Executive. Its functions have been altered and varied by the Congress to meet changing needs and new requirements and, at the moment, lending to business enterprises is a substantial and important task. But the other functions, now mainly in standby, have been more important, and more needed at other times than has the activity of making business loans. These other functions, of lending to public bodies, to banks, to railroads and transportation companies, to victims of disasters and catastrophes, and the manifold functions, now mostly dormant, of building war plants and procuring for war, do not have the kinship to the activities of the Department of Commerce that some may feel the making of business loans may have.

However, the lending business as enacted by Congress in the RFC Act to be carried out and performed by a bipartisan, independent board serving each citizen who may seek aid as fairly and impartially and without discrimination as it is possible to accomplish, does not, in my opinion, have kinship or affinity with any existing Cabinet department, each of which is headed by one man from the official family of the Chief Executive of the administration in power and whose control of such department and its chief personnel is in a large measure complete and among whose principal duties are many involving partisan political considerations, which is quite proper.

If the function of lending, as concerned in the RFC Act, is to be continued in our Government on a bipartisan, independent, and meritorious basis it should be administered, in my opinion, by a bipartisan and independent board. Any board composed of different people and representing different factions and different points of view will encounter, if it is workmanlike and progressive and desirous of carrying out the wishes of the Congress and the Executive, controversial and critical problems and duties with which it must deal. The solution of these problems, the performance of these duties cannot but fail at times to please everyone but the goal is attained in a normal, desirable, and democratic fashion and the public interest is fully served. Adverse criticism and different opinions of others, whose facts are not complete in most cases, in themselves undoubtedly serve a useful purpose in the movement toward the goal that Congress seeks in carrying on lending by the Government.

The Hoover Commission on Reorganization in the Government in recommending that the Corporation be placed under the supervision of a Cabinet department may well have been influenced by a belief that the Corporation's lending activity should be minimized or extinguished rather than by an evaluation or estimate as to the best means for carrying out such function.

Over the years, now almost 18, that I have been intimately concerned with Reconstruction Finance Corporation I have been impressed and continue to be impressed by the high standard of impartial, sound, and well-done work that the Corporation through its able and experienced staff has accomplished. This is as true today as it has ever been and under a bipartisan, independent board it can continue that way. Any Government agency, including this Corporation, is subject to political pressures, which unless they become unreasonable, do not interfere with the conduct of affairs. A bipartisan, independent board can always resist unreasonable political pressures as to my own knowledge has been true of this Corporation to this day.

Consequently, I believe Congress should retain direct control over the lending functions as are now carried on by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which in turn should have freedom of operations as a self-contained unit.

The responsibility of running this Corporation should be squarely upon its board which should not be given protection in any fashion by other parts of the Government but should stand on its own feet and take all criticism directed at it for whatever worth or value it has. The Board of Directors should be accountable directly to the Congress and the Executive for the manner in which its duties are discharged. Responsibility should not be divided.

I have no doubt that sound reasons exist in the minds of the proponents of Reorganization Plan No. 24, as well as plans 22 and 23, or the plans would not have been recommended to Congress for its consideration. Such reasons, however, would seem to me to stem from a belief that the character, purpose, and the manner of such lending as this Corporation has carried on should be different than it has been since 1932.

If the wish is to continue the functions of Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the Government and have them carried out in a bipartisan, independent fashion, I believe that a bipartisan, independent board can come nearer the goal desired than another form of administration, regardless of such criticism or adverse charges as may be directed against the Corporation from time to time. That the record shows its operations continue to be profitable, and at the same time carry out the wishes of Congress, is strong evidence of the soundness of this belief.

I appreciate the committee's courtesy in receiving and considering these comments.

Mr. Speaker, like Harvey Gunderson I, too, firmly believe that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was conceived and has operated as a creature of the legislative branch under the guidance of our Chief Executive, and like Mr. Gunderson, I, too, believe that this Congress should retain the direct control over the lending functions as now carried on by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which in turn should have the freedom of operations as a self-contained unit.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield to no man in my regard for the Honorable Jesse Jones, who was my friend long before he came to Washington and is still my friend. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was never chaired by a more able, estimable, honorable, hard-working, conscientious public official and director than by its present Chairman of the Board, Mr. Harley Hise.

It is because of these facts, Mr. Speaker, that I want to see this Congress take such action as is necessary to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the Government and have them carried out by the same nonpartisan Board, acting in independent fashion as always, because I know that it is only through such an independent Board that we can come nearer to the goal than through any other form of administration—regardless of what criticisms might from time to time be directed against it by any other agency of Government.

The records of RFC's financial transactions are as clean as a hound's tooth. To date they have absorbed all shocks and losses due to bad accounts, and that is indeed the strongest of evidence in support of the soundness of the contention that it should continue to exist—as is.

Mr. Speaker, the calendar year 1949 established a record of which the Board of the RFC and the American people everywhere can be justifiably proud. During the calendar year 1949, 11,127 applications for business loans were filed with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Of that number, 4,559 applications involving loans aggregating $592,647,000 were approved, 2,213 loans were withdrawn, and 3,227 were declined.

Mr. Speaker, hear me well on this. Last year alone more than 11,000 applications for business loans were filed with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and of that grand total of 11,000, more than 8,000 loans were processed. I need not elaborate upon the enormity of the detail of financial statements, balances, history and other data that were studied before the 4,559 were approved and the further 3,227 declined.

Mr. Speaker, now hear me again and well on this. The 4,559 applications approved, signified that that number of business houses were in some sort of financial distress, that they needed some type of financial assistance, and they could not receive that assistance from local banks, due to either State or Federal governmental banking restrictions and hence had to find relief at the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or else fold up and go into bankruptcy.

Well, in short, it meant that 4,559 business houses remained solvent; that they continued to give gainful employment to countless thousands of American citizens, all through the beneficent activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and without the expenditure of a single dollar of any taxpayer's moneys, but rather, and mark me, sir, well on this one, actually at a profit to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, applications for these loans were not received from any geographical, industrial, or agricultural section of this nation—they were received from every State in these United States, and in addition thereto, they came from Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

They came from manufacturing and nonmanufacturing industries, from poultry farms, greenhouses, mining companies, construction companies, wholesale and retail, trade, transportation, communications, recreational, professional and other services.

They came from food and from kindred industries; from textile mills, lumber, furniture and finished lumber products, paper, printing and publishing allied industries; from the chemical industry, rubber, leather, stone, clay, glass, iron and steel.

Manufacturers, producers as well as those gainfully employed in these industries have profited to the tune of untold billions by virtue of what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did in that single year of 1949.

Mr. Speaker, the nonferric metals industry, the electrical machinery industry, and a host of other small-business houses as well as large-business concerns are in business today because of the wisdom, the sagacity, the prudence, the hardheadedness and forthright abilities of those charged with the business care and direction by this Congress with the lending facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to include as part of my remarks a statistical chart showing the number and the amount of the loans approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during the calendar year of 1949 and still another by types of industries. Additionally thereto, I am going to show the business loan authorizations that were made during the calendar year of 1949 by their sizes and their amounts:

Reconstruction Finance Corporation business loan applications pending as at Dec. 31, 1949, by State

[Number only]

Alabama	12
Arizona	7
Arkansas	59
California	95
Colorado	15
Connecticut	13
Delaware	8
District of Columbia	5
Florida	73
Georgia	75
Idaho	14
Illinois	59
Indiana	28
Iowa	10
Kansas	20
Kentucky	28
Louisiana	20
Maine	7
Maryland	11
Massachusetts	38
Michigan	87
Minnesota	24
Mississippi	18
Missouri	39
Montana	30
Nebraska	17
Nevada	2
New Hampshire	7
New Jersey	42
New Mexico	11
New York	104
North Carolina	29
North Dakota	7
Ohio	84
Oklahoma	110
Oregon	46
Pennsylvania	122
Rhode Island	8
South Carolina	16
South Dakota	3
Tennessee	37
Texas	101
Utah	15
Vermont	5
Virginia	10
Washington	54
West Virginia	5
Wisconsin	20
Wyoming	4
Alaska	12
Hawaii	4
Puerto Rico	14
Virgin Islands	2
Total	1,686

Reconstruction Finance Corporation—business loan authorizations—calendar year 1949, by type of industry

	Number	Gross amount	RFC amount
Nonmanufacturing industries:
Poultry farms, greenhouses, crop specialties, forestry, fisheries, etc	110	$5,036,011	$3,866,011
Mining	91	29,648,757	28,659,517
Construction	285	18,376,466	15,482,335
Wholesale and retail trade	1,026	32,423,167	27,722,817
Finance, insurance, and real estate	78	65,351,750	61,198,275
Transportation, communication, and other public utilities	295	44,168,794	32,130,022
Services: Personal, business, recreational, public, semipublic, professional, and other	696	22,943,619	20,904,831
Total	2,581	217,948,564	189,963,808
Manufacturing industries:
Food and kindred products	451	65,634,310	50,002,008
Textile-mill products	70	18,726,642	17,988,392
Apparel and other products made from fabrics	38	2,807,638	2,419,917
Lumber and timber basic products	243	33,948,468	31,812,630
Furniture and finished lumber products	114	6,887,584	5,946,815
Paper and allied products	36	9,019,843	8,566,537
Printing, publishing and allied industries	71	4,712,216	4,326,741
Chemicals and allied products	80	9,752,248	9,548,552
Products of petroleum, coal and natural gas	26	16,308,750	16,094,750
Rubber products	13	2,444,000	2,433,500
Leather and leather products	11	399,000	321,500
Stone, clay and glass products	134	8,356,228	7,731,590
Iron and steel and their products	173	79,492,468	77,355,465
Transportation equipment (except automobiles)	40	11,695,617	10,975,367
Nonferrous metals and their products	53	12,756,957	12,540,491
Electrical machinery	61	8,792,832	8,327,166
Machinery (except electrical)	238	19,024,343	16,509,377
Automobiles and automobile equipment	35	55,544,500	47,857,349
Miscellaneous manufacturing industries	91	8,394,719	7,721,837
Total	1,978	374,698,363	338,479,984
Grand total	4,559	592,646,927	528,443,792

Reconstruction Finance Corporation—business loan authorizations—calendar year 1949, by size

	Number	Gross amount	RFC amount
$5,000 and under	660	$1,984,682	$1,922,217
$5,001 to $10,000	586	4,599,851	4,217,945
$10,001 to $25,000	1,061	19,156,009	16,984,499
Total $25,000 and under	2,307	25,740,542	23,124,661
$25,001 to $50,000	903	34,968,677	30,621,684
$50,001 to $100,000	734	58,175,984	51,103,719
Total, $25,001 to $100,000	1,637	93,144,661	81,725,403
$100,001 to $200,000	252	38,753,744	34,862,857
$200,001 to $500,000	217	68,396,506	60,934,060
Total $100,001 to $500,000	469	107,150,248	95,796,917
$500,001 to $1,000,000	71	52,558,634	47,582,137
Over $1,000,000	75	314,052,842	280,214,674
Total $500,001 or more	146	366,611,476	327,796,811
Grand total	4,559	592,646,927	528,443,792

Mr. Speaker, I wish that I had a list showing the number of these loans that were made in the various districts represented by my colleagues in this House, but I am happy to tell you all that in the list of the business-loan application that were pending before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as of December 31, 1949, the good State of Alabama is down near the very bottom of the list.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it absolutely unnecessary to tell you of the great confidence that the Members of this House have in the Honorable Harley Hise, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Many of the Members of this body know him almost as a brother. We all know him as a friend and a great public official who has done a splendid job and all sincerely wish that he will continue to serve the small-business groups of this Nation in particular and America in general by continuing in his present capacity as head of the RFC for many, many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I want to insert at this part of the RECORD the statement made by the Chairman of the Board in a recent appearance before the Banking and Currency Subcommittee of the Senate. Mr. Harley Hise's statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HARLEY HISE, CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS, RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION, SENATE BANKING AND CURRENCY SUBCOMMITTEE INQUIRING INTO RFC, PURSUANT TO SENATE RESOLUTION 219, EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS, JUNE 8, 1950

I am pleased to have this opportunity of discussing with your committee the lending operations of the RFC.

The RFC was created by the Congress in 1932. Since then it has made loans to practically every segment of business and commerce and has realized in connection with its operations a net profit of approximately $560,000,000. This figure takes into consideration deductions of salaries, interest, and other operating expenses since 1932 including the cost of nonincome producing services rendered American enterprises, and reserves for losses of approximately $100,000,000. From the profit realized by the Corporation we have paid $308,736,740 to the Treasury as dividends. In addition we have returned $400,000,000 of our original $500,000,000 capital to the Treasury. The operations of the Corporation have not cost the taxpayers a single penny.

The statute under which the RFC acts at the present time authorizes loans "to aid in financing agriculture, commerce, and industry, to encourage small business, to help in maintaining the economic stability of the country, and to assist in promoting maximum employment and production."

After extensive hearings the Buck committee issued its report with particular emphasis, and properly, that loans should be in the public interest. The committee was unable to indicate precisely what loans would be, as a matter of policy in the public interest. The loan to the Glenn L. Martin Co. was used as an example of one being clearly in the public interest, although the committee report states, "In other cases, especially in the smaller loans, the interest of the public will not be so clear. * * * In the last analysis the determination of whether or not a particular loan will serve the public interest, must be left to the discretion of the directors of the Corporation."

No significant changes were made in the Senate bill by the House of Representatives except that in the statement of purposes for which loans should be made, the House inserted the language "to encourage small business." It is obvious, in view of this history, that the Congress believed that loans made to small business enterprises are in the public interest.

RFC considers that an eligible business enterprise is one which is privately owned and operated for a profit and engaged in the production, distribution, or sale of goods or the furnishing of services. There are certain types of enterprises, however, to which the Corporation does not make loans such as concerns engaged in radio and television broadcasting, the production of movies, or enterprises publishing newspapers and periodicals for the reason that the Corporation does not wish to appear to be in a position to exercise control over or influence, even indirectly, concerns having an editorial policy or which are engaged in disseminating news.

We believe that it was the desire of Congress that the Corporation assist all eligible businesses, especially small enterprises, within the limitations and intent of the act, and we undertake to do so. The possibility of financial assistance through normal channels on reasonable terms is carefully explored in all cases before a loan is approved.

Approximately 90 percent of all the business loans authorized by the RFC during the past 2 years have been in amounts of $100,000 or less. In this regard special attention is given to applications filed by small businesses. Approximately 8,000 to 10,000 such enterprises each month seek the RFC's advice and assistance. Every effort is made by the Corporation to find a sound solution to these business problems. Applications which are not approved in the agencies are carefully studied by the Small Business Division of the Washington office.

Loans made by the Corporation to small businesses have aided concerns in every State in the Union and in almost every type of commercial enterprise. We presented to this committee, under date of May 8, summary of loans made, to all classes of industry by States. It disclosed that 9,578 loans in a total amount of $981,779,311 were approved from January 1, 1948, through March 31, 1950. This contribution to the economic well-being of our Nation speaks for itself.

In addition, RFC by using its personnel trained in the solution of business problems can often render material assistance to small businesses by determining the crux of particular problems relating to management, operations, and accounting. Suggestions are made for possible solutions to the problems and sources are indicated from which expert technical and consulting assistance can be drawn. We feel that the aid given to small business has been of substantial benefit to the economic stability of the country and has materially contributed to full employment.

The business-loan program of the RFC during the reconversion period following World War II substantially contributed to the prosperity of the Nation and helped check the downward cycle such as occurred after World War I. In three periods of our economic life—depression, war, and reconversion—this Corporation has played a major part.

Since the RFC has been in existence, 53,829 loans in the amount of $4,235,150,000 have been authorized to business enterprises. Of this amount, $2,040,930,000 has been disbursed; $1,468,835,000 of these loans have been repaid.

At the present time there are outstanding 6,344 direct RFC business loans having a dollar amount of $523,870,000; also, there are outstanding 5,647 business loans in which the RFC participates with banks. These participation loans aggregate $124,875,000.

An important contribution to the economic stability of the country has been and is still being made by the RFC through the financial assistance which it provides to States, counties, municipalities, and other public agencies toward financing projects, such as water works, sewer systems, transportation facilities, hospitals, bridges, tunnels, drainage facilities, irrigation works, airports, college dormitories, docks, and a host of other projects undertaken by States and local governments. Most of these worthwhile projects have been constructed in small communities which previously had been unable to obtain credit and large projects have been undertaken and completed which at the time could not be financed by the sale of bonds in the open market. This work has been carried on, not only with great benefit locally but on a self-supporting and profitable basis, as far as this Corporation and the Government is concerned.

There are certain areas of the Nation at the present time which are classified as being in distress economically. Other areas are expanding beyond the ability of financial institutions to keep pace with developments. The ebb and flow of credit is therefore the result of conditions and through our 31 loan agencies we endeavor to render in cooperation with banks and other lending institutions financial aid intended to assist in maintaining the economic stability of the country. By maintaining production and employment, we help sustain the consumer-purchasing power of the Nation in conformity with the law and intent of Congress.

The exercise of RFC's authority affects directly or touches indirectly many fields of endeavor and intent. In fulfilling its statutory responsibility, the Corporation has been criticized for being too liberal by some and for being too conservative by others. Some believe that the continuation of the Corporation is not justified since the cause for its creation—namely, a national depression of great magnitude—no longer exists. On the other hand, several bills are now pending in the Congress to broaden and liberalize our lending authority. Our daily contacts with applicants indicates a need for a continuance of the service of RFC in supplementing credit from private sources.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

SPENDING IN THE DARK

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, on May 10, 1941, a direct hit in an air raid from across the Channel completely destroyed the Chamber of the British House of Commons. In laying the cornerstone of the new Chamber which replaced it at the close of the war the Prime Minister said:

> The enemy may have thought that by destroying our Chamber they were delivering a blow against democracy. But the House of Commons is not a building. It is a living fellowship, renewed through the ages, changing in its membership, but always in essence the same.

In that same spirit it may be as truly said that the House of Representatives is not merely an agency created by the Constitution, a conclave of divergent schools of political and economic thought. It is a living fellowship of many men of many minds, but all of them always desiring the greatest good for the greatest number, willing to make any sacrifice to insure the perpetuity of our form of government, and the welfare and prosperity of those for whom it provides.

It is to that concept of the House that I wish to address myself today on a question which affects the Nation more vitally than any similar question which has come before the House since the adoption of our budgetary system in 1921. It affects not merely this session of Congress but all succeeding sessions for generations yet to come. It affects retrenchments, not merely of the two or three billion dollars cut from this year's estimates, but amounts which through future years will aggregate sums so vast as to challenge the comprehension of the human mind. It involves considerations of such far-reaching consequence as to forcibly recall the many governments and dynasties notably the Stuarts of England and the Bourbons of France, which have been wrecked on the rocks of national insolvency.

It naturally follows that a question of such import should be considered in the light of the general welfare rather than considerations of personal interest and party advantage. The first question should be not "How does it affect me?" or "How does it benefit my party?" but "How does it affect the Nation and the country and generations yet unborn?"

Judged by that criterion the omnibus appropriation bill—the consideration of all annual appropriations simultaneously in one bill rather than in a dozen separate and unrelated bills reported from time to time over a period of several months—offers the most practical and efficient method of handling the annual budget and the national fiscal program. And judged by our experience this session in the adoption of the omnibus bill, there is no legitimate reason which can be advanced against it. Conversely, no defensible reason can be submitted against the consideration of all appropriations in one bill.

These are sweeping statements. But they are justified by the literal facts and I have asked for an hour today with a view to yielding to anyone who may have any doubts or any suggestions in this connection. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall be glad to entertain any question as to any advantage in the adoption of the one-package bill or any disadvantage accruing from its operation.

The annual appropriations deal primarily with questions of business and economics rather than politics. And every effort has been made in the consolidation of the several appropriation bills to divorce and disassociate questions of procedure from politics and partisanship. From the beginning, every step in the improved procedure has been submitted to the two ranking minority members of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], both of whom participated actively in the effort of the House to achieve a workable legislative budget, and every recommendation made by them has been adopted. In the conference between the subcommittees of the Senate Appropriations Committee—including Senator BRIDGES and Senator FERGUSON—and the House Appropriations Committee, the minority members of both Senate and House committees participated in the discussion and when the conference adjourned, no disagreement was expressed on the part of any of the Democratic or Republican Senators or Representatives present on the procedure which has been followed up to this time. It is not a party measure and neither party can possibly gain or lose any political advantage through its adoption except by making it an instrument for carrying out more completely and more effectively their platform pledges of economy and better administration.

That the consolidation of appropriation bills and the simultaneous consideration of budget recommendations does mean retrenchment, and the better allocation of the funds appropriated, there can be no doubt. In commenting on this phase of the procedure the Baltimore Evening Sun said editorially, following the passage of the bill:

With just one bill it is harder to increase appropriations and easier to cut them. In view of the state of the Federal finances these are important advantages indeed.

The experience of the House this session, although laboring under exceptional difficulties, shows conclusively that the handling of the annual appropriations in one bill, speaking categorically:

First. Permits an earlier report of appropriations to the House. All annual appropriations were reported to the House this year on March 21, the earliest date in the history of the committee. The foreign aid appropriations were not included because of lack of legislative authority, but would have been included at that date had there been authorization.

Second. Contributes to a more thorough consideration and processing of estimates and appropriations.

Under the old system, each member of the Committee served on from two to four bills and the committee staffs were similarly handicapped, with the result that time and attention were divided proportionately. Under the new system each member of the committee and each member of the staff give their undivided attention to one chapter of the bill, with the result that each bill is studied in greater detail and more thoroughly processed than ever before.

The effect of this intensive study is reflected in the few changes made when the bill was passed by the committee and the House.

Third, consolidation protects the bill against amendments increasing appropriations or adding new appropriations. This year for the first time we were able to defeat amendments adding to amounts carried by the bill which in every former session we have been compelled to accept thereby increasing the bill by millions of dollars. For example, this is the first year we have been able to fight off amendments increasing appropriations for civil functions, the pork barrel section of the bill. This year the bill as messaged to the Senate carried practically no important increases except the committee amendments for national defense.

Fourth, the consideration of all appropriations in one bill tends to keep Members on the floor. Under the old system, large bills were frequently passed with a scant two dozen Members present, and proponents of increases in appropriations, by timing their attendance, could put through amendments which would not have been agreed to with more Members present. In fact, one of the few objections voiced against the omnibus bill is that it irks Members by keeping them on the Floor. I think there will be general agreement that the taxpayers would rather irk the Members a little during the consideration of the one bill than to pay the additional taxes due to the absence of Members in the pursuit of their official duties elsewhere.

Fifth, the plan unquestionably retrenches expenditures. The bill as it passed the House was far below the budget estimates and was millions of dollars below what it would have been had the departmental appropriations been reported to the House in a dozen separate bills.

The Washington Post editorially emphasized the retrenchment effected by the bill:

It remains to be seen what the Senate will do, but the House Appropriations Committee certainly succeeded in reducing overall appropriations quite substantially.

The great advantage of a one-package appropriations bill is that it puts pressure on the appropriations committee to reduce expenditures and produce a more balanced spending program. It gives members of Congress an opportunity to obtain a comprehensive view of the spending side of the budget picture that tends to curb enthusiasm for new spending projects.

The delay and confusion resulting from the manhandling of the omnibus appropriation bill by the House does not discredit its value as a legislative tool. It merely emphasizes the fact that procedural reforms cannot succeed if Congress persists in following unsound legislative practices.

As a matter of fact, the last two amendments, intended to decrease expenditures carried by the bill would not have been possible except for the omnibus plan of consideration. And the vote in favor of them would not have been so overwhelming had not this plan of operation been in use at the time.

As the Rochester Times-Union said:

As the bill left the House it provided for spending $41,000,000,000 in the year beginning July 1. The President's budget called for $2,000,000,000 more. Half the reduction was made by the Appropriations Committee before the Legion was organized, but the letters and coupons strengthened committee members to defend the cuts made by the bill itself.

But a billion dollars is still an enormous amount of money and Representative JOHN TABER deserves the thanks of all for devising means of saving that much.

Balked by unrecorded teller votes through weeks of debate in trimming specific items, he won in the end by his plan ordering cuts of from 2 to 20 percent on the various agencies spending for such things as travel, employment, transportation, communications, printing, and the like. Yet, the Legion of Obstinate Men and Women was bipartisan in the best sense and it should be noted here too, that the end obtained was made possible by the fact that Representative CLARENCE CANNON, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, insisted upon a consolidated bill this year, to include all domestic appropriations except fixed charges. Such a blanket cut as Taber proposed would have been impossible without a consolidated bill.

Sixth, it prevents logrolling. We had been told this was one of the defects of the new plan; that there would be more logrolling between interests wishing to trade votes in order to add amendments increasing appropriations. But in the practical operation of the plan every attempt of special interests to increase the bill was defeated, and when the last roll call came on reducing the amounts appropriated in the bill, the groups which had been unable to secure increases which they urged for themselves said in effect, "If we cannot get an increase, no one shall have an increase," and instead of logrolling to increase the bill they cooperated to reduce the bill.

Our experience with the omnibus bill this session demonstrates that it effectively disposes of the old system of logrolling so prevalent in the consideration of individual departmental bills.

Seventh, the one bill visualizes at a glance the outline of national income and expenditures, and centers the attention of the country on the national fiscal program. It was the pitiless limelight of national attention concentrated on these final votes that offset the pleas and importunities of the pressure groups and special interests. The omnibus appropriation bill has made the entire country definitely deficit-conscious. With all appropriations in one bill, accompanied by the figures on Federal income, there is no escape from the responsibility for deficit spending.

One of the great disadvantages of the old system, with a dozen or more separate bills, was that each subcommittee, working in its own segregated corner of the budget, was spending in the dark. Not until the last bill was passed and sent to the President at the end of the session, frequently long after the expiration of the fiscal year, did anyone have any definite idea of how much had been appropriated for the year and what the relation of the various individual bills was to the fiscal program as a whole.

The Baltimore Evening Sun summarized the situation very succinctly:

Since Congress usually changed the appropriations as listed in the budget, when the legislators had finished with their appropriations they could only guess what total expenditures would be. Hence they did not know whether they had thrown the budget more out of balance than before, or less. With the estimates now provided a more accurate budget picture is available, and that is of the utmost importance.

These and other advantages make the omnibus appropriation bill preferable to the old system with a multiplicity of bills.

And Ysabel and Robert Rennie, in their syndicated column, said:

If there is one thing about the annual budget which has long been clear to Congress, it is that the annual budget has not been clear to Congress.

Again, the Sun, in a subsequent editorial further stressed the contribution of the consolidated bill in this respect:

The fact is that the budget is much harder to understand when there are 12 separate appropriation bills than when there is 1 bill. With 12 bills, each part may be understandable, but nobody knows anything about the budget as a whole when Congress has passed the 12 bills. Members of the House and Senate themselves do not know. They only see pieces of a jigsaw puzzle that has not been put together. Congressmen may have trouble understanding it all when the 12 bills are combined into 1, but both they and the public do know something about the budgetary situation when they get through with that 1 bill.

The omnibus bill should be continued. It not only facilitates an understanding of the budgetary situation but it also facilitates cuts in appropriations, as witness the fact that a blanket cut was made in the bill recently passed. The very fact that a blanket cut was considered and passed in this instance shows that the new system is better suited to the needs of the present day.

Eighth, the handling of all appropriations in the omnibus bill provides for elimination of conflicts, duplications, and overlapping expenditures. The consolidation in one bill supplies opportunity and facilities for identification of all sources of funds allocated to individual agencies, some of them difficult of ready determination. It was sometimes necessary to trace appropriations through a dozen or more items in a number of different bills under the old system. And as a result, inevitably there was from time to time provisions for expenditures which would not have been made had the subcommittee in charge of one bill had jurisdiction of all the items which appropriated money for the activity.

Ninth, it discourages the practice of attaching irrelevant riders either in committee or by amendment from the floor. Too frequently legislation has been tacked on the several appropriation bills under the guise of limitations or by the admission of germane amendments. In the general attention focused on the bill all such attempts were turned back and the bill went to the Senate singularly free of these impositions on the budget system and covert infringements on the jurisdiction of the legislative committees of the House.

Mr. Speaker, other advantages derived from the consolidation of appropriations into one bill could be enumerated. In fact, the most important has not been mentioned here and will await the final passage of the conference report in the House and Senate. Suffice to say, the bill in its passage through the House has justified every expectation and vindicated every promise.

It is the realization of hopes and plans on which congressional parliamentarians and economists have worked since the original adoption of the budget system in 1921. It is the practical adaptation of the idea of the legislative budget proposed in the Reorganization Act of 1946 on which House and Senate labored futilely for 2 years.

Now let us turn to the other side of the ledger and take up such objections as have been mentioned in opposition to the omnibus bill. Not one of them presents any substantial reason for returning to the old practice from which the House has been struggling to free itself and the country for the past 30 years.

For example, it has been claimed that under the new system the Senate must mark time until the bill comes over from the House—that until the omnibus bill passes, the Senate committees cannot start work—whereas under the old system the Senate opened hearings on the first of the multiple supply bills which came over comparatively early in the session and weeks before the one-package bill could be completed.

The claim is unfounded. On the contrary, the Senate under the new system may begin work on any of the annual appropriations within a week or two after the session opens and much sooner than before. Under the schedule followed in handling the omnibus bill in the House, the subcommittees start work on all chapters simultaneously, and print and transmit to the Senate committee, and to the press, the full hearings up to date on each agency or activity, as the hearings progress. As a result, the Senate has practically completed hearings on all chapters of the bill by the time the consolidated bill has passed the House—a gain of many weeks on most of the bill over what would have been accomplished had the bill been considered piecemeal. As a matter of fact the committees of the two Houses are in effect sitting simultaneously, thereby saving time formerly lost in waiting for individual bills.

Again, it is contended that it took too long to pass the bill. Of course much of the delay was avoidable. Under the rules the bill was privileged and was entitled to consideration within 3 days after being reported. But other business was pressing for consideration at the time and although the appropriation bill was reported March 21, it could not be called up in the House until April 3—a loss of 2 weeks at the start. This delayed the bill past the Easter holidays and it was not sent to the Senate until May 10. But even at that, the time required to pass it compared favorably with the time consumed in passing the divided appropriation bills in previous years. Calculating by days, whole or in part, on which the bill was considered in former years under the old system, and this year as a consolidated bill, the time required is tabulated as follows: 1938, 37 days; 1939, 31 days; 1948, 20 days; 1950, 21 days.

As will be noted, the time required in the second session of the Eightieth Congress was 20 days. And in the second session of the Eighty-first Congress, including all interruptions, it was 21 days. As compared with prewar records, the time used this year was phenomenally low. With ordinary good management in the subcommittees, the committee and the House, the omnibus bill can be messaged to the Senate each year before Easter, with time to spare, and can be passed in the Senate and sent to the President in ample time to meet the deadline at the end of the fiscal year—greatly facilitating early adjournment.

As the Washington Post very well said in its editorial of June 6, 1950:

The slow-moving machinery of Congress is largely responsible for the fact that the omnibus bill is now hung up in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Another objection sometimes made is that the concentration of the annual supply appropriations in one bill prevents the President from exercising the item veto. Just what the item veto has to do with either the individual bills or the omnibus bill is difficult to understand inasmuch as a constitutional amendment would be required to apply it to either or to any form of appropriation bill. This is not the time or the place to take up an extraneous discussion of the disproportional advantage which the item veto would give the executive branch of the Government over the legislative branch, but in any event, the authorization of an item veto by the Chief Executive would not be effected by the form of the bill. Such a veto could be used on an omnibus bill as well as on a divided bill. And his veto power would be stronger in the former than in the latter as it would be more imperative that Congress accede or see every Department in the Government brought to a standstill. However, any suggestion relative to the extension of such additional veto power of the Presidency is entirely beside the point in a discussion of the operation of the omnibus bill.

A further criticism is that there has been lack of interest in the bill and that it has been difficult to keep a quorum on the floor. That is an old complaint. When efforts were being made to secure the consent of Speaker Cannon to the erection of the first House Office Building, he insisted that once offices and committee rooms were provided for Members, it would be impossible to keep a quorum on the floor. His predictions have been frequently vindicated—especially during general debate on the individual appropriation bills when Members burdened with committee hearings and departmental work have waited for the bells to answer roll call. The adoption of the consolidated bill has effected no difference per se in this respect. However, under the old system, general debate was not confined to the bill before the House and Members usually talked on subjects foreign to the pending measure. And those interested in the appropriations had no reason to neglect other business when the debate was on other and unrelated matters. But under the omnibus bill all debate is confined to the bill before the House and attendance is correspondingly heavier. For every instance cited to indicate a light attendance on the floor during debate on the omnibus bill, more instances can be given showing a still lighter attendance during consideration of the individual bills under the old system.

But the most untenable of all the objections to the omnibus bill is that it is unwieldy. The experience of every major nation in the world and every State in the Union belies such a proposed criticism. England, France, Sweden, and other leading nations have for centuries considered their budgets in one-package bills. Every State in the Union submits its annual budget in an omnibus bill. The United States is the notable exception to the rule. In any nation or any State the suggestion today that it abandon its time-tried method of considering its fiscal program in one bill and resort to the piecemeal expedient of separate bills would be regarded as absurd. None of them find it unwieldy—whatever that means. And the House did not find it unwieldy this time. No one finds it unwieldy but the bureaus downtown on which the bill economizes and the lobbying interests about the Capitol which do not like it because it is harder to slip through appropriations they want and more difficult to defeat appropriations which they are paid to oppose.

Mr. Speaker, the consolidated bill is in conformity with the best business thought of the Nation. It is supported by the weight of public opinion. It has been approved by metropolitan newspapers in every section of the country as indicated by editorials which I have previously reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Here is a significant letter from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
May 29, 1950.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Chairman, Appropriations Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington 25, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: The Chamber of Commerce of the United States again appeals to you to cut Federal spending. On our part, we are conducting a Nation-wide campaign designed to support your committee in reducing appropriations on all fronts.

At our recent annual meeting, much was said about the excessive demands being made upon the financial resources of our citizens. Our members held that the broadening undertakings of the Government are a menace to our economic stability. But they also recognized the pressures exerted by State and local authorities on the Congress for Federal funds.

We are trying to be realistic about the matter. We believe that the majority of both parties in Congress dislike the continuance of deficit financing. The only way to stop it is to curtail Federal services and to postpone many projects, desirable as they may be, until our financial house is in order.

So we have directed an urgent appeal to 8,700 officials of our member commercial and trade organizations, and to the presidents of more than 21,000 business corporations. We have asked them to do two things:

1. Use their influence to keep local interests, including public authorities, from seeking Federal appropriations.

2. Work with their newspapers and community organizations to obtain editorial support for and public acceptance of a rigid economy program.

We believe that the House, in passing H. R. 7786, made a commendable move in consolidating major appropriations and in reducing the total of those appropriations below the 1951 budget proposals.

We sincerely hope that the Senate Appropriations Committee will not only hold the ground thus gained, but will find still further opportunities for economy.

Cordially yours,

CLARENCE R. MILES.

Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that the Congress should consider taking a backward step reverting to multiple supply bills. They are the quill pen and the three-legged stool in an adding-machine age. They are the oxcart and the kyak in a jet-plane era. The decision on the applicability of the one bill to modern budgetary conditions determines whether under our form of government the representatives of the people can control national spending or whether they will continue on down the rapidly accelerating declivities of the road to unbalanced budgets and mounting national debt.

SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 60 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRICE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, a number of days ago, I spoke of the benefits resulting from soil conservation in north Louisiana; and our farmers are most grateful for these benefits. I now wish to speak of the need of our section for further development of the soil and water resources.

One might assume from what I said the other day that all of our farm land in Louisiana is under the effect of the soil-conservation practices. Such is not the case. On the contrary, in spite of the enormous progress which has been made in the past few years, only one and one-half million acres of land in Louisiana are now under combined soil-conservation treatment. This represents only 16 percent of the farm land of the State. Louisiana has a total, roughly, of 10,000,000 acres of farm land. Of the total of 28,913,000 acres of land, both farm and nonfarm in our State, only about one-third million is in use as farms.

It is interesting to know that 14 percent of the entire acreage of the United States is under soil-conservation treatment; while in Louisiana 16 percent is under treatment. We are, therefore, slightly above the national average for this type of service; but we are yet far below what is needed to complete our work of stopping erosion, drainage, reforestation, and pasture deterioration. At the rate we have been proceeding within the last 10 years, I would say that it will require 50 more years to complete this work. Perhaps the Nation will never be completely treated for combined soil conservation; but at least our plans should go forward with this purpose. Twenty-six percent of the acreage of the country is planned for this treatment as against 33 percent planned for the State of Louisiana. I believe all of this clearly indicates the need for this work in our State for some time to come.

In Louisiana, during the last few years, the need for fertilizer and pasture improvement has been more and more pronounced. Our cattlemen and our farmers have entered into this program with much zeal, and as a result, we find much of our meadowland undergoing a face-lifting operation. The winter cover crops give a new appearance to the countryside even during the course of the drab, dull winter months; and in the growing seasons, the results in production are very evident. All of these programs must proceed to completion. I have always supported them.

More important, if possible, than this is the great drainage program which we have set out for our State. Since so much of our land is low and flat, drainage is all-important to us. This program started a number of years ago; and it is continuing at the present time.

The program of soil erosion and conservation is producing magnificent results in every section of the country. It is increasing our soil fertility and our production. It has produced crops in the past few years in vast abundance, although, of course, production this year is somewhat down. The improved condition of our soil, and the zeal with which our farmers apply themselves, are having the effect of producing crops to the point of piling up surpluses.

Cotton, wheat, corn, and tobacco are all in surplus now. We in the cotton areas are especially concerned about production of this southern staple. Although for several years we have had record yields, our Government-owned cotton surpluses are now reduced to 2,372,000 bales. Government reports show the production of cotton for the 1949 season was in excess of 16,127,000 bales; and our figures further show an American carry-over of 11,000,000 bales is at hand. These records, and equally optimistic forecasts for the future, have caused the reinstitution of acreage allocations.

Mr. Speaker, I am one who believes in free enterprise; and I believe that our farmers would be much better off, in the long run, were they permitted to continue to farm without restriction and without regulation. When, however, the prodigious efforts of these who toil on our farms produce food and fiber in record quantities, I feel that some protection should be given these people in their efforts. The Congress provided for acreage reduction of basic crops. Last year our farmers tilled 27,000,000 acres of cotton land and produced 16,127,000 bales of cotton. Eight or nine million bales would have been enough cotton to have served the needs of our country. This year, by legislation, our cotton acreage is to be reduced to 22,000,000 acres.

Generally speaking, our farmers understand the situation and are willing to do their part in controlling production from extremes and excesses of past years. There have been inequities in the administration of this law. These inequities have had the effect of seriously hurting some of our farmers and the effect of aiding other farmers. This is most unfortunate. Improvement in administration must be had throughout the entire Cotton Belt, and no farmer must be made the victim of malicious and calculated efforts to injure him and the production of his crop. I shall continue to fight as long as unfairness remains.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, the time may soon come when all controls over cotton production may be removed. When, however, our soil-conservation practices improve the production of the farm and the advanced method of our farmers increase vastly the capacities of each individual farm hand to produce, the problem of surplus production is presented which is most difficult to solve.

REA PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker, almost hand in hand with this program of soil conservation moves the program of rural electrification. The good effect of it is seen at every village, every crossroads, and on every farm. It is felt in the home which now has fine electric lights, and on the farm, which has hired old man kilowatt to do the manual work. Electricity on the farm lights up the barns, pumps the water, runs the machines, and is the handy man who is available 24 hours of the day and at every turn. REA is changing the face of the landscape of Louisiana; and I am proud of the fact that I have supported REA during every session of Congress which I have attended; and that I have voted for every dollar which has been appropriated for REA since coming to Congress.

This is a great program for our farms. It is a program which has not cost our Government one dollar of public money. It is one on which much work must yet be done before we finish the job. On June 30, 1949, only 71.4 percent of our farms had electricity available. We estimate that on June 30, 1950, a few days off, some 75 percent of Louisiana farms will be electrified. This means that 25 percent or one-fourth of our farms are still in darkness; and I am one who will not be satisfied until every Louisiana farm possesses this great boon to our way of life.

Another program of the Federal Government goes hand in hand with the REA program. It is the rural telephone program. As with REA, we want private industry to do the job of providing these things for our families. It is when private industry fails or refuses to provide electricity that our Government should act; but I believe that we owe a fundamental duty to those who live in the rural areas to make the way of life on the farm as comfortable as life is now to those who dwell in the big cities.

With this in mind, the Congress passed a law last year to aid in bringing the telephone to the rural areas. Under this bill, Congress says that it will lend the money to telephone companies to provide service which is needed and to provide first-class equipment in rural areas where poor equipment is now being used. We give the telephone companies 1 year during which they can apply for these loans to begin the new work. After the end of the 1 year period, either REA may borrow the money and use it to provide telephone service to the farms throughout the country, or cooperatives may be formed to do this job. I am determined that our farmers and their families shall have those necessities and those comforts which the city dweller accepts without question, if they desire to have them.

With good farm roads for which we are now providing millions of dollars, with soil improvement and soil conservation, with electricity and with telephone, I feel that our Federal program to take care of the farmers will have made substantial progress. Already acting under the stimulus of the federation rural telephone law, many companies are now engaged in a mad rush to provide the service which should have been made available 10 years ago to our people. I shall continue to fight for this program until the demand for telephone on the farms of Louisiana has been fully met.

HOUSING ACTIVITIES

About 5 years ago I saw the need of an independent, local FHA office in northwest Louisiana; and I set to work to get this office for us. From the beginning of the FHA activities, authority had been vested in a distant point, and the approval of our applications was constantly delayed and made more difficult by this fact. Beginning with an office of three people, dependent upon a regional office located several hundred miles away, I have developed FHA into an office employing 40 or more people, and independent of every office in the country save Washington. I have supported applications for public housing when sponsored by local authorities and have helped on numerous housing projects throughout the northern part of the State.

One of the many results of the establishment of an independent office in north Louisiana was the creation of an interest by lending agencies in housing projects in smaller places throughout the northern part of the State. As a result of this, increased FHA activity was evidenced at once and much building has been sponsored throughout the entire congressional district. At the present time, this area of Louisiana is undergoing an unprecedented building boom, with more than $40,000,000 of construction in operation, or pending. A great deal of additional construction is necessary, and with proper use of the new facilities of FHA and other lending agencies, our section of the State will expand much further. I have given my full cooperation in obtaining this construction activity.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

One of the programs in which I take especial pleasure in working upon is the national defense program. I have supported our efforts to protect our country against invasion and to preserve the peace of the world. During the course of my life, I have witnessed, first-hand, two world wars; and I frankly do not want to live to see a third world war. It is with these ideas in mind that I have taken a most active part in our defense program. As the vice chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I have contributed a large part to the defense bills which have passed the House in the last few years.

I have personally introduced and helped put through the House the Reserve retirement law—Public Law 810; the law increasing the GI pay from $50 to $75 per month; uniform military justice law; and I am now working on the bill to create a national armory program, at a cost of some $400,000,000. These and many other measures have given us the backbone of our national defense program during the last few years. I shall continue this work until such time as our people feel safe from the aggression of the Soviet and can return undisturbed to the paths of peace without having daily to fear the Russians.

On the local front, I am sure every one is familiar with the part I have played in the expansion of Barksdale Air Base. Since I have come to Congress, the base has expanded in personnel from 1,800 officers and men to almost 10,000 officers and men, including civilian workers. This has been accomplished at a cost of more than $45,000,000, and the results of this work can be seen by any visitor who takes time to inspect this magnificent air base and note its mighty institutions.

As a result of my efforts, a contract for the construction of 692 housing units of the base has been let, to be built at a cost of some $7,000,000. I hope to see ground broken on the project within a few weeks. In the Congress, I have just been working on a bill, which has passed the House and the Senate and will soon be signed by the President, to authorize $1,500,000 for the construction of jet fuel storage at the Barksdale Air Base.

I actively urged the transfer of the Slack Air Depot following the war from the Transportation Corps to Barksdale Air Base. It is being used now for storage by the Air Force and is filling a valuable place in our defense requirements. The Louisiana Ordnance Plant is being kept in a stand-by condition, usable within 24 hours after the outbreak of trouble, in the event of hostilities. During this period, a part of the base is being used for the manufacture of fertilizer; and the entire operation employs the services of 500 to 700 persons.

I have worked long and earnestly in the development of our Reserve establishment. In the Fourth Congressional District, many units of the National Guard and the Reserves have been formed and are now in operation. They are a valuable asset to our north Louisiana community and will form the first Reserve contingent of men upon whom we rely in the event of a national emergency. This program is of tremendous importance to our section of Louisiana and to the Nation; and I shall continue to work actively to build up our Reserve components of the Defense Establishment.

National defense legislation is costing a vast amount of money. It is falling with a heavy burden upon our taxpayers; and yet it is vital to our way of life and our security as an independent people.

The Air Force is working upon the location of the site for the Air Academy. Although more than 600 applications have been filed by cities and towns throughout the United States at the present time, much interest has been exhibited locally in such a project. I am working on it with the idea of bringing this project to our section of the State. My activity as the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee puts me in an advantageous position to aid our people in pushing their applications for this Academy, which will cost more than a hundred million dollars when built.

VETERANS' PROGRAM

As your Representative from the Fourth Congressional District in the Congress, I have consistently supported veterans' legislation. In fact, I helped the American Legion draft the GI bill of rights, and I supported it when it was before the Congress for final passage. I am the author of the terminal leave pay bill, which paid the sum of $3,500,000 in funds for leave pay to the enlisted veterans throughout the United States. I personally handled this bill on the floor of the House and sent it on its eventful way to the Senate. I opposed the Senate version of the bill after it was amended, and finally sat on the conference committee which gave our veterans the final version of the bill which became law.

Locally, I have been just as active on behalf of this strong program for our veterans. Early during the progress of the Second World War, I conceived the idea of obtaining a VA hospital for north Louisiana; and for many years I worked on this project, at times to the exclusion of every other project. As a result of this work, our great hospital on the banks of the Red River now approaches completion, and will be in use by the first of October 1950. In the future, our veteran population will be able to secure hospitalization locally in north Louisiana; and families and friends will be able to visit our sick and disabled veterans without having to go hundreds of miles away from home to be with them in their critical days of suffering.

In addition to the hospital, I worked for the establishment of a VA regional office for north Louisiana; and this office is now functioning, rendering service to our veterans who, before its establishment, had to go to New Orleans for help; and is located on the Dodd College property in Shreveport.

I am now giving my attention to the matter of obtaining $1,500,000 for the purpose of constructing a permanent building for the regional office, to be located on the hospital grounds overlooking the Red River. I hope that the appropriation for this purpose will be placed in the budget for 1951 and that this building may soon become a reality.

I promised to work for the establishment of a veterans' center for north Louisiana. This center has been authorized, and even now the machinery for the operation of the veterans' center is being set up and is beginning to function. When the new office building is completed and the veterans' center becomes an efficiently functioning organization, I will have done everything possible to give our veterans the service and help to which defenders of the Nation in time of war are entitled to receive.

CONCLUSION

All of these programs are very important. They are needed badly by our people and by the Nation generally. None of them is more important than our program of maintaining permanent peace. They all unite behind the program to prevent a third world war. A Nation strong economically and developed internally, a satisfied people, and a strong defense are necessary to increase the influence and prestige of this Government in its diplomatic affairs. They are all necessary to prevent a return of mankind's greatest curse—modern warfare.

We are moving through perilous times in the world. In the wake of World War II, people and nations of the world are dissatisfied and are oftentimes struggling to obtain things which they cannot rightfully possess. If the Congress, by acting with calmness and with firmness, can prevent a third world war, we will have accomplished a great deal for the happiness of the people of the United States.

It has been a privilege to represent the Fourth Congressional District in Congress. I am grateful to a loyal, sympathetic and cooperative people who stand behind an active program for the development of our section of Louisiana. I appreciate the confidence which you have shown in me when you call upon this office for help in your governmental problems, and I hope that you will continue to show this confidence and to continue to call upon me to help cut red tape, eliminate inefficiency, and bring to you the efficient service which a great Government should render its people.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. FURCOLO asked and was given permission to address the House for 20 minutes on June 28, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISHER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement made by him on yesterday.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. MULTER (at the request of Mr. PRICE) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous material.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 3436. An act to amend the War Contractors Relief Act, as amended;

H. R. 3498. An act for the relief of the Gluckin Corp.;

H. R. 4100. An act for the relief of Calvin E. Cranford;

H. R. 4163. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Walker;

H. R. 4960. An act for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth H. Whitney;

H. R. 5979. An act for the relief of John Tweit;

H. R. 6652. An act for the relief of Mrs. Fujiko Chichie Imbert, wife, and Robert Imbert, Jr., son of an American soldier;

H. R. 7050. An act for the relief of Louie Gam Yean;

H. R. 7065. An act for the relief of Kazuko Miyama Akana and Chang King Akana;

H. R. 7066. An act for the relief of Setsuko Amano;

H. R. 7073. An act for the relief of Koto Kogami Kitsu and Jeannette Akemi Kitsu;

H. R. 7199. An act for the relief of Nobuko Maeda;

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Mrs. Bernard Smith;

H. R. 7315. An act for the relief of Daijiro Yoshida;

H. R. 7362. An act for the relief of Mrs. Willard Thulin (formerly Jutta Kono);

H. R. 7416. An act for the relief of Suzuko Takanashi;

H. R. 7579. An act to extend the Rubber Act of 1948 (Public Law 469, 80th Cong.), and for other purposes;

H. R. 7656. An act for the relief of David George Callaway;

H. R. 7658. An act for the relief of Mitsuko Ito;

H. R. 7682. An act for the relief of Mrs. Akiko Osada Gustafson; and

H. R. 8270. An act relating to the renewal of contracts for the carrying of mail on star routes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 714. An act for the relief of Pieter Cornelis ten Wolde and family;

H. R. 1038. An act for the relief of William Richard Geoffrey Malpas;

H. R. 1609. An act for the relief of Arne Gordon Westley;

H. R. 2226. An act for the relief of Victor C. Kaminski (also known as Victor Kaminski);

H. R. 2705. An act for the relief of Martin Kenneth Ikeda;

H. R. 3018. An act for the relief of Camilla Fabris;

H. R. 3009. An act for the relief of Dr. Ali Reza Bassir;

H. R. 4532. An act for the relief of Dr. Ta Fu Wu;

H. R. 4903. An act for the relief of Krikor G. Guiragossian;

H. R. 5355. An act for the relief of Mindel Malek;

H. R. 5541. An act for the relief of William Lawrence Tan;

H. R. 6589. An act for the relief of Mitsue Miyamoto;

H. R. 6747. An act for the relief of Helga Holleb;

H. R. 6756. An act for the relief of Arthur Chen Shu Jee;

H. R. 6787. An act for the relief of Mrs. Kyoko Nakamura Kornhauser;

H. R. 6880. An act for the relief of Mrs. Kiyo Narumi Murakami and Keiko Narumi;

H. R. 6894. An act for the relief of Mrs. Nobuko Eto Heard;

H. R. 7035. An act for the relief of Hisako Sakata Ikezawa;

H. R. 7047. An act for the relief of Mrs. Tomo Nonque Rosevear;

H. R. 7096. An act for the relief of Mrs. Maria Salome Holland;

H. R. 7292. An act for the relief of Erio Louis Tomita and Fumiko Tomita;

H. R. 7363. An act for the relief of Suzuko Yagi and Anne Yagi; and

H. R. 7889. An act to postpone the application of the Classification Act of 1949 to certain employees of the Selective Service System.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL, for an indefinite period, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. LOVRE, for 1 week, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 21, 1950, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1504. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a report on records and lists or schedules covering records proposed for disposal by certain Government agencies; to the Committee on House Administration.

1505. A letter from the Acting Attorney General, transmitting a copy of the order of the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service granting the application for permanent residence filed by the subject of such order, pursuant to section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1948 (Public Law 774); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. BARDEN: Committee on Education and Labor. H. R. 7940. A bill to provide financial assistance for local educational agencies in areas affected by Federal activities, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 2287). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. WILLIS: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 8792. A bill to amend the statute relating to certificates of trade-mark registrations; with amendment (Rept. No. 2288). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. KILDAY: Committee of conference. H. R. 8198. A bill to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2289). Ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. BYRNE of New York: Committee of conference. H. R. 1169. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Marion T. Schwartz (Rept. No. 2286). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. COOLEY:

H. R. 8881. A bill to permit educational, religious, or charitable institutions to import textile machines and parts thereof for instructional purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania:

H. R. 8882. A bill to amend section 23 (p) (1) (D) of the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALTER:

H. R. 8883. A bill to amend section 17 of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 so as to authorize the payment of fair compensation to persons contracting to deliver certain strategic or critical minerals or metals in cases of failure to recover reasonable costs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8884. A bill to provide for extension of terms of patents where the use, exploitation, or promotion thereof was prevented, impaired, or delayed by causes due to war or other national emergency; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHITE of California:

H. R. 8885. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to undertake the North Fork Kings River development, California, as an integral part of the Central Valley project, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BIEMILLER:

H. R. 8886. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act and the Vocational Education Act of 1946 to provide an emergency 5-year program of grants for education in the fields of medicine, osteopathy, optometry, dentistry, dental hygiene, nursing, sanitary engineering, and public health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PETERSON:

H. R. 8887. A bill to declare that the United States holds certain lands for the Seminole Tribe of Florida; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. GRANAHAN:

H. R. 8888. A bill to provide for retroactive adjustments in compensation in certain reclassification cases; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. VINSON:

H. R. 8889. A bill to provide for the organization of the Air Force and the Department of the Air Force, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. O'HARA of Illinois:

H. R. 8890. A bill to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 so as to make applicable to the Government Printing Office the provisions of section 306 thereof, relating to the power to remit, where just and equitable, the whole or any part of liquidated damages under contracts; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana:

H. J. Res. 489. Joint resolution to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Mid-Century International Exposition, Inc., New Orleans, La., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mrs. BOSONE:

H. Con. Res. 224. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the proceedings in Congress upon the occasion of the acceptance of the statue of Brigham Young; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. SECREST:

H. Con. Res. 225. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should rescind foreign-trade agreements with Communist-controlled countries; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FARRINGTON:

H. R. 8891. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Shizuo Chiba Street and Janice Street; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8892. A bill for the relief of Hirako Hirohashi and Linda Marie Kumiko Kimitsuka; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8893. A bill for the relief of Toshiko Kishiki; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8894. A bill for the relief of Michiko Yamanouchi and Yuichi Yamanouchi; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRANAHAN:

H. R. 8895. A bill for the relief of Sigmund M. Sterling and others; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEDRICK:

H. R. 8896. A bill for the relief of Sarah Kabacznik; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HERLONG:

H. R. 8897. A bill for the relief of Dewey Pickett; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HESELTON:

H. R. 8898. A bill for the relief of John Yansak; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOBBS:

H. R. 8899. A bill for the relief of Peter B. Olney; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEOGH:

H. R. 8900. A bill for the relief of Catherine B. Molostvoff; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LANE:

H. R. 8901. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Asako Ikeda Heaney; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MARSHALL:

H. R. 8902. A bill for the relief of Satoko Matsushima Hoglund; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHITE of Idaho:

H. R. 8903. A bill for the relief of certain Basque aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful God, who knowest our necessities before we ask and our ignorance in asking, have compassion, we beseech Thee, upon our infirmities; strengthen us in all noble purposes and daily increase in us the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and knowledge and true godliness. Dowered with privileges as no other nation, may the richness of our heritage be to us Thy call to protect the weak and exploited, to unshackle the enslaved, to clear the way for freedom, that through the potent ministry of our dear land all peoples of the earth may be blessed. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, June 20, 1950, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1672) for the relief of Efrosini Abad, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3406. An act for the relief of Ellen Fullard-Leo;

H. R. 4065. An act to provide for the relinquishment of mineral reservations in the land patent of Thomas Stephens;

H. R. 4836. An act for the relief of Xylda L. Driver;

H. R. 5110. An act for the relief of Janos (John) Treber and Mrs. Katalin (Katherine) Treber;

H. R. 5782. An act for the relief of Mrs. Vera Raupe;

H. R. 6221. An act to authorize the sale of certain public lands in Alaska to the This-Side-of-Heaven Children's Home for use as a children's home;

H. R. 6287. An act for the relief of Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis;

H. R. 6363. An act conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc.;

H. R. 6709. An act for the relief of Ed Howard Russell;

H. R. 6850. An act for the relief of Lt. Col. F. A. Ferguson;

H. R. 6964. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Josephine Stevens Goering;

H. R. 7071. An act for the relief of Mrs. Masa Iyoki;

H. R. 7079. An act for the relief of Mrs. Gin Shibasaki Okafuji;

H. R. 7204. An act for the relief of Maria Cristina D'Angelo;

H. R. 7228. An act for the relief of Kazuko Kamada;

H. R. 7414. An act for the relief of Teresa Gentile and Galliano Gentile;

H. R. 7753. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land on the Chena River to the Tanana Valley Sportsmen's Association, of Fairbanks, Alaska;

H. R. 7783. An act for the relief of Mrs. Donald Rafter;

H. R. 7815. An act for the relief of John Yee Horn;

H. R. 7820. An act for the relief of Keiko Uchida Doane and her minor child;

H. R. 7873. An act to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7916. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to execute an oil and gas lease on a certain tract of land in Park County, Wyo.;

H. R. 7970. An act for the relief of Mrs. Regina Anderson and her minor child;

H. R. 8183. An act for the relief of Asako Tsuchida;

H. R. 8289. An act for the relief of Yee Balche Yee;

H. R. 8361. An act for the relief of Toshiko Murai;

H. R. 8381. An act for the relief of Mrs. Joseph C. Grant;

H. R. 8440. An act for the relief of Noae Kawashima;

H. R. 8451. An act for the relief of Yoshie Nozawa;

H. R. 8500. An act for the relief of Hatsuko Torikai;

H. R. 8581. An act for the relief of Yasuko Higuchi Thomson;

H. R. 8583. An act for the relief of Hisako Shimizu;

H. R. 8655. An act for the relief of Toshiko Kikyo and Francis Kikyo;

H. R. 8600. An act for the relief of Yuriko Aoyama; and

H. R. 8722. An act for the relief of Jun Hin Lum.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. FLANDERS was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate today and through Monday next.

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LONG was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate for an indefinite period.

On request of Mr. LUCAS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. PEPPER was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate today and the remainder of this week.

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. AIKEN was excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate beginning today and continuing until Wednesday of next week.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

On request of Mr. HUNT, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary was authorized to meet this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE HATCH ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1243) to amend the Hatch Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, a quorum call is automatic.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, before the roll is called I ask unanimous consent that the time, which is already divided under the unanimous-consent agreement, be in charge, respectively, of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] for the proponents and of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] for the opponents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	McMahon
Anderson	Hayden	Malone
Benton	Hendrickson	Martin
Brewster	Hickenlooper	Millikin
Bricker	Hill	Mundt
Bridges	Hoey	Murray
Butler	Holland	Myers
Byrd	Humphrey	Neely
Cain	Hunt	O'Mahoney
Chapman	Ives	Robertson
Chavez	Jenner	Russell
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Cordon	Johnson, Tex.	Schoeppel
Darby	Kefauver	Smith, Maine
Donnell	Kem	Smith, N. J.
Douglas	Kerr	Sparkman
Dworshak	Kilgore	Stennis
Eastland	Knowland	Taft
Ecton	Lehman	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Lodge	Thye
Ferguson	Lucas	Tydings
Frear	McCarran	Watkins
Fulbright	McCarthy	Wherry
George	McClellan	Wiley
Gillette	McFarland	Williams
Green	McKellar	Withers

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into 1 hour of debate on the conference report is provided, to be equally divided between the opponents and the proponents, to be controlled, respectively, by the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to repeat what I said yesterday about the program following disposition of the conference report. Immediately following action on the conference report we shall consider H. R. 6826, the extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948. I had expressed the hope that we would be able to finish consideration of that bill today, and I had suggested that a night session would be held, if necessary, in order to hurry it along, because it is absolutely necessary either that the bill be passed or that there be passed a joint resolution extending the period of the effectiveness of the present act for at least 30 days, in order to give us an opportunity to pass the bill itself. I hope we will be able to finish it today, at least not later than tomorrow.

If I could get a unanimous-consent agreement acceptable to those who are against the selective-service measure, or who are for certain amendments which are debatable, I would not ask the Senate to hold a night session; but I shall take that matter up immediately following the vote on the pending conference report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to state to the Senate that the deficiency appropriation bill, which will be favorably reported to the Senate today from the Committee on Appropriations, will be ready for consideration tomorrow morning.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. If more time is to be given under unanimous consent, I think it should be evenly divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement nothing is now in order except debate on the conference report.

Mr. TAFT. Then I suggest that Senators wait until after the vote, whenever it is had.

Mr. President, my opposition to the conference report is based on my conviction that it simply kills the Hatch Act provisions, or some very important sections of them. The Hatch Act was passed in order to keep elections clean, to prevent the use of Government positions to coerce employees, to prevent the activity of millions of Government employees, who have increased to such tremendous numbers today that they can affect materially the results of elections.

The Hatch Act, in various sections, to which I shall not refer, provides for a criminal penalty of a $1,000 fine, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. But in the one provision of the Hatch Act which was considered the most important it is provided that—

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

In particular, it was aimed at those who used their positions, their official authority or influence, for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. That was considered such a heinous violation of election laws that the act provided that—

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

What the conference report does is to eliminate that penalty provision. If, Mr. President, it was considered that that was too severe a penalty, and if there had been substituted for it a fine of a thousand dollars, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, as in the case of many other provisions in the Hatch Act, I would not oppose the report. But instead of that, what is done seems to me to be a complete elimination, for practical purposes, of any penalty whatsoever. Instead of an automatic removal, the conference report provides that—

If in the case of any person violating the provisions of this section it is found by the United States Civil Service Commission that such violation warrants removal he shall be immediately removed.

That is a delegation of legislative power. The members of the Civil Service Commission, or a majority of them, may well believe that no such violation ever warrants such a severe penalty as removal, in which case they simply will not find that it warrants removal, and therefore the individual will not be immediately removed.

Under the curious provisions of the conference report it is doubtful whether, in some cases, there will be any penalty, because the report proceeds to say:

If the Commission finds by unanimous vote that the violation does not warrant removal, a lesser penalty shall be imposed by direction of the Commission: Provided, That in no case shall the penalty be less than 30 days' suspension without pay.

Mr. President, if one member of the Commission thinks that the violation warrants removal and two members think that it does not warrant removal, then that difference of opinion in the Commission will result in no penalty at all, because there will be no affirmative finding that the violation warrants removal, and, therefore, the individual cannot be immediately removed, and there will be no unanimous opinion that the violation does not warrant removal but for which a lesser penalty may be imposed. There will be no penalty at all. I do not know that that was intended, but that certainly is the result of the curious language of the conference report.

Under those circumstances also, suppose there is a unanimous finding that the action of an individual warrants a lesser penalty than removal, and that the penalty is 30 days' suspension without pay. What kind of penalty is that? The political party that has employed the individual to work for it, for whom he is working, will have no difficulty in paying his 30 days' pay or 60 days' pay. In other words, the whole effect of the proposed amendment of the Hatch Act is to kill the Hatch Act. That is why I am opposing the conference report.

Mr. President, I feel that under the circumstances the report should be rejected and it should go back to the conference committee. The committee ought certainly to rewrite the language of this penalty provision, and, in my opinion, they should impose a criminal penalty for violation of the Hatch Act. If that were done I would no longer oppose the report. But I think the Nation ought to know that what is being done here by the action of the Senate and the action of the House is an emasculation of the most important provisions of the Hatch Act, so that if the report is adopted there no longer is a Hatch Act.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who may not have been present during the debate which took place some days ago, I shall briefly refer to the history of the pending legislation, which originated in the House of Representatives as an amendment to the Hatch Act designed to give some discretion to the Civil Service Commission in imposing a penalty less than removal in cases considered by the Commission to be minor infractions of the law. The present law provides that for any act by an employee of the Federal Government which amounts to a violation of the Hatch Act, the only possible penalty that can be prescribed is dismissal; that is, the law automatically imposes the penalty of absolute dismissal.

In the course of the years there have arisen a number of cases in which that penalty had to be imposed, although there was absolutely no conscious guilt. The person involved was standing before the law guilty of certain acts, but really did not know the implications of them. A case which, to my mind, is outstanding is that of a very young lady, a post office employee, who was asked by a friend to hand out some political cards. The young lady did so, not knowing the implication and not realizing what was involved, and she lost her job. I shall not go into the details, but there are a number of cases of that kind.

The report is designed simply to vest the members of the Civil Service Commission with some discretion respecting the penalty in minor cases. Under the present law they first have to determine whether or not an employee is guilty. In the first place, this is administrative law more than straight criminal law, and I have found that there is some difference between the wording of a criminal law and this kind of a law. But under the present law the Commission first must determine the guilt, which they will continue to do under the bill as proposed by the conference report. That can be done by a 2 to 1 vote of the Commission; in other words, there is majority control.

Under my interpretation of the present law, which I think is clear, and which is confirmed by a letter from the United States Civil Service Commission, when an act is committed, and after a hearing, it is determined that the employee in question is guilty, even if only two of the three Commissioners vote "guilty," the person involved is automatically discharged.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. To me it is clear that they must not only find the person guilty, but they must find that such violation warrants removal. In other words, they have not only to find him guilty, but they must impose the sentence. Is that not correct?

Mr. STENNIS. I do not think that is a correct interpretation. If the Senator will permit me briefly to outline the conferees' interpretation of the language, and then to make comment thereon, I shall yield to the Senator for a question.

The conferees believed that the first thing that must be determined under this amendment, as under the present law, is the guilt or innocence of the person involved. If he is innocent that is the end of the matter. But if two Commissioners vote that the employee is guilty of the act charged and determine that his act is a violation of the statute, then he is discharged, even on a 2 to 1 vote.

Mr. TAFT. On what basis is that finding made? It is now proposed to repeal the only section that says anything about removal. The proposed language replaces the old subsection (b), does it not?

Mr. STENNIS. In part, the language of the conference report assumes a case where guilt has been determined.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. STENNIS. The language of the conference report in that respect could be improved, I think, so far as the use of the English language is concerned. However, it is unmistakably clear that there must be a determination of guilt, and then the question of punishment arises. I think the proper interpretation is that, when that question arises, unless there is a unanimous vote to impose a punishment of less than dismissal, the person automatically stands dismissed, even on a vote of 2 to 1 regarding his guilt.

Mr. President, I have before me a communication from the Civil Service Commission, dated June 19, and addressed to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. The Commission was asked to commit itself in writing to the Senate, with the understanding that its letter would be a part of the legislative history of this measure, and was asked to set forth in the letter its views and its interpretation of the conference report, and to state how it would administer the measure.

I submit the letter to the Senate as a part of the legislative history of this measure. I shall read some paragraphs of the letter, and then I shall ask unanimous consent to have the entire letter printed in the RECORD, if I am able to obtain unanimous consent for that purpose.

I read now from the letter from the Civil Service Commission:

> The first point for consideration is the portion of the bill amending the present penalty provisions of section 9 (b) of the Hatch Act.

That is the portion to which the Senator from Ohio addressed himself.

I read further from the letter:

> Under current law a Federal employee who has been found to have engaged in prohibited political activity must be removed from the service regardless of how minor the violation may have been. Under the proposed amendment the Civil Service Commissioners may by unanimous vote apply a suspension penalty in lieu of removal, with the express proviso that in no case shall this suspension be less than 30 days.
>
> It has been suggested that the language of the amended section 9 (b) as reported by the conferees is ambiguous and may lead to a situation in which a majority of the Commissioners would be in favor of a suspension, but inasmuch as the vote would not be unanimous the suspension could not be applied and as a result the violator would not be punished.

That is the case found by the Senator from Ohio. I read further:

> The Commission's view is that the proposed section 9 (b) must be read in its entirety, and as so read it means that if a Federal employee is found to have violated the political activity restrictions of section 9 of the Hatch Act, he must be removed from the service unless all three Civil Service Commissioners find that a lesser penalty should be applied.

That is the Commission's interpretation, and is right down the middle of the road. That states that if the employee is found to be guilty, he must be removed, unless a majority of the Civil Service Commission vote for a lesser penalty.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield briefly.

Mr. CORDON. Does the Senator mean to say, then, that a majority of the Civil Service Commission can determine on a lesser penalty? I think he meant to say that the vote on that question must be a unanimous vote.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator for that correction. What he has said is correct, namely, it must be a unanimous vote.

Mr. President, I read further from the letter of the Civil Service Commission:

> In practice the Commissioners would in each case first vote on the question whether or not the employee violated the law. If they made an affirmative finding, which could be by majority vote, then they would vote on the question whether the facts in the particular case are such as to warrant a penalty of less than removal. If the three Commissioners failed to agree on this second question then the vote of the first question would control and the employee would have to be removed from the service.

That is a direct committal as to the interpretation of this language, as presented by the conferees.

I read further from the letter:

> It should be pointed out that the Commission has been operating under section 12 of the Hatch Act for approximately 10 years. This is the section prohibiting political activity on the part of certain State officers and employees. In this type of case the Commission is called upon to make two decisions.

This is with reference to section 12, which covers employees of a State government who are paid in part by the Federal Government. Section 12 is the present law, not touched by the measure now before the Senate.

The two decisions which the Civil Service Commission makes under the present section 12 are:

> (1) Did the employee violate the law, and (2) if he did, does the violation warrant removal? During this entire 10-year period there has been only one split decision, and in that case the majority favored removal.

Mr. President, the language of the conference report is virtually the same as the language of section 12 of the present act. There was a difference between the language of section 12 and the language of section 9. Section 9 applied to Federal employees fully employed by the Federal Government. In other cases the employees were employed by a State, but the Federal Government contributed to their salaries—as, for instance, employees of the Agricultural Extension Services in the various States. Thus, after all, this language is adopted from section 12 of the present law; it is what I call administrative language. It is not like the language that I would include in a criminal statute.

Nevertheless, under the practice we have had the benefit of 10 or 12 years of administration of this law and of administrative practice by the Civil Service Commission; and section 12 has worked entirely satisfactorily, insofar as we have been able to determine.

The position of the conferees is that whatever doubt there might have been about the use of the language criticized, this letter, being a committal—not merely binding on the individual members of the Commission, but a committal on the Civil Service Commission itself—removes any doubt. The letter is clear and unequivocal; it is right down the line, stating that first the Commission has to determine the person's guilt, and that then he will be removed unless he receives the unanimous vote of the Commission in favor of imposing a lesser penalty.

I submit to the Senate that that makes it altogether conclusive, and does not leave any commission or any court or any other governmental body in a position to make any other interpretation of this language—in short, no interpretation except that set forth in the letter from the Civil Service Commission, which is presented to the Senate now as a part of the legislative history of this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter in its entirety, including the excerpts I have read into the RECORD, be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE, COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1950.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: This is in reply to your letter of June 16, 1950, requesting a statement of the Commission's views on the application of H. R. 1243 as reported by the conferees of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The first point for consideration is the portion of the bill amending the present penalty provisions of Section 9 (b) of the Hatch Act. Under current law a Federal employee who has been found to have engaged in prohibited political activity must be removed from the service regardless of how minor the violaiton may have been. Under the proposed amendment the Civil Service Commissioners may by unanimous vote apply a suspension penalty in lieu of removal, with the express proviso that in no case shall this suspension be less than 30 days.

It has been suggested that the language of the amended section 9 (b) as reported by the conferees is ambiguous and may lead to a situation in which a majority of the Commissioners would be in favor of a suspension, but inasmuch as the vote would not be unanimous the suspension could not be applied and as a result the violator would not be punished. The Commission's view is that the proposed section 9 (b) must be read in its entirety, and as so read it means that if a Federal employee is found to have violated the political activity restrictions of section 9 of the Hatch Act, he must be removed from the service unless all three Civil Service Commissioners find that a lesser penalty should be applied.

In practice the Commissioners would in each case first vote on the question whether or not the employee violated the law. If they made an affirmative finding, which could be by majority vote, then they would vote on the question whether the facts in the particular case are such as to warrant a penalty of less than removal. If the three Commissioners failed to agree on this second question then the vote on the first question would control and the employee would have to be removed from the service.

It should be pointed out that the Commission has been operating under section 12 of the Hatch Act for approximately 10 years. This is the section prohibiting political activity on the part of certain State officers and employees. In this type of case the Commission is called upon to make two decisions: (1) Did the employee violate the law, and (2) if he did, does the violation warrant removal? During this entire 10-year period there has been only one split decision, and in that case the majority favored removal.

It has also been suggested that the proposed section 9 (d) would throw open the confidential records of the Commission in those cases. In the past information regarding the alleged political activity of Federal employees was obtained by the Commission in investigations in which the witness was assured that the source of the information would be held confidential. During the past 2 years the Commission has been experimenting with obtaining information through affidavits in which the persons making the affidavits furnished such affidavits with the express understanding that there is no pledge that they would be treated as confidential. The Commission has as yet not decided whether to continue this nonconfidential system or whether to revert to the former method of obtaining information under a pledge of confidence.

It is the Commission's view of the proposed section 9 (d), as reported by the conferees, that if the Commission continues to obtain affidavits without any pledge of confidence such affidavits would be furnished the Congress or any committee thereof upon request. If, on the other hand, the Commission should find it necessary to revert to the former method of obtaining affidavits or other information under a pledge of confidence, then the Congress and any committee thereof would be furnished the texts of the affidavits but would not be furnished the names of the persons making the affidavits or any information which would have the effect of divulging the names of those witnesses.

In any event it is the Commission's understanding that it would not be required under the proposed section 9 (d) to make available to Congress or to any of its committees any intraoffice memoranda, confidential comments of investigators, and any other matters which the Commission should consider confidential.

The Commission for several years has recognized that the penalty provisions of section 9 (b) of the Hatch Act as they now exist result in injustices in many cases in that the same penalty or punishment must be given to very minor violators as is given in the case of those committing major violations of the act. Under the circumstances we feel that the penalty provisions provided in the proposed section 9 (b) of H. R. 1243 deserve favorable consideration in the interest of equity and justice.

You have also asked whether the amendment of section 16 of the Hatch Act would be made applicable to those localities in Tennessee, New Mexico, and Washington under the control of the Atomic Energy Commission.

H. R. 1243, as reported by the conferees, would continue section 16 in the form in which it has existed for the past 10 years with the additional proviso that the Commission's regulations could not contain a provision which would require the affected Federal employees to participate only as nonpartisan candidates for public office.

The present section 16 of the Hatch Act applies not only to municipalities in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital in the States of Maryland and Virginia, but applies also to any municipality in any State where the majority of the voters of the municipality are employed by the Government of the United States. The amended section 16 would also apply to any municipality in Tennessee, New Mexico, and Washington, or any other State, if the municipality held elections and a majority of the voters in the municipality were employed by the Government of the United States. The Commission understands, however, that the localities in Tennessee, New Mexico, and Washington under the control of the Atomic Energy Commission are not municipalities in the sense contemplated by section 16, and elections in those localities are not held in the sense contemplated by the section. We are advised that the Atomic Energy Commission has been permitting its employees in these localities to become candidates for and hold positions on an advisory council which consults with the community manager on municipal affairs. We are accordingly dealing here with localities which do not have a regular municipal form of government and do not have elections of the kind contemplated by section 16. It is, accordingly, the Commission's view that this amendment would not be applicable to the localities to which you refer.

By direction of the Commission:

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
Chairman.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. I seem to recall that in the original Senate text it was provided that a willful violator would automatically be removed from office.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. CAIN. I wonder whether the Senator from Mississippi will reflect on the reasons which resulted in the omission from the conference report, as it is now presented, of any reference to willful violators.

Mr. STENNIS. That is a very pertinent question, and it was explained when the conference report was before the Senate a few days ago.

It was found that the use of the word "willful" with reference to this type of law made the language so very strong that it would leave very little room for the operation of the amendment. In other words, the use of the word "willful" would mean that the act referred to malum prohibitum—in other words, prohibited by law—rather than something wrong by and of itself, or malum in se, as the Latin is. When the word "willful" is used in conjunction with a matter prohibited by the act, which is malum prohibitum, it has been consistently held by the courts that any knowledge whatsoever or any conscienceness whatsoever, on the part of the person involved, that the act was prohibited by law would render the act a willful one. When that test was applied, it was found that perhaps only one case in the history of the Hatch Act would fail to be willful. Therefore, we thought the language was too strict, and we omitted it. In my statement the other day, I said that the Commission certainly would be derelict in its duty, however, if it did not consider any willfulness as a part of the circumstances of the case, and that the Commission would have no right to ignore that point.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this point?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield now to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CORDON. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that the conferees found legal support for the proposition that the doing of an act prohibited by law is the doing of it willfully, even though the one performing the act does not in fact know that he is violating the law?

Mr. STENNIS. Expressed in another way, under statutes of this type, it is held that a knowledge of wrongdoing is not necessary in order for the act to be willful.

Mr. CORDON. A knowledge that it is a violation of a mandate is necessary, is it not, in order that it be willful? Is there any question in the Senator's mind about that?

Mr. STENNIS. That is, a knowledge that the act done was expressly prohibited by law?

Mr. CORDON. That is correct.

Mr. STENNIS. Those terms are very close. I satisfied my mind thoroughly about it at the time, and in my recent statement to the Senate I presented cases on that point. There are cases where the person actually had read the law; but that is seldom so, although notices are posted as to how the law will be applied. But, anyway, the practical test is that, of all the cases which came up, I think only one would have been judged to be not willful. We therefore thought the language of the Senate bill was too strong.

Mr. CORDON. Is it a fact that, of all the cases which have been brought under this particular law and this particular section of the law, only one was a case in which the individual charged did not know that he was violating the law?

Mr. STENNIS. In technical law, they are charged with notice of what the law is. In technical law and in the technical consideration of it, as I recall, there was only one case that would have qualified to have been clearly not willful, because in malum prohibitum law the test is not so rigid, and no consciousness of wrongdoing is necessary in order for it to be adjudged willful in criminal law.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CORDON. The Senator from Oregon does not quite understand this situation. I am referring to the facts in connection with the prosecutions or investigations of violations of this section. Is it correct to say that, of all the violations of the section which have come to the attention of the Civil Service Commission, only in one instance was there a violation by an individual who was ignorant of the fact that his act was a violation of this law?

Mr. STENNIS. No; I would not state it that way at all. But as I recall the facts, there was only one case which, under the interpretation of laws of this kind, could have been classified as not willful in law, and not willful in fact. But there is a very fine discrimination as to the words, and I inserted in the RECORD during the previous debate a statement of exactly which decisions it was that we relied on. I do not have them before me now. I have here for the Senator from Oregon a memorandum as to the cases which were before the conferees, which has already been inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator justifies as mild a penalty for coercion of employees, and so forth, as 30 days' suspension, when in the same act we have an alternative penalty of $1,000 or imprisonment for 1 year for anyone who merely leaves out the name of an officer in publishing a political advertisement. That is in section 3. In this case it seems to me we have gone from the sublime to the ridiculous. We have gone from a penalty of complete removal—which is a penalty that really deters, though perhaps it is too severe—to a position where the Civil Service Commission may practically wipe out any penalty whatever. I cannot see that removal is the proper penalty in all cases, or that suspension is a proper penalty, at all. Complete removal, if a very severe automatic penalty is desired, is all right. But when discretion is given to the Civil Service Commission, and all it can do is to suspend for 30 or 60 days, involving a little loss of pay which will be made up by the political party that the employee, the man or woman, is supporting, it seems to me we have no penalty left at all in connection with the most important provision of the Hatch Act, while at the same time there is retained in section 3, among other sections, the very substantial penalty of criminal prosecution before a court.

Mr. STENNIS. I may point out that the Senator said the only thing that could be done was to impose a mild penalty of 30 days. The Senator understands that that is the minimum penalty which can be imposed. It may extend anywhere from 30 days on up to complete dismissal. Thirty days is merely the minimum possible penalty, and that can be imposed only by unanimous vote of the Commission. I think that has a meaning. I think it has something of practical value.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot understand why, for the most serious violations of the Hatch Act, we give the Civil Service Commission complete discretion to impose suspensions which may amount to nothing at all, when we actually drag a man into a criminal court for other violations of the act which may be of a less serious character.

Mr. STENNIS. The only reference in the conference report to the $1,000 fine and 1 year in the penitentiary is made for the purpose of broadening the present law, to make it a little more inclusive, and to cover the act of putting unsigned matter in the mail.

Mr. TAFT. My point is that all the provisions of the present law, except the one referred to, attach a criminal penalty for the most serious violations, but here we are reducing the penalty of automatic removal, which perhaps was an equivalent and severe deterrent, to the discretionary imposing of temporary suspension, as a result of which no man is brought up in public, no man is brought before a court. What is finally imposed is a little loss of the pay, which the political party can very easily make up.

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator from Mississippi is not interested in trying to emasculate the Hatch Act. If he thought the provisions of the conference report did so, he would not favor it. I think it does exactly what it is designed to do. It merely imposes, in the case of very minor violations, discretionary authority within the Commission to impose less than complete removal.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, will he yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STENNIS. I think the time has about expired.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, may I ask one more question?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I will yield further time to the Senator. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. STENNIS. I take it that is for the purpose of propounding a question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friend from Ohio for permitting me to have 2 minutes in which to make comment on the point he has raised. For the purpose of emphasis, Mr. President, I should like to read a paragraph of a letter which the Senator from Mississippi has read, which gives the interpretation of the Civil Service Commission on the modified section 12, which it has been enforcing for 10 years, and which the Senator from Mississippi says is substantially the same as it has been during all that time. The Civil Service Commission says, in the fifth paragraph of the letter of June 19, 1950, to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]:

> It should be pointed out that the Commission has been operating under section 12 of the Hatch Act for approximately 10 years. This is the section prohibiting political activity on the part of certain State officers and employees. In this type of case the Commission is called upon to make two decisions: (1) Did the employee violate the law, and (2) if he did, does the violation warrant removal? During this entire 10-year period there has been only one split decision, and in that case the majority favored removal.

The Senator from Mississippi has tried to make it crystal clear that no one can escape proper punishment, because the first question, which is determined by a majority vote is, Did he violate the law? When that has been determined, then the remainder of the issue to be determined is, What should the punishment be? Unless the Commission is unanimous that the punishment shall not be dismissal, then dismissal is compulsory. But if the Commission is unanimous that the offense is so minor that it does not justify a harsh penalty, it can fix a lesser penalty.

It seems to me that in justice and fairness in administering laws which carry a criminal penalty, we certainly would not want to apply to a misdemeanor the penalty for a felony. We do not do it as to any other criminal law. I certainly hope that will be the attitude of the Senate when we vote today on the conference report.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will speak briefly, primarily on the issue which has risen in Virginia and Maryland, where both Democrats and Republicans are hamstrung by a ruling of the Civil Service Commission which we think is most unfair and most unjust, the effect of which is that if we organize and have mass meetings, conventions, and all the political activities of a political party, we are not engaged in politics if we call ourselves nonpartisan, but if we call ourselves Republicans or Democrats we get the axe on the neck. I certainly feel justification for that type of discrimination in purely local elections. Those are the elections to which the ruling applies.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Can the Senator state the number of persons who have been removed since the Hatch Act was passed approximately 10 years ago?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should prefer to leave that to a member of the committee who is more familiar with the past history of it than I am.

Mr. CAIN. I wonder if the Senator from Mississippi could provide us with that information, the question being as to the total number of persons removed within the past 10 years?

Mr. STENNIS. I do not have accurate information about it. My best information is that it averaged approximately 10 each year since 1940.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate on section 2 of the conference report.

When the Hatch Act was first enacted an amendment was adopted authorizing the Civil Service Commission to permit civil-service employees of the Federal Government to participate in local elections in areas where there was a predominating number of civil-service employees such as in Arlington and Fairfax Counties in Virginia and Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in Maryland.

Under this permissive legislation, subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission, authority was requested to allow Government employees in nearby counties to be candidates for office on the local level and to be members of the two regular political parties. This was denied. The result is that other Government employees are permitted to engage in all forms of political activity under the nonpartisan label or as independents. They are candidates for local offices, engage in all forms of political activity, hold mass meetings, publish and circulate literature against the candidates of the regular parties, and yet are not considered to be in violation of the Hatch Act by the Civil Service Commission. All of this, while other Government employees who desire to remain as members of either the regular parties—the Republican or Democratic Parties—are permitted only to vote, and to take part in any other activity would be considered by the Civil Service Commission to be a violation of the Hatch Act, and consequently they would lose their Government positions.

This is a condition which is manifestly unjust and unfair. I repeat, under the existing law and Federal officeholder in those counties may participate in local elections under regulations as approved by the Civil Service Commission, but this is limited to enabling such Federal employees to participate, provided they do so in a nonpartisan manner. The result is that a Democratic employee desiring to participate or to be a candidate must act as an independent, and the same applies to a Republican. The amendment proposed does not prohibit a Federal employee from acting as a nonpartisan or as an independent, but merely gives the same privilege to those officeholders who desire to participate on the local level in elections as Democrats or as Republicans.

The amendment originally proposed was approved by former Senator Hatch.

A situation which permits officeholders only to be candidates on an independent ticket is destructive of the method by which we conduct our Government, which is carried on through regular political parties.

I might say to the Members on the other side of the Chamber that in Arlington County, Va., there was a predominating Republican vote in the last Presidential election; in fact, the county went Republican. Both the Democratic organization and the Republican organization were in favor of permitting civil-service employees to take part in local politics. They cannot do so above the county level as Democrats or as Republicans. The ruling would force a Democrat or a Republican to become an independent in order to be a candidate for office. I can see no sense in that regulation. If it is the desire not to permit civil-service employees to take any part in politics, then that may be logical; but here is a situation in which civil-service employees can take part and be candidates only as independents, but cannot be candidates as Democrats or Republicans.

I think, in justice to the many thousands of Federal employees in adjacent counties, they should be permitted to be candidates at the local level, or to take part in elections as they would ordinarily do as Democrats or Republicans.

I hope, Mr. President, that the conference report will be adopted, since it remedies the situation to which I have referred.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, as every Member of the Senate knows, when this matter first came up I spoke in the Chamber in relation to it. I was appointed a member of the conferees on the part of the Senate to meet with the conferees of the House on the question. The Senator from Mississippi, who spoke a moment ago, has outlined and set forth the attitude and the consideration which the conferees gave to the matter and the intention which the conferees sought to express by the report which they have submitted to the Senate. It may not be the clearest in the world in the way in which it is phrased, but I feel that the interpretation placed upon it by the Civil Service Commission, which has been explained by the Senator from Mississippi, that it does give the Commission leeway on a unanimous vote to make a determination of a lesser penalty than complete dismissal.

I want to say that I concur in the report, and I hope it will be acceptable to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has 21 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota does not desire to speak, and I have no desire to speak further on the subject. If the Senator from Mississippi needs a little more time, I shall be glad to yield him time. I yield back 10 minutes to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio for his attitude. I yield myself 5 minutes.

I have in my hand a communication based upon facts obtained from the Civil Service Commission illustrating some of the cases which have come before the Commission to which this amendment is designed to apply in the dispensing of justice.

I refer first to the case of a post-office clerk, 58 years of age, in Philadelphia, with more than 14 years of service. He had circulated a nomination petition in behalf of a retired post-office clerk and a life-long friend. Yet, despite this man's excellent service, he was removed, although he was within less than 2 years of retirement age. That was a case of a man 58 years of age and within 2 years of retirement age. All he had done was to circulate a nomination petition in behalf of a retired post-office clerk and a life-long friend. This man was a Democrat.

There is in the files of the Civil Service Commission another case, that of a widowed mother, with three minor children, a clerical employee in an Army hospital in New Jersey, who, because she thought she had an opportunity to improve local roads and civic activities, became a member of a Republican county committee. Finally, when she heard that there was some question of the propriety of her action, she resigned without attending any committee meetings. In the meantime, however, she had engaged in sufficient activity to insure her mandatory removal.

Two other cases concern a Virginia veteran and father of four children, and also a civilian patrolman in Montana, both of whom filed in primaries as candidates for sheriff. Since it was a county office, neither had any knowledge that this was forbidden under the Hatch Act, yet the law of removal applied to them. Lastly, there was a war-contract negotiator in Massachusetts, who was a Republican candidate for town water commissioner. This happened to be one of the few towns in that district which elected its city officers on a partisan ticket, yet this man had to be removed.

There are many other cases along similar lines which this bill is designed to cover. That is all it is designed to do. It would permit the Civil Service Commissioners in their discretion in such cases of minor infractions to impose a penalty less than removal.

I call to the attention of the Senate again that any argument with respect to the language employed in the conference report has been entirely covered and clearly decided in favor of what might be called a very strict interpretation of this proposed amendment to the law by the letter from the Commission, which is filed as part of the legislative record of the bill.

Mr. President, may I inquire if there are any other Senators who wish a little time? Does any Senator wish to speak in favor of the report?

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I had to leave the chamber a short time ago. I do not remember the expression which the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] used before I left, but I understood him to say that the adoption of this conference report would either ruin, repeal, or wipe out the Hatch Act. I assume that the Senator in the meantime has answered that allegation in full in his remarks.

Mr. STENNIS. I have tried to answer that allegation. I do not think that there is any question left about it after reading the letter from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. McMAHON. The Civil Service Commission is given the right under this amendment to impose a punishment less than severance completely from the Government service. That is the main objective of the amendment, is it not?

Mr. STENNIS. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. In other words, it is an effort to make the offense and the punishment of the offense somewhat in accord with common sense. I take it that the Senator would agree with that statement.

Mr. STENNIS. I do agree with it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. TAFT. I shall take not more than 2 minutes, and shall again refer to the fact that the question is not whether the present penalty provided in this section of the Hatch Act is or is not too severe. Perhaps it is to severe. Certainly, however, there is no reason so to emasculate the section that practically no penalty is left in it at all, or no deterrent to anybody, because when the penalty is whittled down to 30 days' suspension, there is, in effect, no penalty left at all. There can be a loss of pay, but of course that can be made up to the employee by his political party. The original Senate bill was much stronger than the conference report, in my opinion. The original bill said:

> Provided, That if the Civil Service Commission, after hearing shall find, by unanimouns vote, that such violation was not willful, a lesser penalty may be imposed by the Commission: Provided further, That in no case shall the penalty be less than 60 days' suspension without pay.

Under the conference report the requirement that a willful violation still means automatic removal is eliminated. It is left entirely to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission. The language is exceedingly ambiguous. The very fact that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] has felt it necessary to get a letter from the Civil Service Commission to put into the RECORD to tell us what the Commission thinks the bill means, and to explain how they would operate under it—although, of course, another civil service might operate entirely differently—seems to me a sufficient condemnation of the ambiguous language contained in the conference report. In my opinion, the language is sufficiently ambiguous in some cases to remove the possibility of any penalty being imposed. Therefore, Mr. President, the purpose of this bill, which has been under consideration by three Congresses and which finally is apparently reaching its final stage, is clearly to bring to an end any further effectiveness of the most important provision of the Hatch Act, which provides that Federal officers shall not use their office to get other employees to line up and engage in political campaigns. It is for that reason, it seems to me, that this report should be rejected.

Mr. President, unless some other Senators wish to speak on the subject, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does not the present law give the Civil Service Commission power to exercise discretion short of discharge in the case of a State employee to whose salary the Federal Government contributes? If that is the case—and I understand it is—under what logic can we say that we should apply one rule to one group of employees and a different rule to another group?

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will permit me to say so, it has never seemed to me that the provision with respect to State employees who are paid in part out of Federal funds was a very wise provision. It was a later enactment of law. It was not a part of the original Hatch Act. However, I do not think it is particularly important because the danger, as I see it, in which we are interested is that the Federal Government may use the vast power of its 2,000,000 employees in political elections. The act was originally enacted to meet that danger. I do not particularly object to the provision referred to by the Senator from Virginia. I do not think it is particularly important, either. I do not believe that it has accomplished anything. As a practical matter, it has not prevented State employees from operating because it has imposed no very effective penalty.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So far as I am concerned, everyone could go out. That is the way I feel about it. However, when we covered State employees in the act, we recognized how harsh it would be to let the Civil Service Commission discharge a man from office, perhaps when he was in a period of life when he could not get any other type of employment, simply because he was guilty of a very minor infraction of the act. Moreover, as I recall, a State employee is allowed to go into court for a determination of the final judgment on the penalty. That was done after we took a second look at the original Hatch Act. The second look was better than the first one.

Mr. TAFT. Perhaps the penalty is too severe, but why not impose a criminal penalty, as is imposed for any other violation of the election laws? Why impose a wishy-washy slap on the wrist by way of a 30-day suspension which, as I said, is almost certain to be paid by the political party involved?

REVISIONS OF TITLES I AND III OF OFFICER PERSONNEL ACT OF 1947

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2335) to make certain revisions in titles I and III of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, which were on page 3, line 1, strike out all after "consideration" down to and including "therefor" in line 6, page 3; on page 6, line 14, strike out "(1)" and insert "(l)"; on page 7, line 4, strike out "naval officers" and insert "Regular officers on the active or retired lists of the naval service"; on page 8, line 10, strike out "(1)" and insert "(l)"; on page 8, line 17, strike out "(1)" and insert "(l)"; on page 12, after line 2, insert:

SEC. 4. As soon as practicable after June 30, 1950, the Secretary of the Navy shall convene a board of not less than five officers of the Regular Navy of the grade of rear admiral or above to consider and recommend for continuation on the active list officers of the line of the Regula Navy not restricted by law in the performance of duty serving in the grade of captain who were serving in that grade on June 30, 1948, and who on that date had completed twenty-nine or more years of total commissioned service as defined in section 102 of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended, and whose names are not on a promotion list. Such officers recommended for continuation on the active list in the report of such board, as approved by the Secretary of the Navy, shall be so continued under the provisions of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended. Each such officer not so recommended shall be placed on the retired list on the first day of the sixth month following the month of enactment of this act with retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of his basic pay on the active list at the time of retirement, multiplied by the number of years of service for which entitled to credit in the computation of his pay on the active list, not to exceed a total of 75 per centum of said basic pay: Provided, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year in computing the number of years of service by which the rate of 2½ percent is multiplied: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held to reduce the retired rank or pay to which such officer would be entitled under other provisions of law.

On page 12, line 3, strike out "SEC. 4." and insert "SEC. 5."

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee which handled the bill in the Senate, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not know what the bill is, and of course, no one expected any extraneous matter to be brought up during the consideration of the conference report. Will the Senator explain what the bill is?

Mr. HUNT. The bill deals with the promotion of Navy personnel. It was reported favorably by the subcommittee unanimously, and passed by the Senate unanimously, as I recall.

Mr. TAFT. Do all the Senate conferees approve of the House amendments?

Mr. HUNT. They do, and they are quite acceptable to the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE HATCH ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1243) to amend the Hatch Act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Malone
Anderson	Hayden	Martin
Benton	Hendrickson	Millikin
Brewster	Hickenlooper	Mundt
Bricker	Hill	Murray
Bridges	Hoey	Myers
Butler	Holland	Neely
Byrd	Humphrey	O'Mahoney
Cain	Hunt	Robertson
Chapman	Ives	Russell
Connally	Jenner	Saltonstall
Cordon	Johnson, Tex.	Schoeppel
Darby	Kefauver	Smith, Maine
Donnell	Kem	Smith, N. J.
Douglas	Kerr	Sparkman
Dworshak	Kilgore	Stennis
Eastland	Knowland	Taft
Ecton	Lehman	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Lodge	Thye
Ferguson	Lucas	Tydings
Frear	McCarran	Watkins
Fulbright	McClellan	Wherry
George	McFarland	Wiley
Gillette	McKellar	Williams
Green	McMahon	Withers

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. All time for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—42

Anderson	Hill	McFarland
Benton	Hoey	McMahon
Byrd	Holland	Murray
Chapman	Humphrey	Myers
Connally	Hunt	Neely
Douglas	Johnson, Tex.	O'Mahoney
Eastland	Kefauver	Robertson
Ellender	Kerr	Russell
Frear	Kilgore	Schoeppel
Fulbright	Knowland	Sparkman
George	Lehman	Stennis
Gillette	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Green	McCarran	Tydings
Hayden	McClellan	Withers

NAYS—32

Aiken	Ferguson	Mundt
Brewster	Gurney	Saltonstall
Bricker	Hendrickson	Smith, Maine
Bridges	Hickenlooper	Smith, N. J.
Butler	Ives	Taft
Cain	Jenner	Thye
Cordon	Kem	Watkins
Darby	Lodge	Wherry
Donnell	Malone	Wiley
Dworshak	Martin	Williams
Ecton	Millikin

NOT VOTING—22

Capehart	Leahy	Pepper
Chavez	Long	Taylor
Downey	McCarthy	Thomas, Okla.
Flanders	McKellar	Tobey
Graham	Magnuson	Vandenberg
Johnson, Colo.	Maybank	Young
Johnston, S. C.	Morse
Langer	O'Conor

So the report was agreed to.

FOREST LUMBER CO.—VETO MESSAGE
(S. DOC. NO. 189)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without my approval, the enrolled bill (S. 764) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Forest Lumber Co.

This claim arises out of a contract between the Superintendent of the Klamath Indian Agency, for and on behalf of the Klamath Indians, and the Forest Lumber Co. of Kansas City, Mo., approved by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior on July 25, 1922. The contract covered the sale of an estimated stand of 450,000,000 board feet of timber, principally western yellow pine, at an initial basic price of $5.06 per thousand feet board measure. The agreement provided for an increase of the stumpage price by 3-year periods based on the rise of the lumber market. The price of the timber was raised to $5.48 on April 1, 1928, which was an increase of 40 cents per thousand feet, board measure.

The Forest Lumber Co. protested this increase, claiming that it was unauthorized under the terms of the contract, but the Department of the Interior concluded that the increase was fully justified in the light of conditions then existing, and that the contract provided sufficient authority for the action which had been taken. The Forest Lumber Co. paid the increase which amounted to a total of $44,772.62, and subsequently filed claim No. 1-391 against the United States in the United States Court of Claims. The Court of Claims held that the Forest Lumber Co. was entitled to recover and awarded judgment in the above amount (86 Ct. Cl. 188 et seq.).

This decision was reversed by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that the case was not within the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Claims by section 145 (1) of the Judicial Code—now incorporated in section 1491 of title 28 of the United States Code. That section provided that the Court of Claims should have jurisdiction over claims "founded upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States." The Supreme Court held that the contract in question was not a contract of the United States within the meaning of this language—Three Hundred and Fifth United States Reports, page 415.

Subsequently the Department of the Interior carefully reviewed the merits and equities of the case, including factors which apparently had not been brought to the attention of the Court of Claims. Upon the basis of this review, the Department came to the conclusion that while technical irregularities may have been committed in the administration of the contract involved, these irregularities were encouraged by and were beneficial to the claimant. It also concluded that the total effect of the manner in which the contract had been administered was not shown by the record to have caused any pecuniary damage to the claimant.

The enrolled bill would permit the Forest Lumber Co. to bring a new suit in the Court of Claims upon the same contract against either the United States in a fiduciary capacity or the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians—commonly known as the Klamath Tribe. It provides, however, that any judgment which may be awarded shall not exceed the amount awarded by the Court of Claims in the original suit. The bill states that "such judgment may be awarded against the United States in a fiduciary capacity or as guardian, or against the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, or in part against the United States in a fiduciary capacity, or as guardian and in part against such tribe, as the facts and law require, except that as to timber cut from allotted lands any judgment may be against the United States as guardian of the allottees." The bill provides further that "upon the rendition of final judgments the court shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall thereupon direct the payment of said judgments out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians."

While I am not opposed to a further judicial review of the merits of the claim involved, I am constrained to withhold approval from S. 764 for the following reasons:

First. The Klamath Tribe would be required to make full reimbursement of any judgment that might be awarded by the Court of Claims, despite the fact that only a portion of the money the claimant is seeking to recover was deposited to the credit of the tribe. This inequitable feature of S. 764 is magnified by the fact that an identical requirement is contained in other enrolled bills, S. 765 and S. 766, dealing with similar situations arising under contracts for the sale of timber on the Klamath Reservation entered into with the Algoma Lumber Co. and the Lamm Lumber Co. The total amount collected with respect to all three contracts under the alleged illegal increases in stumpage prices was $81,993.57. This amount was distributed as follows:

To the United States as reimbursement for administrative expenses	$6,559.49
To various individual Indians for timber cut from trust allotments	4,101.72
To the Klamath Tribe for timber cut from tribal lands	71,332.36
Total collected	81,993.57

While the bill provides for separate judgments on account of timber cut from tribal lands and timber cut from allotted lands belonging to individual Indians, it also contains the quite inconsistent stipulation that all judgments shall be paid from the funds of the Klamath Tribe. Nor does the bill take account of the fact that the United States charged the Indians a fee of 8 percent on all amounts collected under each contract as reimbursement for the expenses of their administration. Since only a part of the asserted overcharges was actually received by the Klamath Tribe, it would be improper to require the Tribe to bear the full burden of reimbursing the claimant for any award made on account of these transactions.

Second. The enrolled bill fails to provide adequately for consideration by the Court of Claims of equities in favor of the United States or the Klamath Tribe which might estop the claimant from contesting the validity of actions taken in reliance on its own course of conduct, or which might give rise to counterclaims on the part of the United States or the tribe that could be set off against the amount of the claim. This omission is of considerable pertinency in view of the fact that the terms of the contract and the course of dealing between the parties may have imposed a duty upon the claimant to pay sums in addition to those actually collected by the officers of the Government and in connection with items not covered by the asserted overcharges. Under section 2508 of title 28 of the United States Code, the Government may, in general, assert counterclaims when a suit is brought against it in the Court of Claims. However, the contention might be made that section 2508 would not be applicable in a case such as the present where the counterclaim would be based upon a failure to make collection due to a mistake of law, and where the real defendant would be an Indian tribe. If the claimant is to be given a day in court, the court should be able to consider all the circumstances of the case. Its ability to do this would, under the terms of the enrolled bill, be open to question.

I would give my approval to a bill that corrects these errors.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1950.

ALGOMA LUMBER CO.—VETO MESSAGE
(S. DOC. NO. 190)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith without my approval, the enrolled bill (S. 765) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Algoma Lumber Co. and its successors in interest, George R. Birkelund and Charles E. Siddall, of Chicago, Ill., and Kenyon T. Fay, of Los Angeles, Calif., trustees of the Algoma lumber liquidation trust.

The provisions of this enrolled bill are the same, except with respect to the identity of the claimant, as those of S. 764, a measure which I am also returning without my approval. The circumstances upon which the claim is predicated are also the same, in all essential particulars, as those presented in connection with S. 764, although there is some variation, of course, in the amounts and other details of the transactions involved.

The instant bill, like S. 764, is subject to two basic objections: it would require the Klamath Tribe of Indians to make full reimbursment of any judgment awarded by the Court of Claims, despite the fact that only a portion of the money the claimant is seeking to recover was deposited to the credit of the Tribe; and it fails to provide adequately for consideration by the Court of Claims of equities in favor of the United States or the Klamath Tribe which might estop the claimant from contesting the validity of actions taken in reliance on its own course of conduct, or which might give rise to counter claims on the part of the United States or the tribe that could be set off against the amount of the claim. Both of these objections, together with the pertinent facts, are explained fully in my message with respect to S. 764.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold approval from S. 765. However, as I stated with respect to S. 764, I would approve a bill which removed these objections.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1950.

LAMM LUMBER CO.—VETO MESSAGE
(S. DOC. NO. 191)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without my approval, the enrolled bill (S. 766) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Lamm Lumber Co.

The provisions of this enrolled bill are the same, except with respect to the identity of the claimant, as those of S. 764, a measure which I am also returning without my approval. The circumstances upon which the claim is predicated are also the same, in all essential particulars, as those presented in connection with S. 764, although there is some variation, of course, in the amounts and other details of the transactions involved.

The instant bill, like S. 764, is subject to two basic objections: It would require the Klamath Tribe of Indians to make full reimbursement of any judgment awarded by the Court of Claims, despite the fact that only a portion of the money the claimant is seeking to recover was deposited to the credit of the tribe; and it fails to provide adequately for consideration by the Court of Claims of equities in favor of the United States or the Klamath Tribe which might estop the claimant from contesting the validity of actions taken in reliance on its own course of conduct, or which might give rise to counter claims on the part of the United States or the tribe that could be set off against the amount of the claim. Both of these objections, together with the pertinent facts, are explained fully in my message with respect to S. 764.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold approval from S. 766.

However, as I stated with respect to S. 764, I would approve a bill which removed these objections.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1950.

DAVIS GROCERY CO.—VETO MESSAGE
(S. DOC. NO. 192)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, S. 2339 for the relief of the Davis Grocery Co., of Oneida, Tenn.

The bill would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Davis Grocery Co., of Oneida, Tenn., the sum of $5,184.26, allegedly representing the amount of a meat subsidy due it as a class 2 meat slaughterer for the period 1943 through 1946.

In connection with its responsibilities for administration of the meat-subsidy program as part of the over-all price-control structure established during the recent war, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation promulgated certain administrative regulations, one of which directed that subsidy claims be filed within 1 month of the close of the monthly accounting period covered by the claim. Although apparently entitled to subsidy benefits, the claimant not only failed to file claims in accordance with this regulation but did not file any claim until after the date on which the entire meat-subsidy program was terminated, despite the fact that before such date it was specifically supplied by Federal authorities with certain information relating to the payment of subsidies, including the time limitations within which claims had to be filed.

The present bill is objectionable on two grounds: First, the award which this measure proposes to pay the claimant appears to be excessive. The sum was apparently computed by the claimant at the rate of 4 cents per pound subsidy on a stated total number of pounds of dressed meat purchased. Significantly, however, the maximum rate of subsidy, which prevailed only during the final year of the program, payable to slaughterers ranged from less than 1 cent per pound on sheep to 3 cents per pound on top-grade cattle calculated on the weight of live animals actually slaughtered. The record discloses not only that the claimant slaughtered other animals beside cattle but also that the nature of its operations was such as to make it highly improbable that it would ever be eligible for payment at the maximum rate. Thus, it seems clear that the proposed award has been computed at an excessive rate on an improper basis and, entirely apart from any other considerations, is in excess of the amount to which the claimant would have been entitled if it had filed timely claims as required by the aforementioned regulation.

Second, there appears to be no sound reason for singling this claimant out for special treatment. The time-of-filing requirement of the RFC regulation was essential to effective and equitable administration of the meat subsidy program. It would have been impossible to have administered this exceedingly complex and extensive program involving scores of thousands of claims without time limitations on the filing of such claims. In addition, it was necessary that there be contemporary scrutiny of subsidy claims by both the OPA and the RFC in order to assure proper administration of the subsidy program as an integrated part of the price stabilization structure. The approval of claims such as the instant one, except under exceptional circumstances not evident here, filed after the termination of the program under which they were authorized and long after the occurrence of facts upon which they are based, would give an unfair advantage to this claimant over other claimants, large and small, who filed their claims during the active period of price control and of subsidy investigations and enforcement.

For the foregoing reasons, I am compelled to withhold my approval from this measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1950.

REPORT OF PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the One Hundredth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1949.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 21, 1950.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DISPLACED PERSONS COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, amounting to $8,800,000, for the Displaced Persons Commission, fiscal year 1951, in the form of an amendment to the budget, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 27—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN STATE DENTAL SOCIETY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I was glad to receive this morning from Dr. M. E. Johnson, chairman of the legislative committee of the Wisconsin State Dental Society, an important communication presenting the views of his distinguished organization in opposition to Reorganization Plan No. 27. I personally opposed the previous scheme which would have prepared the way for socialized medicine, a scheme which has now been dressed up with a few minor variations as plan No. 27.

It is obvious that none of us like to oppose a reorganization plan as such but we are determined to expose the real reasons behind this phony plan. We want genuine Government reorganization which will achieve economy and which will not result in any damaging of the American system of private enterprise or the American system of private medicine which has contributed to our magnificent health standards.

I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Johnson's letter be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WISCONSIN STATE DENTAL SOCIETY,
Milwaukee, Wis., June 16, 1950.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: The dental profession in the State of Wisconsin is sincerely concerned about the proposed Reorganization Plan No. 27.

The plan, as you know, sets up a Cabinet department to deal with health affairs, which would be headed by a layman. It has always been our firm belief that a Cabinet department dealing with matters of health and only matters of health should be established and that this department should rightfully be administered by members of the health professions. Further, Reorganization Plan No. 27 would elevate to Cabinet status an agency of the Federal Government around which is built the compulsory health-insurance plan, thus enhancing the prestige of an agency sponsoring a program which is to the detriment of the public interest.

We are most grateful for the consideration that you have given to our views in the past, and do trust that you will do everything in your power to see that Reorganization Plan 27 is defeated.

Sincerely yours,

M. E. JOHNSON,
Chairman, Legislative Committee.

RESURVEY OF WOLF RIVER, WIS.—RESOLUTIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the sportsmen of Wisconsin are tremendously disturbed by the continued attempts of certain Government agencies to construct unnecessary dams all over creation to destroy magnificent natural fish and game habitats. A particular sore spot with the sportsmen of my State relates to the proposed resurvey by the Corps of Engineers of the Wolf River.

Wisconsin is, in my judgment, one of the most conservation- and sports-minded States in the Union, if not the most intensely interested. Last year over 434,000 game-hunting permits were sold to Wisconsin sportsmen, the highest total on record. Moreover, there are about twice as many licensed local fishermen in Wisconsin as there are even hunters. The magnificent sports facilities of my State have contributed to these impressive statistics.

Now, Mr. President, I have in my hand a letter received today from the acting director of the Wisconsin Conservation Department, H. T. J. Cramer. The letter conveyed two splendid resolutions from the Wisconsin Conservation Commission and the Wisconsin Conservation Congress opposing the ruining of sporting facilities on the Wolf River by any unnecessary engineering construction. The director of the Wisconsin Conservation Department is Ernest Swift. G. E. Sprecher is another assistant director. These men, as well as Edward Schneberger, W. F. Grimmer, C. L. Harrington, F. G. Wilson, Neal Lemay, and George S. Hadland, have devoted lifetimes to State conservation problems. I know that their viewpoint as well as the views of the conservation commission itself and the conservation congress will be of interest to my colleagues, so I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD the text of the two resolutions which I received, and that they be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION PASSED BY WISCONSIN CONSERVATION COMMISSION JUNE 9, 1950

Whereas under date of November 5, 1931, the United States Engineer Office at Milwaukee, Wis., submitted to the Chief of Engineers a report on a survey of the Wolf River, this survey having been conducted for the purpose of establishing the need for improvements on this stream in the interest of navigation, flood control and power production, and of determining the advisability and feasibility of creating several reservoirs on the upper reaches of the river; and

Whereas the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers nad Harbors then decided that the suggested improvements were clearly not practicable and not justified; and

Whereas the Wisconsin Conservation Commission is of the opinion that the facts prejudicial to the contemplated river improvements as established by the previous survey have not been eliminated or undergone any significant changes; and

Whereas technical experts of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the Wisconsin Conservation Department have expressed the opinion that the construction of reservoirs on the Upper Wolf River would destroy a considerable area of Wisconsin's trout waters, both in the main stream and the major tributaries, that extensive game habitat in one of the most important hunting and trapping sections of Wisconsin and rare scenic and esthetic values would be eliminated: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Wisconsin Conservation Commission go on record as being opposed (a) to the proposed survey of the Wolf River as an unnecessary duplication of effort; and (b) to the contemplated improvements, especially the construction of reservoirs on the Upper Wolf River as being of only minor value in flood control and as excessively damaging or destructive to fish and wildlife, and scenic and esthetic values.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY WISCONSIN CONSERVATION CONGRESS JUNE 6, 1950

Whereas the past half century has seen a rapid growth in the utilization of our water-power resources to a point where there is very little remaining wilderness of white water left in the State that is available as a recreational or scenic beauty attraction; and

Whereas by reason of the fact that so little of this type of water remains unspoiled in the State, makes the remaining water of far greater value than it was in former days; and

Whereas current plans by power developments and by the Federal Government to place dams on the Wolf and Namekagon Rivers again have centered attention on the problems of production of power versus scenic beauty and recreational facilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the conservation congress in convention assembled, does hereby recommend that in the future greater emphasis be placed by the legislature, Federal agencies, and public service commission and the conservation commission on the value of natural scenic beauty and recreational values in determining policy concerning the granting of water-power development where such development would tend to impair the few remaining fast-moving waters in the State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. FREAR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 4788. A bill to provide for a mutual-aid plan for fire protection by and for the District of Columbia and certain adjacent communities in Maryland and Virginia, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1850).

By Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

S. 3776. A bill to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 1854).

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 8567. A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1851).

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

S. 3584. A bill to amend the act of June 9, 1906 (34 Stat. 227), entitled "An act granting land to the city of Albuquerque for public purposes"; without amendment (Rept. No. 1852).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 6994. A bill for the relief of Karen R. McAndrews; without amendment (Rept. No. 1855).

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, from the Committees on Foreign Relations and Armed Services, jointly, I report favorably, without amendment, an original bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, and I submit a report (No. 1853) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

The bill (S. 3809) was read twice by its title and placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KERR (for Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma):

S. 3804. A bill for the relief of Chimako Watanabe; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 3805. A bill to exempt veterans of World War II from section 404 (b) and (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940, relating to loss of nationality by residence abroad; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TYDINGS (by request):

S. 3806. A bill to authorize the detail of officers of the Armed Forces to any duty or position with the Department of Commerce in connection with the work of promoting civil aviation; and

S. 3807. A bill to authorize the President to appoint Col. Henry A. Byroade as Director of the Bureau of German Affairs, Department of State, without affecting his military status and perquisites; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. CORDON:

S. 3808. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the city of Klamath Falls, Oreg., all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in certain lands in Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

(Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations and Armed Services jointly, reported an original bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 3810. A bill for the relief of Mark G. Rushmann; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL FOR THE DISTRICT—AMENDMENT

Mr. CAIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949—AMENDMENT

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 3406. An act for the relief of Ellen Fullard-Leo;

H. R. 4836. An act for the relief of Xylda L. Driver;

H. R. 5110. An act for the relief of Janos (John) Treber and Mrs. Katalin (Katherine) Treber;

H. R. 5782. An act for the relief of Mrs. Vera Raupe;

H. R. 6287. An act for the relief of Dr. George Alexandros Chronakis;

H. R. 6363. An act conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon certain claims of the Patuxent Development Co., Inc.;

H. R. 6709. An act for the relief of Ed Howard Russell;

H. R. 6850. An act for the relief of Lt. Col. F. A. Ferguson;

H. R. 7071. An act for the relief of Mrs. Masa Iyoki;

H. R. 7079. An act for the relief of Mrs. Gin Shibasaki Okafuji;

H. R. 7204. An act for the relief of Maria Cristina D'Angelo;

H. R. 7228. An act for the relief of Kazuko Kamada;

H. R. 7414. An act for the relief of Teresa Gentile and Galliano Gentile;

H. R. 7783. An act for the relief of Mrs. Donald Rafter;

H. R. 7815. An act for the relief of John Yee Horn;

H. R. 7820. An act for the relief of Keiko Uchida Doane and her minor child;

H. R. 7970. An act for the relief of Mrs. Regina Anderson and her minor child;

H. R. 8183. An act for the relief of Asako Tsuchida;

H. R. 8289. An act for the relief of Yee Balche Yee;

H. R. 8361. An act for the relief of Toshiko Murai;

H. R. 8381. An act for the relief of Mrs. Joseph C. Grant;

H. R. 8440. An act for the relief of Noae Kawashima;

H. R. 8451. An act for the relief of Yoshie Nozawa;

H. R. 8500. An act for the relief of Hatsuko Torikai;

H. R. 8581. An act for the relief of Yasuko Higuchi Thomson;

H. R. 8583. An act for the relief of Hisako Shimizu;

H. R. 8655. An act for the relief of Toshiko Kikyo and Francis Kikyo;

H. R. 8600. An act for the relief of Yuriko Aoyama; and

H. R. 8722. An act for the relief of Jun Hin Lum; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 4065. An act to provide for the relinquishment of mineral reservations in the land patent of Thomas Stephens;

H. R. 6221. An act to authorize the sale of certain public lands in Alaska to the This-Side-of-Heaven Children's Home for use as a children's home;

H. R. 6964. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee to Josephine Stevens Goering;

H. R. 7753. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land on the Chena River to the Tanana Valley Sportsmen's Association, of Fairbanks, Alaska; and

H. R. 7916. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to execute an oil and gas lease on a certain tract of land in Park County, Wyo.; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

H. R. 7873. An act to authorize construction of buildings for the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Works.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS BY THE REVEREND ARTHUR J. RILEY, HISTORIAN OF THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

[Mr. McMAHON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Worthy Tribute to Blessed Memories," delivered by the Reverend Arthur J. Riley, historian of the Knights of Columbus, at Memorial Day observances held in New Haven, Conn., which appears in the Appendix.]

ATLANTIC CHAIN REACTION—ARTICLE BY SERVAN SCHREIBER

[Mr. KEFAUVER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Atlantic Chain Reaction," written by Servan Schreiber, and published in the New York Herald Tribune of June 11, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

APPLE GROWERS SHUN GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article regarding the attitude of apple growers toward Government support, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMMUNISM AND SOCIALISM—ADDRESS BY E. C. COLEMAN

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on socialism and communism delivered by E. C. Coleman, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Tennessee, in Memphis, Tenn., on May 10, 1950, as reported in the Nashville Banner, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICAN POLICY IN GERMANY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HENDRICKSON

[Mr. GILLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on Senate Resolution 260, delivered by Senator HENDRICKSON at the annual convention banquet of the Department of New Jersey, Jewish War Veterans of the United States, at Asbury Park, June 17, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

CENSORSHIP OF NEWS—ARTICLE FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. BENTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on Censorship of News, published in the New York Times of June 18, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE PRESIDENT'S CIVIL RIGHTS PLAN—ARTICLE FROM GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS

[Mr. HOEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled, "Successful Fayetteville Negro Leader Opposes President's Civil Rights Plan," written by Jack Crosswell, and published in the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News, June 18, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

SHOWDOWN IN THE PACIFIC—ARTICLE FROM BARRON'S NATIONAL BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL WEEKLY

[Mr. KNOWLAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled, "Showdown in the Pacific," published in Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly of June 19, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

FULTON LEWIS, JR.—ARTICLE BY CHARLES VAN DEVANDER

[Mr. HUMPHREY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article relative to Fulton Lewis, Jr., written by Charles Van Devander, published in the New York Post of Wednesday, June 21, 1950, which appears in the Appendix.]

POEMS BY FLOYD CHATHAM GENTER

[Mr. IVES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two poems, one entitled "Prayer For America," the other entitled "Lest We Regret," written by Floyd Chatham Genter, of Schenectady, N. Y., which appear in the Appendix.]

UNESCO CONFERENCE AT FLORENCE, ITALY

Mr. BENTON. Mr. President, yesterday I saw the President to report briefly to him on my recent trip to Italy. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD the statement I gave the press at the White House following my interview with the President. I hope this quick summary will serve as an adequate report to the Senate as well. My observations on the UNESCO Conference, which concluded last Saturday at Florence, should be considered, of course, in conjunction with my speech to the general conference in Florence, which is to be found on page A4431 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BENTON

I reported to the President on the UNESCO Conference at Florence to which he appointed me, along with Mrs. SMITH of Maine, as a congressional adviser to the United States delegation. I told him that I felt I spoke for both Mrs. SMITH and me in reporting that the United States delegation had performed admirably. Under the chairmanship of Mr. Howland Sargeant, of the State Department, it had pressed aggressively for a rigorous elimination of many projects to achieve concentration on the most important. Unhappily, there are far too many that are trivial. I fear that this is inevitable when such responsibility for the program is left to a general conference of 59 nations.

I told the President that it is my feeling based on 5 years' experience with UNESCO that greater power should be put in the hands of the Director General, who must be held strictly responsible, and that roles of the executive board and the general conference should be reexamined and revamped. Our delegation at Florence proposed that UNESCO should hold a general conference only once every 2 years hereafter, and this is an important reform which in itself necessitates a reorganization, including placing more responsibility in the hands of the Director General.

I gave the President the background of my own speech in Florence in which I called upon the delegates for a rededication to first principles. Unhappily, too many of the intellectuals and scholars at the UNESCO Conferences feel that education, science, and culture are ends in themselves rather than means for the attainment of UNESCO's objectives. In this speech I asked for the development of a UNESCO program which would eliminate the minor and diffuse projects and I suggested that every project be judged strictly by the relative potential importance of its contribution to peace.

I told the President that I urged upon UNESCO an active role in world politics, including facing up to the great and titanic struggle in which the world is now engaged—a struggle for the minds and hearts of mankind which goes straight to the center of UNESCO's reason for existence. This struggle is a moral and an educational struggle far more than it is a contest of military and economic potentials. (I left with the President the full text of my speech—to be found on p. A4431 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

I further told the President that at the invitation of Mr. Paul Hoffman I had visited several of the ECA projects in Italy and Sicily. I described to him Italy's amazing recovery, which is largely, if not wholly, attributable to American assistance. The $3,000,000,000 which we have poured into Italy since the war is a record unparalleled in all history in the relationship between a victorious power and a conquered one. The present ECA program, in my opinion, accounts for the fact that the growth of communism has been arrested in Italy. In Florence 65 percent of the vote in the last election was Communist, and in Milan, which I also visited, it was over 50 percent. The largest confederation of labor unions, with more than 3,500,000 members, is wholly controlled by the Communists, with Communist-trained in every key post.

Against this formidable infiltration, Prime Minister de Gasperi, with whom I dined while in Rome, has formed a successful government which has brought stability and economic progress. The Italian people are hard working and skillful. I spoke to the American Chamber of Commerce in Rome and told them we know the Italians well in Connecticut, where there are over 75,000 who were born in Italy, and we know them to be enterprising and self-reliant. I called the communism of Italy the communism of the empty belly and I attributed it in part to the fact that capitalism has never worked successfully. I plead with these businessmen to give the long-suffering people of Italy the chance which the United States wants to give them. In view of the tragic background—the more than 20 years of fascism, the entrenched business monopolies which charge too much and give too little, the age-long need for land reform, with something like one-third of all the land in the hands of a small number of rich families—and finally in view of the great need for tax reform so that the rich will carry a much bigger percentage of the taxes than at present—and the poor get the relief they deserve—in view of these needs, with which Premier de Gasperi and his cabinet are wrestling, the progress of Italy is remarkable and seems to me a great tribute to the success of our foreign policy in western Europe.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3181) to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4895) to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the Superior National Forest, Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8198) to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1082. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to hear, determine, and render judgment upon a claim of the Bunker Hill Development Corp.;

H. R. 2230. An act for the relief of Arthur S. Horner, Leah B. Horner, and Maude Brewer, doing business as the A. S. Horner Construction Co.;

H. R. 2803. An act for the relief of Albert J. Peterson;

H. R. 3254. An act for the relief of Iva Gavin;

H. R. 4371. An act for the relief of Shiro Takemura;

H. R. 4692. An act to provide for the extension of the term of certain patents of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II;

H. R. 5019. An act for the relief of Fella H. Holbrook;

H. R. 5682. An act for the relief of William T. Orton;

H. R. 5846. An act for the relief of Mrs. Lillian Coolidge;

H. R. 6691. An act for the relief of Paul D. Banning, Chief Disbursing Officer, Treasury Department, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6934. An act for the relief of E. H. Corrigan.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill 6826, Calendar No. 1789.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That subsection (b) of section 17 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) is hereby amended by striking out the words "second anniversary" and substituting therefor the words "fifth anniversary."

SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"SEC. 21. (a) Any person who registers as required by the terms of this title, and any person who hereafter voluntarily enlists in the armed forces of the United States, shall be afforded an opportunity to state in writing over his signature whether he has a preference to serve only in a unit all of the enlisted personnel of which are of his own race. Such opportunity shall be afforded at the time of registration in the case of those registering under the requirements of this title, or upon enlistment in the case of those who hereafter enlist in the armed forces of the United States. Any such person who expresses such preference shall thereafter be assigned only to units of a type consistent with his preference. The right to express and the effect of expressing any such preference shall be clearly explained to each person who hereafter registers under this title, or enlists in the armed forces of the United States. As used in this section the term 'unit' means a group of persons serving in the armed forces who (1) share the same housing, messing, or sanitary facilities, or (2) participate jointly in recreational or social activities. For the purposes of this subsection an individual's race shall be determined in accordance with the more detailed classification as to race used by the Bureau of the Census in connection with the taking and preparation of statistics of the Sixteenth Census of the United States. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to preclude the assignment of any individual who belongs to a race comprising less than 1 percent of the population of the United States to units containing enlisted personnel of the most numerous race in the United States, if the Secretary of the armed force concerned has determined that it is impracticable to organize units all of the enlisted personnel of which are of such individual's race.

"(b) Any commissioned officer of the armed forces who knowingly and willfully denies to any person his right to express a preference upon enlistment as provided by subsection (a) or assigns any person after enlistment or induction to any unit in violation of the provisions of such subsection shall be guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and shall be subject to trial and punishment under the appropriate article of war, article for the government of the Navy, or article of the Uniform Code of Military Justice."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has before it House bill 6826, with one amendment, which is a complete substitute for the text of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I call up an amendment offered by myself, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], and other Senators; and I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, beginning with line 18, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 16 on page 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, offered for himself and other Senators.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know in what order it is intended to have amendments considered. I had assumed that perhaps the chairman of a committee would decide to make a statement with respect to the over-all provisions of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; that is what I intend to do, now that the bill has been made the unfinished business.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that was my only reason for offering the amendment at this time, namely, to give the Senator from Maryland an opportunity to make an over-all statement regarding the bill. The amendment will be disposed of later.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate contains a provision which is somewhat controversial. To it, the Senator from Illinois has just submitted an amendment. My remarks will be addressed rather to the general purpose of the bill than to any specific provision of it.

The Draft Act, or the Selective Service Act, will expire, I think, on the 24th of June. If we do not take some action on or before that date in reference to the Selective Service Act, there will be no Selective Service Act on the statute books; it will be nullified, it will no longer be a part of the preparedness machinery of the country. The draft boards are now in being. They have files showing the men who have registered, and who are required under the law to register for call in the event of an emergency. If the law shall expire, these records in each precinct and community throughout America will no longer be valuable, and they are likely to be destroyed. The draft boards, who are familiar with the personnel equation in each precinct and community of America, will go out of business, and we shall be absolutely without any machinery in being, in case of an emergency, to supply men to the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

It is not proposed by the extension of the Selective Service Act to put the Act into effect. It is not in effect now. We are not drafting men or women to serve in the Armed Forces, and the extension of the act is not for the purpose of using it to draft persons into the armed services. It is simply to have it on the books, to have the boards in being, to have the registration files in being, and to have everything in readiness, so that in case it becomes necessary to increase rapidly our Army and our Navy or our Air Force, then the machinery will be there, and it can be put into operation immediately.

If this is not done, I am advised by General Hershey, who is in charge of Selective Service, General Bradley, General Collins and others who testified before the committee, that four precious months will be lost in case of an emergency, because a new act will have to be passed, new boards will have to be created, new registrations will have to take place, new sifting will have to be made, and, in the case of an emergency 4 precious months will have been lost.

The sole purpose of extending the act is to prevent that contingency from happening. It is not the purpose in extending the act to use it to fill up the ranks of the Armed Services, because it is not expected that that will be necessary. The sole purpose is to have it ready in case of some emergency, should the Congress not be in session, or should it be in session, so that the machinery is available. I prefer to liken it to an automobile of which the engine is running, and the car is not moving, but everything is ready to go ahead. One does not put the automobile into gear and send it down the roadway unless he feels that it is necessary. The engine is turning over, the gas and oil are there, the ignition is operating, and, if it is necessary, all one has to do is to throw the car into gear and it moves off. So it is with the Selective Service Act. It is not intended that it shall be put into operation. It is not in operation now. It has not been in operation for months and years; but it is there, just as everything else is, in our preparedness program, to take care of an emergency which might arise.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not also true, in the words of General Bradley, that the existence of this act makes it possible for us to have a smaller number of persons in our Regular armed services today?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. I thank the Senator for giving me that thought, and I am going to take the liberty of enlarging upon it a little. The psychological effect of the selective-service law is this: The very fact that it is on the statute book induces a great many men to volunteer for military service who perhaps would not do so if the act were not on the books. Therefore, it has not been necessary to use the draft act, because the voluntary enlistments, impelled by the thought that it can be used in an emergency, have been sufficient to produce a sufficient volume of recruits on an enlistment basis so that we have not had to use draftees to fill up the ranks of the armed services.

Here is the great danger of not extending the Selective Service Act: If it is not extended, not only will there go out of being in all the communities throughout America the draft boards who are trained and who know the work and who know the personnel equation in every precinct and community; not only will the registration of new recruits stop, so that we shall not have any records for the future; not only will the lists now in being; the appropriately numbered and allocated, cease to exist; not only will all of those things happen, but if we do not extend selective service, and the propulsion which it now puts on those who might be called to enlist voluntarily without being drafted ceases to exist, the danger is that in that contingency we are likely to have the numerical strength of our Army, Navy, and Air Force gradually decreased to a point where we shall have to have compulsory selective service.

I think the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Washington, who are present on the floor and who serve on the Armed Services Committee with me, will recall that when the question was asked the proper authorities, if we did not extend this act, what would be likely to happen, the fear was expressed that if that act were not on the books the Congress would have to come back within a very few months to pass a compulsory Selective Service Act, under which we would really start drafting again, in order to keep the ranks of the military forces sufficiently filled during this period of international tension and emergency. So if anyone feels that by defeating the extension of the Selective Service Act there will be less need for the use of the selective service as an instrumentality for filling the Military Establishment ranks, he is wrong. If the Selective Service Act is not extended, the prediction by all the military authorities is, and the experience tables show, that there will not be sufficient voluntary enlistments, without selective service in the background, to give us the minimum number of men we require. We shall then, in this period of world tension, have to have compulsory draft in order to get the men we must have as a precaution for our own safety and defense.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has referred indirectly to the fact I am about to mention. It is my understanding that 10,000,000 registrations under the present act will become void in the event the present Selective Service Act is not continued.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. Consider the magnitude of the task.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have the Senator elaborate upon that phase of it, because it seems to me it is one of the most important features of the entire selective-service program, so far as continuation is concerned, for, as the Senator has said, if we were compelled to pass another law in a great emergency which might arise at any moment, all the work which has been done in the past few years under the present act would be lost. We would have to do it all over again. It seems to me that is one of the most vital things in connection with the matter. It would cause confusion and would create chaos. It seems to me the crisis is almost here if we do not act promptly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall not go into all the details, but I should like to skeletonize slightly the effect. First of all, we would have to have a new act eventually. In the meantime, we would have no Director of Selective Service; in the meantime, 3,600 selective-service boards in the various communities of the country would cease to exist; in the meantime, 10,000,000 registrants, who have already registered and whose records are all complete, signed up, and temporarily allocated and given a number so as to be available in case of emergency, would have gone for naught. If we do not extend the act, and we have to extend it later on, it will take four precious months to recapture the lost ground. When we repass it we shall have to have another Director of Selective Service. His staff will have to be established all over again. We shall have to reconstitute 3,600 selective-service boards——

Mr. LUCAS. Does not the Senator mean 36,000?

Mr. TYDINGS. There are 3,600 boards and there are 37,000 noncompensated persons who are now giving their time and their service to make the organization an efficient and functioning stand-by piece of machinery for our safety and national defense. All of that would go out of existence if the act should not be extended.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I have one more observation on the very important point which the Senator is discussing. As I understand, there are 54 State and territorial directors whose positions would also terminate.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. We do not now realize what took place when the act was first passed. It has been modified and changed slightly, but basically it has gone all the way through since before the beginning of the war down to today. When we first passed it there was a period of 4 or 5 or 6 months after it was passed in which it was necessary to create the boards, to assemble the machinery, make it function, and have the young men registered. We have accepted it. Now that we have gotten away from the actual fighting part of the war we accept it as if it is something which can be done easily. It is a gigantic undertaking. It involves many thousands of employees, both paid and unpaid; it involves every community in the Nation. But over and above everything else that gives me concern is the fact that the tables of enlistment now show there is a gradual decline in the number of persons voluntarily enlisting. The Army is 27,000 under its authorized minimum strength at this time. One of the reasons we have been able to keep the Army up to a reasonable strength is that a great many young men decided that maybe it would be necessary to draft them later on, and they would just as soon go into the service and have it behind them. That propulsion, that inducement, has caused thousands of young men to enlist and render service to their country so it would be behind them, the future would be clear, and they would not be involved in any Selective Service if it were later to come.

If the draft act—I prefer to call it the Selective Service Act—is not extended, the enlistments, which are already beginning to decline, will decline more precipitately, they will fall off more violently, and the net result will be, according to the military experts and the tables of experience, that we shall have to find some means to get men into the services in order to bring the services up again to their minimum requirements.

I shall be glad to answer any questions on the subject. I have tried to cover the philosophy of the bill in a general way.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Let me first make the observation that I think I voted for the Selective Service Act in the first place, or at least for the extension of it when it was before the Eightieth Congress. I have not heard the Senator explain just how the machine will be set up with gasoline in it and all ready to go. Who will start it? Who will have authority to put it into operation again?

Mr. TYDINGS. It will be the same machine covered by the amendment for which the Senator voted in the Eightieth Congress. We are to extend an existing law without changing the existing law.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator realize that many changes have been made in our position before the world since the time the Eightieth Congress voted for an extension of the act?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, but I cannot say that the danger has lessened. The situation in the Orient, in the eyes of many persons, has become more dangerous. There is a big threat of communism in China and a threat of it in southern Asia. I should like also to point out to the able Senator that since we extended the act, the Marshall plan has been in operation, together with the arms implementation program and the North Atlantic Security Pact, so that we have commitments which we did not have when we extended the act 3 years ago.

I appreciate the Senator's point of view, but I cannot see that we are well on the roadway to peace. I wish to heaven we were. We are in the position of a man who feels that his house is not so likely to burn down as it was 3 years ago, but he does not feel he can reduce the insurance on the house merely because of the little less probability that it will catch on fire. We have got to have a few more fire-prevention policies in effect before we can further reduce the volume of insurance we are carrying on the house which we call the United States of America.

Mr. WATKINS. I may say, if the Senator will further yield, that I am not asking these questions as indicating in any way that I am opposed to extension. I am very much interested in the situation as it will be in the hands of one man who is to put the machine in operation again and operate it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that I am not insinuating or even taking the assumption which he himself has suggested as my own thought; I am simply talking generally. It is anticipated that Congress will adjourn some time around the first of August. It is anticipated that we shall not be back again until next January. There is a period of approximately 5 months in which Congress will not be in session. Not long ago there was a plane shot down over the Baltic, taking the lives of 11 or 12 of our gallant military personnel. There was a little tension involved, mildly, for a few days.

It would have been idle, in my judgment, to have gone to war recklessly, but, nevertheless, that illustrates the point that events may occur which are not now within our ken, not now on the horizon, but which could very quickly change the whole picture. Therefore, I think we have to have the lever of the idling automobile in the hands of someone who is here. He cannot declare war, but at least he can start to build up the forces rather than to await the return of Congress.

Mr. WATKINS. What would be the objection in the mind of the Senator to the provision in the House bill—I think it is section 22—which places the matter in the hands of Congress to authorize the President by resolution to go ahead and put the machinery in operation?

Mr. TYDINGS. There are several answers to that. One of them is that we do not want ourselves to declare an emergency in order to meet an emergency.

Mr. WATKINS. Someone must make that declaration. Should it be left to the President, or to the Congress?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read what our staff has drawn up with respect to that matter. I have not read it carefully. I think it is a comprehensive statement. The Senator will take note that the House adopted two new sections. They are sections 21 and 22.

The first of these proposed new sections freezes the induction authority of the President, and requires a declaration of an emergency by the Congress before inductions can be resumed.

Mr. WATKINS. The Senator is speaking of the House version.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. It requires a declaration of an emergency by the Congress before inductions can be resumed. If we were to be away from Washington for 5 months, it would take a little while to reassemble the Congress if it were called back. In the second place, many Members would not wish to return if it were just before a primary election, or before the general elections. As a matter of fact, many of our colleagues are not in the Senate today and have not been here because they are back home trying to fix their fences and to make contact with their people and answer their opponents. After the first of August that situation will increase in intensity, rather than diminish, because all Members of the House of Representatives are up for reelection, and more than one-third of the Senate, counting the vacancies, will be out talking to the people. To call them back while they are engaged in election contests is a matter which is fraught with some little difficulty.

Mr. WATKINS. What would happen if an emergency should arise which indicated that Congress would be required to meet in order to consider a declaration of war? They would have to come back then.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe there is a great deal of difference between coming back to put selective service machinery into effect and coming back to declare war. There is no alternative if the situation is so serious that we are called upon to declare war. I hope and pray that will not happen. There is no comparison between that and simply putting the selective-service machinery into operation.

Mr. WATKINS. It seems to me, although I have not heard a very thorough discussion of the subject and I have not had an opportunity to acquaint myself fully with it, that under this proposal we would be placing a great responsibility in one man by giving him the authority to put this machinery into operation. There would have to be some kind of emergency. He would have to declare some kind of emergency before he could place it into operation. At the same time a situation might develop under which one Atlantic Pact nation was attacked and that nation would invoke article V of the Atlantic Pact, which would require us to go to war. If that were to happen Congress would have to be called back, unless we are to proceed on the theory that we are at war automatically if such a thing were to happen. Under an interpretation of the pact the President might put us in the war, and put the draft machinery into operation, without having Congress called back.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's question is a very proper one. The situation which he described is one which we have virtually had in operation for the last 1, 2, or 3 years. The President could have done what the Senator says may be done in the future. The President could have done that during the past year.

Mr. WATKINS. But not prior to the adoption of the Atlantic Pact, which gave him additional authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Atlantic Pact has been on the books for quite some time.

Mr. WATKINS. Since last fall.

Mr. TYDINGS. I forget the exact date. At any rate, the President has not used the machinery. Let me read on, please.

The Senate position is that they oppose a proposal which would require a declaration of an emergency by the Congress before inductions can be resumed.

We oppose that because we feel that it strikes at the fundamental purpose of the law. The law seeks to guarantee to the Nation an armed strength which is large enough to deter the aggressor's threat. A strength large enough to cope with situations that are developing. We seek to cut off the Whitsunday riot in Berlin, rather than assemble here in this Senate chamber after the situation has exploded in our faces, and ruefully go through the business of declaring a national emergency. In the last analysis, this portion of the House version actually makes it necessary to declare an emergency in order to attempt to prevent one.

The Armed Services Committee has consistently avoided any war-scare tactics in dealing with this bill.

We look upon this bill, just as we look upon providing our Army, Navy, and Air Force with weapons, men, or any other ordinary routine elements, as important and necessary to the national defense at one of the most critical and unpredictable periods in the history of the human race. There is not a Senator on this floor who can look ahead for a month and reasonably diagnose and ascertain the portents of the unfolding hour. For the moment it looks as though national safety has gotten fairly back on solid ground. I see a slight ray of optimism, although I cannot prove it. It is more or less emotional. Because we have been inured to so many small scares, and some large ones, we have lost our sense of shock and fright. Therefore, in the absence of some great or large outbreak of hostilities, most of us are likely to assume that when some danger threatens it is going to be merely another minor crisis.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to finish this statement. We are about to authorize the establishment of a 70-group Air Force. That does not mean that we shall buy the additional 16 groups, to increase the number from 54 to 70. It means that it has been considered by the Congress. It is what we ought to have. It is what we would call provisional insurance against an emergency. We have considered it. The bill is in conference. It will soon be out on the floor. We are not going to appropriate the money and build right up to 70 groups, any more than we are going to throw this lever into gear and start the draft act functioning. However, there are certain precautionary things we must have in the offing—just in case. I do not know what may happen in Asia in the next 6 months before Congress reconvenes. I do not know what will happen in southeast Asia, or in China. I do not know what will happen in Iran, which is a small country that abuts the southern border of Russia and runs down to the great oil fields of the Middle East.

I do not know what may happen in the elections which may be held in one place or another, and whether or not communism will increase or decrease. I do know that the most precious thing in all Christendom is the strength and vitality of the United States of America. That is the keystone in the whole arch of world civilization and democracy. It is the hope of millions of people behind the iron curtain, and the prayer, the fervent prayer, of millions of men, women, and children in all the democratic countries of the earth.

I pray to God we will never have to use the Selective Service Act again, but we have not moved down the corridor of time sufficiently away from World War II to enable us to say we will never need it again, or that it can be taken from the books, or should not be applied quickly in some possible hour of danger.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Texas in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I should like to ask a few questions of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, in whose ability I have great confidence, and who has given much thought and consideration to these matters.

The Senator has pointed out that we are in a period of time when we do not know what is ahead of us. Within a few short days, certainly not too many hours hence, we will vote on the extension of the Draft Act for another period of years, in order to get the young men of the United States of America, this great Republic, ready for mobilization so as to be able to protect this country. In all seriousness, I wonder if the Senator has given some consideration to the question of whether it is not perfectly proper for us to start mobilizing industry and labor, and the technical knowledge we have, and not put the burden on the young people of America alone, but put it on the shoulders of other segments of our great country, and indicate that the young men and women are not the only ones who are going to be held in readiness. Are we going to permit millionaires by the score to be made out of another world war if it comes? And God forbid that it come. What is to be our answer to the young people of the United States?

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator permit me to answer?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. No more pertinent question could be asked on this floor concerning a major policy in peacetime than the one posed by the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Let me say, in answer, that we have had before the Senate Committee on Armed Services, not once, but several times this year, those charged with formulating a program which will deal with industry in the same way in which we deal with human beings, to marshal it and mobilize it for the defense of the country in time of war. We have had a subcommittee working on that for a long time. We have had the representatives of the interested Government agencies before our committee. The ramifications of the plan we must make for America in the future to deal with the situation the Senator from Kansas has described almost baffle the imagination. It touches the field of law, it touches the field of commerce—foreign, interstate, and domestic—it touches the fields of finance, it touches the field of taxes, it touches the field of rationing, it touches the field of price fixing, it touches the field of critical materials. There are literally scores of facets to the mobilization of the industry of the country on a basis comparable with the mobilization of the personnel, if this Nation shall be confronted with another great world war.

The reason for that is that our country was not a battlefield in the last two great world wars. The first one was fought in Europe and on the seas. The second one was fought in Europe and on the adjacent seas, in Africa, in Asia, and on the seas around Asia. But my State and the other States, Kansas, Utah, and all the other States of the Union, escaped being battlefields, while most of the remainder of the earth, in varying degree, was a battlefield. Our country was not fought over. Millions of men did not march back and forth over our land as they did over France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Russia. No great fleets of airplanes came over, in the dead of night or in the daytime, and let loose thousands of powerful bombs to destroy the factories, the homes, the railroads, and the bridges of our people, as happened in many places in the world.

When we went to bed at night, with reasonable security in our hearts and souls, our anxiety was for those who had gone abroad to take part in the struggle; but we slept soundly, almost completely oblivious of the fact that our slumbers might be broken by the roar of planes which might snuff out the population of Baltimore, Topeka, Salt Lake City, New York, or any other city.

Mr. President, that time has gone. In the event of another great war, the time when we could go to sleep without fear of our own country becoming a battlefield is in the limbo of forgotten things. Never again will we have the luxury of time in which to prepare. We have to be prepared, or it might be disastrous.

Mr. President, I should like to say to my able friend from Kansas that we have had before us the people to whom I have referred, and with a realization of the picture I have briefly touched upon, we urged them to give us their plan, and get it to us quickly. We have had preliminary discussions of the subject with those in authority. We have had a sort of a preview of the plans, so far as they have gone, and the amount of work done on them has been tremendous. I myself had no idea, until they testified before our committee in executive session, of the ramifications of what we must do as respects industry in the event of another great war. We must all assume, whether we like it or not, a degree of regimentation for all our normal business activities, if another great war comes, similar to the regimentation to which persons wearing the uniform of the country are subjected.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I know the Senate is fully aware of our responsibility in that regard, but is it not a fact that in the last war we had a lag of many months, almost a year and a half, before industry came to be at least partially mobilized in the effort to meet its responsibility?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does not the distinguished Senator from Maryland feel that it is wrong to procrastinate and say to the young people of America, "You are the only ones who are going to be on the line, subject to the orders that may come overnight, or within a matter of hours, and industry and labor and all the other segments of our great country can wait until we get jolly well ready to arrange to have them come in"? Does not the Senator feel it is of transcendent importance that we give consideration to that matter, perhaps not at this session, but certainly at the earliest possible time in the next session? Otherwise, I am afraid that the young folks of America and their parents—and there are millions of them—have a right to feel they have been sold short on the proposition of the defense of America.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is absolutely right, and I am in thorough accord with him. We cannot expect the human beings who are the defenders of the Government to carry the whole burden of the sacrifices of war, without other citizens bearing a share of them.

If we should have war tomorrow, or if we should have the threat of war tomorrow, let me name a few of the things that would have to be done. Probably prices would have to be frozen by Executive order. Probably wages would have to be frozen. Immediately we would have to ration all critical items, such as rubber, oil, and manganese, and all other items we do not have in abundance.

Then there would have to be allocations. We could no longer build in America or buy automobiles, or this, that, or the other, if what went into those things was needed for the common defense. Lumber and everything of that sort would be withheld from normal channels of trade. It would be necessary to enact all sorts of legislation dealing with the Department of Justice. We would have to provide the Government with the right to seize property without paying for it until later, which is abhorrent to our peacetime idea of private property. If the Government were to need something, it would take it and tell the one from whom it was taken, "Send in your bill and we will adjudicate what we will pay you later on." There are literally hundreds and thousands of things that would have to be done if we were confronted tomorrow with another great war.

The Senator from Kansas and I see eye to eye on this subject. I believe the members of our committee will bear me out when I say that I have been putting pressure, and strong pressure, on those who are concerned by law with the phases we have been discussing in getting the plan whipped into shape so we could have a bill ready and put it on the statute books. I have even gone so far as to say, "If you cannot give us the perfected plan, give us as much as you can, and we will go along." I am thoroughly in accord with that procedure. But, meantime, in the interim period between this time and the next session of Congress we have got to keep our manpower up, because that is our first line of defense. Our industry behind it in time of war is our second line of defense.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does not the Senator feel that there always will be pressure brought to bear to except this segment and that segment of our great economy, or delay action with respect to them, unless those who constitute industry understand that war is not a luxury or a money-making proposition, but that it is an all-out effort, and that everyone is in the same boat as are the young men and women of the country?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say that I share the Senator's opinion, only a little more in volume than he has been good enough to claim for himself.

Let me give the Senate a thought or two. It has been the traditional history of our country that we would rely on the two great oceans. There was the Atlantic on the east and the Pacific on the west. We have always maintained a wonderful navy. For a long, long while it has had its ups and downs, but basically it has been about the finest navy in the world, and today rides the crest of the waves without a close competitor. So with the great oceans on either side of us and our great Navy, we have felt secure here. We have always had time to deal with an emergency.

Those great oceans are narrow now. They are only brooks; they are nothing more nor less than brooks. Great fleets of airplanes can leave the Continent of Europe and come over here in a matter of 10 or 12 hours. Great fleets of airplanes can leave Asia and fly over here in a matter of a few hours. There is no such thing as relying on the oceans any more for our protection, except for surface craft that come over the water to attack us in that fashion.

I do not have the figures available—I looked them up sometime ago—but my recollection is that it is only 9 hours by modern bomber from Siberia to Seattle. It is only about 9½ hours by modern bomber from Siberia to San Francisco. It is only about 10 hours or so from Siberia to Chicago. It is not very far from Maine to Moscow or from Moscow to Maine over the great circle. There are military planes in being that could take off from Maine and fly to Moscow, turn around and fly back to Maine, and turn around and fly back to Moscow without refueling.

Before Pearl Harbor, on the 7th of December 1941, honest men on this very floor doubted that the Japanese would undertake to tackle a strong power such as the United States of America. It was pretty hard to believe, when we knew what our strength was then and what our ultimate strength would be, that the Japanese would be so foolhardy as to come to our shores and hit the United States a blow that would pull us into the war. On that Sunday morning we could not believe our ears as we heard the radio reports out of a clear sky that the great fleet which we on the Naval Affairs Committee had spent years in building, was at the bottom of Pearl Harbor. Those wonderful old ships, one of them bearing the name of my own State, destroyers, battleships, cruisers, were a bent and twisted mass. And there and then, on the very day that we were involved in the war on the 7th of December 1941, those of us who served then on the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, as we used to call it before the unification bill was enacted, had to start out with a war on our hands to build a Navy all the way from scratch up to the top all over again, and at the same time fight a war.

I am going to tell Senators a little story which has a certain analogy to the draft act. About 1929 in this very body the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs was the Honorable Frederick Hale, of Maine, a man who devoted a tremendous amount of time to the building up of the Navy. I was a humble member of that committee then. We had had the Naval Disarmament Conference in Washington in 1922, and while we sank some battleships and cruisers, most of the other powers that joined in with us simply tore up blueprints of ships they said they had planned to build. We did all the disarming, and they did all the observing. So when we got to 1939 we found that some of these countries were building up in permissible categories, such as cruisers, and the United States was beginning to fall behind.

In 1929, before the rise of Hitler or Mussolini, before the war clouds began to gather in the sky, there were not many people interested in preparedness. But Senator Hale, an eminent member of the Republican Party and a very distinguished American, who had devoted an enormous amount of time to the Navy, making it almost a hobby in his legislative work, said, "Boys, I think we have got to start building up our Navy again." We took testimony, and after a while we brought a bill on the Senate floor to provide for the building of 15 cruisers, 3 of them to be built each year, or the keels laid each year, as I recall, over a period of 5 years, until all 15 of them were completed.

On the Senate floor we had one of the most hectic debates for 5 or 6 weeks that I remember about a piece of preparedness legislation. Senator Brookhart, of Iowa, I recall, led the fight against the cruiser bill. Senator James Reed, who occupied a seat close to where I am now standing, was one of the strong advocates of the cruiser bill. As a young and humble Member of this body, I did what I could to have the bill enacted into law. After a long struggle, the bill passed and went to the President, and he signed it.

But do Senators know that after the ships were sunk at Pearl Harbor, the 15 cruisers which we built during the peaceful years of 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932 were the thin line of ships that stood between us and a Japanese attack on the mainland of the United States of America? If we had not fought the good fight then, and if we had not had those 15 cruisers ready, after Pearl Harbor the great fleet of Japan could have come to our coast with relative impunity and could have attacked the great cities of San Francisco, San Diego, Portland, and so on.

Senator Brookhart said we did not need any navy; he said, "There will never be another war. We learned in World War I the utter futility of war. Today, in view of the advance of science and invention, it would be so foolhardy for anyone to go to war again, that we are just throwing money down a rat-hole to build these cruisers."

Fortunately, Mr. President, his viewpoint, although a sincere one, I am sure, did not withstand the combined judgment of the Senate; and the cruisers were built.

Since that time, and coming down to the present day, in a fairly long service in this body identified with preparedness, a service in which I have tried to be rational, and not be swept off my feet by brass or uniforms or the clash of arms or the pageantry of armed forces, I have realized how much cheaper it is to spend a little money on prevention, and how terribly expensive in life and treasure it is to adopt some temporary expedient, requiring no sacrifice at the moment, but later to have to pay cruelly with the blood and the treasure of our country, far beyond the necessity if a little wiser and sterner course had been adopted in the meantime.

Mr. President, I have spoken at some length on this measure. I wish to conclude with this thought:

All of us are living in an age which is almost on a push-button basis. Whereas formerly it took weeks to assemble a fleet to come to our country to attack us, or for our fleet to go to another country, now an attack can be made in a matter of hours. There are in existence bombs of terrific strength and power, and as time passes bombs which are more and more devastating will be developed, and they can be carried by great air fleets. Great air fleets with such bombs can come to the United States, unless we are prepared—just as the Japs came to Pearl Harbor in 1941.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be an alarmist; I do not think we shall be attacked tomorrow morning. I do not see a war in the offing. But the lesson we must learn is that in the future we cannot have time, as we have had it in the past; and today we must put our defenses in more or less of a presently available basis, rather than on an eventually available basis.

So, Mr. President, in the interest of every man, woman, and child in America, in the interest of our way of life, in the interest of our democratic institutions, in the interest of our traditions and our heritages, I ask the Senate to extend this act for just a little while longer, in the fervent hope that the war clouds which every now and then darken the horizon may be dissipated, as reason supplants force, as human understanding of the differences between nations solves the imponderables of international conduct.

I ask the Senate to extend this act so that we may not have to call our young men to the colors in some period of strife in the future, so that we shall not have to pour out our treasure of blood and natural resources.

I ask the Senate to extend this act because if the Senate does not do so, the country will be weaker than it should be, and weakness invites attack, weakness endangers our stability and endangers our existence as a Nation.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope every Senator will vote for the extension of this act, and in doing so, I hope every Senator will feel that he is writing the best insurance policy we can possibly write on the floor of the Senate for the continuance of the country we love and its prestige in the world. After all, our country is the hope not only of our own people but of the democratic peoples all over the world, who must look to us for leadership and protection, because there is no other place on the globe to which they can look.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I rise to support the chairman in urging the Senate to extend the Selective Service Act. I also rise to support the amendment which is now the pending question. That amendment has been offered by the majority leader, for himself and other Senators. I should like to say that in behalf of myself, the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], I have offered an amendment which is similar to the amendment offered by the majority leader for himself and other Senators. The amendment proposes to strike out, on page 3, beginning with line 18, all down to and including line 16 on page 5. In other words, the amendment would strike out the so-called Russell amendment, which was included as a part of the committee substitute.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield to the Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask a question of my distinguished colleague. Incidentally, Mr. President, he is one of the most valiant members of the Armed Service Committee, and is one of the most diligent of its members in his efforts, and is one who is most thorough in his comprehension of defense projects. He is a real stalwart on the committee, and is of great help to his country in keeping up its defense strength. I say that in all sincerity.

I should like to ask him whether his amendment is identical with that offered by the Senator from Illinois, for himself and other Senators?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. It is, except the amendment of the Senator from Illinois for some reason also proposes a change in the title of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I only wish to understand the philosophy of the amendment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But the language of the two amendments is exactly the same as far as striking out the Russell amendment is concerned.

Mr. President, I do not wish to see any boy in this country drafted; but I believe it is necessary to extend the Selective Service Act in the interest of our own security; in the interest of the security of American boys themselves who may be subject to induction; in the interest of the security of their mothers, their fathers, their sisters, and their families.

In other words, Mr. President, we do not propose to extend this measure for war purposes; we do not propose to extend it for the purpose of extending our fighting power to other parts of the world; but we propose that this measure be extended for our own security here at home. This measure is a peace bill; it is a bill to extend peace in the world, not to extend war. I feel very strongly that if the enactment of this measure were not necessary in order to maintain peace, I, for one, would not have any part of it.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Does not the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts also feel that not only should this measure be related to the young people of the United States who are covered by this draft, but in order to insure the peace of the world and to deter those who might think the Nation is considering only its young people, we should provide for a mobilization and registration of industry, labor, and capital, if necessary, in order to prevent an all-out war and to make it impossible for profits to be made out of a future war?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with the Senator. I think his purpose is now being attempted to be translated into specific terms by Mr. Symington. In the Unification Act, Congress created the National Security Resources Board, which now is a part of the defense system. We have provided for a mobilization system. All the questions which the Senator raises require planning to the highest degree. I thought the Senator from Maryland answered the Senator from Kansas very well in that regard. What he suggests is something we are going to do, indeed, is something we are doing, and the program would come into effect, as it should, if there were another war, or if it became necessary to send our boys to fight anywhere and to build up our industrial production for war purposes.

Mr. President, as I was saying, we are today improving and increasing the equipment which is being supplied to the armed services. We are spending millions of dollars on research for better guns, better ships, better electronic gadgets, better radar, and all the other types of defensive armament which, as we know, are required in modern warfare. We are appropriating vast sums of money. Yesterday the Subcommittee on Armed Services voted to report to the full committee for its approval a measure which would this year appropriate more than $12,000,000,000. All the equipment, the research, and the money will be useless unless we have the necessary manpower, trained to use modern equipment and able to be as secure and as safe as possible in the use of the equipment under modern conditions.

For those several reasons, I believe that we must extend the Selective Service Act at this time. I think that if we extend it, it should be in the form of the Senate bill rather than of the House bill. Two years ago we established this system, after months of hearings and careful consideration by the committee in executive session. I remember it very well, because I was a member of the Armed Services Committee at that time. Congress at that time enacted it because the Nation needed it. The manpower in our Armed Forces was falling off very rapidly. Enlistments were not being made. At the present time, although enlistments are coming in, they are not coming in quite so rapidly as they were. As a result the Army is under its appropriated strength. We all know that with the background of this act we get a larger number of voluntary enlistments, we build up our Reserves, and we have a stronger National Guard. I hope that the provisions of the act when extended will not have to be used, but I believe that it is very wise, for the reasons given by the chairman, that the act be kept on the statute books.

There is another reason which I should like to touch upon very briefly. Since the enactment of the law 2 years ago, we have entered into the military assistance pact. We have with other countries signed the North Atlantic Pact. We have passed several ECA bills, and we have watched the magnificent performance of the Berlin airlift. If we do not extend the Selective Service Act, it seems to me that many of the countries with whom we have made agreements will lose confidence in us. They will believe that as the result of our failure to extend the act at the present time they may not receive assistance from us when they may need it most.

As I tried to develop through a question addressed to the chairman a little while ago, General Bradley testified, as the present occupant of the chair, the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] knows, for he was present, that the fact of having this measure on the books would allow us to maintain a smaller strength in our Armed Forces at the present time. In other words, we do not have to have them filled to full strength, because we have this reserve manpower that can be utilized if needed. As I have already stated, the steps we are taking will permit better training; make fighting safer in the event fighting becomes necessary; promote greater efficiency and, therefore, make the men more secure.

In extending the Selective Service Act we should give the President the power at the proper time, in his discretion as Commander in Chief—and certainly he will not use it unless it becomes absolutely necessary—to call American boys into the service. If we leave it to a joint session of the Congress to declare an emergency, we open the possibility of the people of our country becoming excited and the whole world thinking that perhaps we are going to war. In that way we would stimulate action of a fighting nature rather than to extend our peacetime efforts, as we are really trying to do. In other words, the proposal of the Senate committee is one more step in our ability to remain strong and, through being strong, to keep peace in the world and to obtain greater security for ourselves.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have discussed I support the extension of the Selective Service Act.

I should now like to speak for a few moments on the amendment offered in the committee, as a part of the committee substitute, by my friend, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I believe the amendment offered by the majority leader to strike out the Russell amendment should be adopted. I say this because I believe the Russell amendment is unworkable. I believe it would apply to volunteers as well as to inductees, and therefore would upset the whole system under which the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force are now being operated. In other words, it would be a step backward, not a step forward, in the effort to solve a difficult problem in our armed services.

At the outset, in discussing the amendment, allow me to make one point clear.

I defer to no one when it comes to proposals to guarantee a reasonable and a sympathetic recognition of the differing customs, traditions, and habits which have developed through generations of community life in the various sections of our country. Indeed, my own State has a wealth of such tradition and custom. It is an inseparable part of our heritage. So I should be the last person to suggest the point of view which would tend suddenly to violate the habits and customs of any other section. But I submit that is not the issue. We are seeking the same thing—a considered and reasonable approach to a most sensitive problem. I think therefore we differ, not in our objective, but simply in our method of obtaining it. I oppose the Russell amendment, the section dealing with racial segregation, for the same reasons that I opposed it in 1948. I believe that it is unnecessary, that it is provocative, and that it is unworkable. It is unnecessary, because the services, themselves, who have for many years been living with this question, need no such controversial legislation as this to enable them to continue to meet the problem in an intelligent and sensible manner. It is provocative, because——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Texas in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was interested in the distinguished Senator's observation that the amendment would be unworkable. We managed to get along in this country with a similar provision for something like 150 years, and to win a number of great wars under a similar system.

I was also interested in the Senator's observation that the military forces are handling this matter in a satisfactory way. Does not the Senator know that the idea of complete integration of the races, down to the squad level, in the Army, did not originate with the military, but originated with the civilian who is President of the United States and who issued an order on that subject; and that not only did it not meet with the approval of the military, but that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts himself elicited the statement from General Eisenhower, who is supposed to have had some experience in military matters, that he did not approve of the complete integration of the races, but thought it ought to stop on a company level; that the proposal to change the customs and conditions and to deny to an individual the right of saying whether he should serve with his own race originated with a civilian committee appointed by the President, none of whose members had any military experience of any nature? I should like to have the Senator quote some outstanding military leader who has said that this Presidential policy will add to the fighting power of American arms.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would answer the Senator by saying that I intended to quote not from a military authority, but from the report of a committee appointed by the President, which examined the subject and made a report.

Mr. RUSSELL. That committee was headed by Mr. Charles Fahy, I believe, who has done a number of errands for the President, and has served on various committees. Two of the members are distinguished colored citizens of the city of Chicago. One is the publisher of the Chicago Defender and the other was an adviser to the Secretary of War on racial matters, during the war, but they are not military men; they are civilians telling the military how the Army should be composed and how it should be run.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would respectfully say to my colleague on the committee that I believe I am correct in saying that the leaders in the various military services, whether they approve or not, have said the plan was working well at the present time in the various services.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not recall any such testimony. However, I did not attend all the hearings which were had on the bill.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I say it with reservations, but I think I heard two, if not three, leaders say that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that General Bradley, who has had some military experience, and some political experience, having served on a committee appointed by the President to perform a specific job, made the statement that the Army did not like to be used as an instrument of social reform and that he had no intention of carrying out integration. The next day the President issued an order to General Bradley to institute the policy of complete integration. So it is purely a civilian and political movement and it in nowise touches anything which has anything to do with strengthening the national defense or increasing the might of American arms.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would agree with the Senator that it is a civilian movement, but I hope it is not a political movement.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts if he does not feel that men who have spent a lifetime in the Army should have as much of an idea as to how it should be composed and operated as do Mr. Charles Fahy and the other civilian members of the committee who are enforcing the Presidential order.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I believe their opinion should be given weight. I believe that every military man must take his orders from his Commander in Chief, whether he approves of them or not, and try to make the orders workable and practicable. I believe, from listening and observing in the past 2 years, that the steps taken show progress in the way both the Senator from Georgia and I want them to make progress—progress by education, by peaceful means, and without fanfare and emotional words.

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly advocate progress along those lines, and I trust that I have been able to contribute in some small degree to progress along those lines, but I insist that that is quite a different assertion than to say that the provision is unworkable because the Fahy committee says that all is well with the armed services.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If I am correct, the Senator's amendment includes volunteers as well as inductees?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, it does. The Senator well knows that we carefully drew the act. I doubt whether any piece of legislation in the history of the Congress has been gone over more carefully than has the Selective Service Act of 1948. The Senator knows we drew the act deliberately to induce enlistments in order to avoid selections, and for that reason the amendment applies to both selectees and volunteers.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator will agree with me, since he had a great part in the enactment of the law, and I hope I had a small part in it, that the act has worked to encourage volunteers so that we have not for 18 months had to use the processes of the draft.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is quite correct, but the Senator from Massachusetts knows there was evidence before the committee that enlistments were declining in recent weeks to a marked degree, and I think it is due in part at least to the way the committee referred to is pushing its program and compelling men to serve under conditions which are distasteful to them, thus drying up enlistments, so that, without the adoption of an amendment such as the one I have submitted, we shall have to begin drafting men within the next few months.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I most respectfully disagree with my friend that that is the cause of enlistments drying up.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that has been the result in certain sections of the country where men like the Army as a career.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. If I may continue, very briefly, Mr. President, I think I have stated that the amendment is provocative because it places constant emphasis on a problem which can best be handled by deft and tactful leadership.

It is unworkable because it presents practical assignment difficulties which cannot be solved, and includes punitive provisions which constitute an ever-present obstacle to the exercise of good judgment and common sense by the military officers most closely in touch with the situation.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a copy of the report of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services. This report comes from a committee of distinguished Americans headed by Judge Charles Fahy. It is called Freedom to Serve. It is the report which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] just discussed. I should like to read into the RECORD the conclusions of the committee transmitted to the President on May 22, 1950, just a month ago, on the Navy, the Air Force, and the Army. This is the committee's conclusion as to the Navy:

> All jobs and rating in the naval general service now are open to all enlisted men without regard to race or color. Negroes are currently serving in every job classification in general service.

All courses in Navy technical schools are open to qualified personnel without regard to race or color and without racial quotas. Negroes are attending the most advanced technical schools and are serving in their ratings both in the fleet and at shore installations.

Negroes in general service are completely integrated with whites in basic training, technical schools, on the job, in messes and sleeping quarters, ashore and afloat.

Chief, first-, second-, and third-class stewards now have the rate of chief, first-, second-, and third-class petty officers. (Policy change adopted June 7, 1949.)

Stewards who qualify for general ratings now can transfer to general service.

The Marine Corps, which as a part of the Navy is subject to Navy policy, has abolished its segregated Negro training units. (Policy change adopted June 7, 1949.) Marine Corps training is now integrated, although some Negro marines are still assigned to separate units after basic training. In this respect the effectuation of Navy policy in the Marine Corps is yet to be completed.

THE AIR FORCE

The Air Force announced its new racial policy on May 11, 1949. As a result of this policy, the all-Negro Three Hundred and Thirty-second Fighter Wing at Lockbourne Field, Ohio, has been broken up, and its personnel either sent to schools for further training, transferred to white units in other commands, or separated under current regulations.

A majority of other Negro units has also been abolished. As of January 31, 1950, only 59 Negro units remained, and 1,301 units were racially integrated, as compared with 106 Negro units and only 167 mixed units on June 1, 1949, when the Air Force policy went into effect.

Approximately 74 percent of the 25,000 Negroes in the Air Force on January 31, 1950, were serving in integrated units; and 26 percent still were serving in Negro units. This integration process is continuing.

All Air Force jobs and schools are open to qualified personnel without racial restriction or quotas. Six percent of the total personnel attending technical training schools in January 1950 were Negro.

Negroes serving in mixed units and attending service schools are integrated with whites in living conditions.

THE ARMY

All Army jobs now are open to Negroes. (Policy change adopted September 30, 1949.)

All Army school courses are open to Negroes without restriction or quota. (Policy change adopted September 30, 1949.)

For the first time Negroes no longer are limited in assignment to Negro and overhead (housekeeping) units, but are to be assigned according to their qualifications to any unit, including formerly white units. (Policy change adopted January 16, 1950.)

Negroes serving in mixed units will be integrated on the job, in barracks and messes. (Policy change adopted January 16, 1950.)

The 10 percent limitation on Negro strength in the Army has been abolished, and there no longer are Negro quotas for enlistment. (Policy change adopted March 27, 1950.)

The succeeding chapters contain a more detailed account of the Committee's recommendations to the services and the extent to which the President's policy is being implemented.

Mr. President, I believe that the progress which is reported in the Fahy report is due to leadership and to the American spirit of cooperation. I most emphatically deny that the advances made in the services in this respect are the result of coercion and force. I contend that these extracts from the Fahy report, which is a report filed by a group of impartial and patriotic Americans, are convincing proof that this problem can be met and is being met without any controversial legislative directive such as is contained in section 2 of the pending bill. It can be met, as it is being met, by good judgment and sympathetic military leadership. I again emphasize the basic thesis of my argument. Every Senator in this Chamber is striving toward the same goal in this matter. We are all seeking just one thing, which is a fair and reasonable and acceptable solution of this difficult question. We differ only as to method. I therefore hope that this section of the bill will be omitted, because I feel we are making progress and shall continue to progress better without it.

My second point is that this provision is unwise because it is provocative. It provokes and emphasizes prejudices which should be better left to some more tactful and sympathetic approach.

Finally, I believe section 2 of this bill is unworkable, and is dangerously punitive. It is not only punitive on the officers, but, as the Senator from Georgia has said, it covers volunteers as well as draftees. For instance, when replacements are being sent to their new units in large groups, many different units would be involved in a single shipment. Men come by ship, train, and airplane, and they arrive at all hours of the day and night. They are frequently delayed en route in replacement depots and staging areas. Under such difficult and unpredictable circumstances it is literally impossible to maintain a rigid segregation of groups.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The situation to which the Senator refers would not be affected by the amendment. The amendment says, "shall be assigned to a unit." The replacements which the Senator refers to as traveling around the country would not be affected by the amendment. The amendment would not apply to those replacements. The amendment provides that they shall be assigned to a unit composed of their own race. The amendment would not affect the replacements to which the Senator refers.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I believe the Senator is largely correct with respect to my last remarks. I may say to the Senator from Georgia, however, and I emphasize, that the report of the Fahey committee and the reports of the military authorities to our committee, indicate progress along what I hope are peaceful lines to the solution of this very difficult question. I believe the adoption of the proposed Russell amendment would be a step backward, rather than a step forward. I believe that the system is working well at the present time in the case of those who are voluntarily coming into the armed services, and so far as I know, we have had no knowledge or reports of any criticism or any violence in connection with the system.

In everything I have ever said on the subject, either publicly or privately, I have always emphasized that I believe the solution is education. I believe the solution is a greater understanding of the subject by everyone. I have always been very hopeful that in what is being done in the armed services, under conditions where a man comes into the services and finds that he is not his own boss, the problem would be worked out satisfactorily. I hope that at the present time, in peacetime, this gradual solution and understanding in our armed services will be continued. I have opposed the Senator's amendment, as I now oppose it, because I believe that it is not a step forward in the solution of the problem, but a step backward. I can see the Senator's reasons for offering the amendment, but I most respectfully disagree with him.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the Senator's statement, and he knows the high regard in which I hold him. I may say, however, that he makes a splendid argument for the provision which he seeks to strike out when he says that he is in favor of educational methods, rather than compulsion. The very effect of this amendment is to avoid the compulsion of military law, and the law passed by the Congress of the United States, which reaches down into the home, takes out a 19-year-old boy, brings him into the service under conditions which are distasteful to him, and attempts by compulsion to make him change his mores, or his traditional habits of living. The argument which the Senator from Massachusetts has made is one to which I can fully subscribe, because it expresses my position, rather than his.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I would not have made the argument if I thought it supported the Senator's position. I thought I was supporting my own position when I made the argument, because I thought conditions in the Army were being worked out satisfactorily, as shown by the committee report from which I have read, which is in accord with my own knowledge of the situation.

Mr. President, I shall not continue this discussion any further, because I believe it is clearly understood by those who are in favor of the bill and those who are opposed to it. In conclusion I merely wish to emphasize two points. I fully endorse the section of the bill which would extend the present Selective Service Act for a period of 3 years. I think such action is necessary to our national security, and I urge that it be taken. I believe 3 years is better than 2 years, because it gives our own people a better understanding of the needs of the moment. The time can always be cut by the President or the Congress, in their discretion. I believe it would give more confidence to our friends and allies in other parts of the world if this act were extended for 3 years. It would also help the boys themselves, because it would give them a greater knowledge of their responsibilities and what they must face. I think it is necessary for our national security and for our friends to obtain peace in this world—not war, Mr. President, but peace. It is our strength that is needed in order to assure peace. I again say that I hope section 2, the so-called Russell amendment, will be omitted. I feel that we can leave out section 2 and still give to all the people of the country the just and reasonable treatment to which they are entitled. I am profoundly hopeful that the Senate will remove that section from the bill and pass it in the form in which the Committee on Armed Services drew it up with the Russell amendment stricken out, rather than in the form it came over to the Senate from the House.

SALE OF MINERAL RIGHTS ON LANDS PURCHASED FROM THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, during recent years our Government, either through foreclosures or outright purchases, has obtained title to several million acres of farm land. Later this land was offered for sale by the Government. In most instances as the land was sold by the numerous Government agencies, a portion of the mineral rights on the land was retained in the name of the United States Government.

The retention of these mineral rights by the Government has not been entirely satisfactory to the new purchasers of the land. Recently there has developed widespread demand from the farmers who bought the lands to be permitted to own them outright without any reservations. For this reason Congress, by H. R. 4800, is asked to establish a uniform policy for the sale of these rights to the present owners of the land.

H. R. 4800, the bill which proposes to establish such a uniform policy for the disposition of these mineral rights, has already passed the House and has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The bill is now in the Senate Calendar awaiting action.

I agree with the sponsors of this proposed legislation that Congress should make a decision as to whether the Government should retain these mineral rights or sell them. If Congress decides that the Government should sell these mineral rights, it is highly desirable that we establish a uniform policy for their sale.

However, since the time H. R. 4800 was reported to the Senate certain additional information has been developed which, in my opinion, would now make it advisable that any consideration of this bill by the Senate be postponed pending a further study of the entire question by the appropriate committee. In the meantime, pending such study, we should take some action to protect the interests of all parties concerned.

With this thought in mind, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], I submit a resolution which states that it is the sense of the Senate that the United States shall not sell, lease or otherwise dispose of mineral interests owned by it in lands to which it does not own the surface rights until an appropriate policy for such disposition shall hereafter be established by an act of Congress.

I am today writing the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry requesting an opportunity to appear before that committee in executive session to explain why I think it is essential that this resolution be adopted, and why I feel that a further study of this entire problem is in order prior to consideration of H. R. 4800.

I now send to the desk the resolution, and ask that it be referred to the appropriate committee. Before it is referred, I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 301) as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States shall not sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of mineral interests owned by it in lands to which it does not own the surface rights until an appropriate policy for such disposition shall hereafter be established by act of Congress. As used herein the term "United States" includes agencies and instrumentalities thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT AND COMMUNIST WORLD INFLUENCE

Mr. CAIN obtained the floor.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may make a statement of 5 or 6 minutes' duration?

Mr. CAIN. I shall be pleased to yield to the Senator from Nevada if it can be done without my losing my right to the floor, and I would ask unanimous consent for that privilege.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington may yield without jeopardizing his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nevada may proceed.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada charges that officials of our State Department have every intention of recognizing the Communist regime in China, and will do so as soon as they think they have softened up the American people sufficiently to make them take it.

Official recognition of the Communists in China would be extended even now were it not for fear of American public opinion on the part of these very State Department officials. While administration officials are mouthing brave little phrases and meaningless double talk against Communist Russia—apparently in an attempt to appease a now wary American public—they are secretly planning to strengthen Communist domination through recognition of Communist China, after a period of softening up here through the propaganda machine.

Despite their pious, though somewhat delayed, pro-American talk, the administration plans to sell us more communism. The Secretary's step toward recognition of the Communist regime in China, through not officially objecting to their acceptance by the United Nations, is part of the softening-up process.

Though it must have shocked an unsuspecting public, those of us who have watched the pattern of State Department moves for the past few years were not surprised when Mr. Acheson asserted that the United States would not use its veto power to block United Nations' recognition of the Communist regime in China, which was not only a further surrender in the so-called cold war, but a form of betrayal to the enemy.

Indications are that Communist Russia has planned for a piecemeal surrender to them of the rest of the world. The fact that it has gained a diplomatic piecemeal surrender by us in Asia must be weighed with the complementary fact of the Communist drive for Europe. Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, has let it be known how Stalin proposes to end the cold war: First, kick the nation of China out of the United Nations and seat in its place Communist puppets of Russia; and, second, withdraw from Berlin and set up there a "democratic"—that is, a Communist-controlled—government. The first of the two piecemeal surrenders would lead to the Russian capture of all of Asia, and the second to the Russian capture of all of Europe. We now know where our State Department stands on the first; a little more time will tell everyone where it intends to ultimately stand on the second.

In the fall of 1949, when the Senate was discussing, in the conference between Canada, England, and the United States, held in Washington, on the subject of storing atomic bombs in England, and other matters—a conference timed to make the 1934 Trade Agreements Act extension easier by diverting public attention from the most important debate on the Senate floor in a century. The Senator now speaking warned that England, whom we had been keeping on our payroll in some form since the declaration of World War II, would soon affront us by extending official recognition to the Chinese Communists, who were working closely with the American Communists we were then jailing as enemies of our country. England, despite all previous denials, did recognize the Chinese Communists. The next thing, the junior Senator from Nevada fears, will be official recognition of these Communists by our own State Department as part of the plan.

By strange coincidence, Mr. Acheson's recent statement was followed immediately by implications from Trygve Lie that the United Nations would proceed to unseat the delegates of the nation of China, one of the founders of the United Nations, and would seat Communist delegates in their place.

If the United Nations is ever to be useful to the human race, it must free itself of Communist domination—not add to it. Apparently, we cannot even hope to attain this until the weak personnel of our State Department is itself subjected to a thorough housecleaning.

There is little likelihood that the State Department's attitude will change as long as we have Communist sympathizers in high office.

DEVELOPMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY—ARTICLE BY DAVID LILIENTHAL

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, there are few problems in America today as difficult and as challenging as those involved in the future development of atomic energy in the United States.

How far can we go in developing atomic energy for industrial and civilian purposes?

How can we break down the iron curtain of secrecy, which has become a serious obstacle to creative research, invention, and development in the atomic energy field?

Where should we draw the line between the necessary role of the Government and the desirable role of private enterprise?

Within the realm of private activities in connection with atomic energy, how can we assure truly competitive development on the part of a large number of companies?

How can we protect against the concentration of control of atomic energy resources in the hands of a few giant companies?

Questions of this type are discussed at length in an important series of articles which has been written for Collier's magazine by David Lilienthal, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The first article in this series has already stirred widespread discussion on the role of the Government in the field of atomic energy. The series will probably initiate the first full-dress national debate on the subject since the Atomic Energy Act became law in 1946.

In my judgment, every Member of Congress and every serious student of public affairs should read Mr. Lilienthal's articles. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have the first article in the series, entitled "Free the Atom," along with the editor's footnote, inserted in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks, for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FREE THE ATOM

(By David E. Lilienthal, former Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission)

[EDITOR'S NOTE. This is the first of several important articles which Mr. Lilienthal will write for Collier's. It is the first he has written since his retirement from a long career of Government service which included an intimate and unsurpassed acquaintance with the whole development of atomic energy.

In this issue Mr. Lilienthal writes with grave concern of the Government monopoly that has stifled developing the peaceful uses of the atom. But he also writes with high hope of an atomic future which he sees as one of progress and undreamed-of development.

In his subsequent articles Mr. Lilienthal will offer specific recommendations for ending the atomic monopoly and transferring Government-held knowledge, facilities and production to competitive private enterprise—the historic source and the guardian of America's material progress. He will speculate, with the fund of knowledge at his command, on the possible uses to which the industrial atom may be put.

David Lilienthal has something to say that is of great significance not only to the American people but to the entire world. Collier's considers it a privilege to provide the platform from which he speaks.]

No Soviet industrial monopoly is more completely owned by the state than is the industrial atom in free-enterprise America. The Government has today an ironclad, airtight and all-embracing legalized monopoly of this vast enterprise, and of the new industrial era the development of the atom could bring to this country.

All the industrial materials of this new industry are owned by Government monopoly.

All the plants and facilities—running into several billions of dollars—are owned by Government monopoly. All the industrial information and techniques and all the industrial "know-how" are owned and strictly controlled by Government monopoly. Only on its say-so can new developments be undertaken.

There is no private investment, no risk of loss nor chance of profit by any private individual or corporation.

There can be no private ideas about the industrial atom. No private individual or institution that Government monopoly has not expressly admitted to the necessarily narrow circle of its "contractors" can work on or experiment with atomic industrial materials.

No one can compete, using his own ideas and dollars, with those within the circle for the great prizes of satisfaction, prestige, and profit that have always spurred men on in every other new chapter of American industrial history.

The Atomic Energy Commission has tried and continues to try conscientiously to adapt Government monopoly to American industrial habits and traditions and capabilities. But it is an impossible assignment. To be directed to harmonize monopoly of ideas with competition in ideas is like being told to make oil and water mix.

Instead of moving into this new frontier of the industrial atom along the road we know so well, we have gone down another road, one that is against all our experience and contrary to our temperament. The hard fact is that we are trying to hang up a great American industrial achievement by what are essentially the monopoly methods of Soviet Russia.

The industrial frontier of the second 50 years of the twentieth century is the development of the atom for useful purposes. Here is that new "ground floor" that Americans are always watching out for—something brand-new with no limits to its future.

The development of the industrial atom can provide the setting for still another American miracle of industrial growth, another opportunity to boost the rate and variety of our productiveness, another wide upswing in everybody's income and standard of living comparable to that which resulted from the stimulus of electricity, the automobile, or the vast industries based on modern chemistry. I can think of almost no industry or business or profession or labor skill in the country that is not a potential beneficiary.

To make the industrial atom really sprout and flourish within the next decade or so would create kinds of jobs and businesses and ways of living now undreamed of. Here would be something concrete and understandable for the whole world to take note of in that hot competition known as the cold war. What powerful propaganda ammunition this would be we can better understand by imagining what would happen in men's minds everywhere if the Russians should beat us at developing this peaceful side of the atom.

There is no reason why they should beat us at it, though. This particular kind of pioneering is just our dish.

We ought to start at once to get the industrial atom back on the American track. A great deal is at stake. It will take a lot of doing. I am convinced that it can be done. We should lose no time getting going.

We know how to make technical progress in this country. We know how to take new discoveries and apply them to useful purposes. We know how to dig out new knowledge to fill in the gaps that show up, how to shape development so that it supplies human needs, how to cut costs, get rid of the "bugs" in new processes, how to see that labor gets a share in increased productivity.

This kind of development "know-how" is an art, a distinctive American art. It is widely respected in the world. We know that it is one of our greatest assets.

This art of development is the very heart of the American industrial system. It is based largely on wide-open competition of ideas, providing an open and free field for any man's idea of a better way to do something. It is fluid, flexible, and vigorous. Sometimes it has been ripsnorting and crude. But it has given the American consumer and worker, and the young people setting out in life, a wide range and freedom of choice. It has given us a military power that was decisive in two world wars. It enables us today to help many countries and peoples who would otherwise starve or fold up or be push-overs for communism.

But when it comes to the new era of the atom we have thrown overboard almost everything we know about how to make industrial progress.

Now, of all times, we need to demonstrate the vigor and adaptability of American business and industrial management. Yet we pick this time to dump our unique advantages overboard for 100 percent Government ownership, 100 percent Government financing, and increasingly centralized and governmental direction of one of the most technical undertakings in our whole history.

The crowning irony of all this remains to be stated. As to the new era of the atom, we have not only turned our back on the essentials of the industrial system that has given us our military security, we have done it in the name of military security. In the midst of a desperate competition with the Russian system, we have adopted a method that more nearly resembles the Russian system than it does our own.

How did this strange state of affairs come about? What are the stakes in the industrial development of the atom? How can we get the atom back on the road on which we have prospered and become strong? Can we do this without divulging "atomic secrets" of military importance? What inducements can be set up so private capital and competitive brains will come into this new region?

These are among the many questions that arise. I shall offer here what seems to me a basis for developing the answers. I believe that there are practical and sensible steps that can get us back on course.

Let me say, first of all, that there are no "devils" in this story. This is not a sinister tale of conspirators and master spies. My disagreement is not concerned with individuals. I am certainly not critical of my former associates, the able and exceptionally devoted men of the Atomic Energy Commission and its organization. And President Truman, from the very outset, has steadily espoused, supported, and promoted civilian control of the atom and its beneficial development; he has seen clearly the bright prospect that the peaceful applications of atomic energy hold out for mankind.

The strange and dangerous course we are now pursuing was set by the Atomic Energy Act of 1946. Sponsored by Senator BRIEN MCMAHON and known as the McMahon Act, it was the end product of monumental hearings, in which many able citizens appeared and expressed their views. The conduct of these hearings by Senator MCMAHON, and his uphill but successful fight for the principle of civilian direction of this great new knowledge, constitute one of the brightest chapters in the legislative history of our generation.

When this law was enacted 4 years ago no one could see, that there was any alternative to an air-tight Government monopoly; certainly this was my own view at that time. But though not a single vote was cast against its passage in the Senate, there were deep misgivings among the sponsors of the legislation, doubts which found their way into almost the first words of the law itself, that this legislation will necessarily be subject to revision from time to time since so many unknown factors are involved.

Three years of actually administering atomic energy has convinced me completely that the time for revision has come; that there is a better way than monopoly; that changes both of law and, equally important, of public and Congressional approach to the industrial atom are urgently needed.

I therefore propose that the basic provisions and fundamental assumptions of the Atomic Energy Act and its administration be thoroughly reexamined by the country. This reexamination should take into account how the law has actually worked in practice, and whether the structure of organization provided by the law tends to defeat the purpose of the act itself; it should take into account such new facts as the Russian atomic achievements. I believe this reexamination will demonstrate that a thoroughgoing revision of the law is required. I urge that the revised law state flatly and without equivocation, as fundamental policy of this country, that development of the industrial atom shall be in accord with the American system. A series of steps should be provided to achieve that purpose, over the very shortest practical space of time.

If this article serves to focus public attention upon this strange critter, an idea monopoly in a land of free opportunity for new ideas, and if it stimulates public discussion, it will serve my purpose. If enough people become convinced, as I now am, that we are off the track, then I'm sure we are practical enough to find specific ways and means of setting things to rights.

The future course of American life will be profoundly affected by this issue. The foundations of our military strength are directly involved, and so is our basic pattern of life.

What is at stake here? Is atomic energy only a military weapon, only a cataclysmic explosion? A good many people still think so.

But this is as great an error as to think that the Chicago fire is a typical example of the use of fire, or that because electricity is used for electrocutions, electricity and electrocutions are synonymous. To put the development of electricity in the hands of a United States Electrocution Commission is about as sensible as to force our Atomic Energy Commission to become merely an Atomic Munitions Trust; and this is what we are now rapidly heading for.

If atomic energy actually were just another piece of military ordnance then Government monopoly is appropriate enough; or in any event, no deep harm is done and industrial advance all along the line is not lost to us.

But far more than a kind of supermunition is involved. I can make this clear by some analogies.

Suppose 50 years ago (or even 25 years ago) virtually all the knowledge of the new chemistry and of chemical reactions had been declared by law to be a Government monopoly, on the ground that it is upon our knowledge of the science of chemistry and chemical know-how that we depend for high explosives, bombs and incendiaries, and poison gas. Or suppose that all facts about aerodynamics, airplane design, and all development of the airplane had been taken over as a Government monopoly after the Wright brothers first demonstrated that a heavier-than-air machine could be made to fly. Chemical reaction and the airplane are far more closely linked to the national security than is the atom bomb. Or make the same supposition about Government monopoly of radio and electronics—without which, also, this country would be helpless in a military sense.

If there had been a Government monopoly for chemistry or aviation, or radio, as there now is for the atom, what kind of chemical and aviation and radio industries would we have today? Would we have commercial aviation, for example? Would we have radio and television in our homes? Or would aviation and radio still be a Government secret to be developed only at Government cost and in Government-owned plants and for Government purposes? Would we, for example, have developed the vast industrial benefits based on chemical research, creating an industry that has multiplied the wealth of the land employing hundreds of thousands, causing the investment of billions of dollars of private funds?

Of course not. I need not argue the point; the fabulous record of nonmonopoly development based on chemistry, aerodynamics and electronics has changed the whole of American life, has strengethened and improved it. A system of Government monopoly of ideas in those fields would never in the world have produced such magnificent results.

In saying these things I'm not "cussing out" government. The talk about the "dead hand of government" is nonsense. The men and women doing scientific and technical work throughout our Government have very great achievements to their credit. Those working in the atomic field, for the Atomic Energy Commission or for one of the Commission's many private contractors, I believe to be exceptionally talented and energetic. What is wrong is not the people, but the system of monopoly under which the work is done. Government monopoly as a means of developing industrial ideas is what is wrong.

No one can tell in advance where great new ideas will come from, ideas that result in an electric motor or generator, or an automobile engine, ideas like those that created penicillin or the sulfa drugs, ideas that gave us the automobile self-starter or nylon or air conditioning and the refrigerator, or synthetic rubber. We've always tried to encourage people to have such ideas; never before have we turned over to anyone (much less to our Government) the power to limit the circle from which ideas could come.

It takes the ideas of thousands and thousands of different people, armed with what knowledge and know-how has been previously accumulated, to make the kind of industrial progress that this country stands for. And no Government commission, however wise and well-intentioned, no inner circle of private contractors for Government, however well selected and diversified, can be counted on to develop these ideas, for they only grow well in the soil of competition—competition in spirit and in fact.

This is the lesson of our whole history. This is our message of productivity to the whole wide world.

The whole atmosphere has to be right, too, if ideas are to flourish. Otherwise people will not be attracted to a new subject, and will not be stimulated to new ideas. Certainly they will not put their own money and time and energy into developing new things unless the climate of work is favorable.

For this purpose, the atmosphere in the field of the industrial atom could hardly be worse. Men don't get excited about working on new ideas by having available a technical document, especially a carefully "distilled" one, or by being given a quick walk through an atomic factory or laboratory. They need to get their hands into the dirt, into the guts of the working facts. That's not possible today, and won't be without the changes I believe should be made.

A basic change, and one that is badly needed, is a change in this climate; an end to the absurd cloak-and-dagger air of mystery that still hangs over this monopoly; relief from hideous complexity and increasing centralization and red tape.

Can just any talented person, can a young Ford or Edison or Chrysler or Kettering work at the atom today? I mean work at it, not under a formal contract with a government project number, but just to see what he can find out? He certainly can't. Can he even walk into the Smithsonian Museum and get inspiration by seeing the first models in the atomic field—ones now almost as obsolete as Otto Lilienthal's nineteenth-century glider or Samuel Langley's airplane or George Stephenson's locomotive steam engine?

No—not even that. Even our obsolete information is locked up, monopolized.

These things are wrong. They need correction, if we are not to miss out on what may be one of the greatest opportunities of modern times.

You may well ask: "Now look, mister, just what is this opportunity you say we are missing? Just what can industry do with the atom?" My answer would be that I don't know; that, today, no one knows. That's my point; we must permit industry itself to find out.

I don't know just what can come of the industrial atom, but I do know that we are dealing here with a series of very great discoveries about the fundamental nature of everything physical—whether it is made of metal or is a gas like the oxygen in the atmosphere, and whether it is living or inanimate.

We are dealing here with knowledge about the building blocks of which everything on this earth is made.

We don't know much yet, and we know very little about how to use what we do know, except, of course, as a revolutionary weapon of war. But what else atomic knowledge and its application can do of a creative and useful sort in raising living standards the world over no one really knows much.

To ask precisely what this fundamental knowledge can do for us, industrially, would be like asking Michael Faraday, a hundred years ago, when he demonstrated his crude little gadget for inducing a feeble electric current: "Tell us how a 60,000-horsepower electric generator will transform life in a great city."

But imagine what could happen to the industrial atom if tomorrow we turned over all we know thus far—the basic information—to the hundreds of thousands of minds in industry and in the universities who are capable of new ideas. Think of the creative men in the automotive industry or the pharmaceutical or glass industries, or the great army of men engaged in building a new world based upon the chemistry of petroleum or cellulose or gas. Just to contemplate the prospect of what they could do for us all stirs the blood.

Anyone familiar with American industrial capabilities could set down a list of a dozen or more concerns in almost every medium-sized city in this country that might well push the industrial atom along. I believe I could list offhand 50 such companies, large and small, in each of our dozen largest industrial cities from coast to coast.

Once this sort of development gets really rolling, the ramifications might be widespread. That was the way with the automobile. It had its effect on industries and businesses that in the days of the auto pioneers seemed a long, long way from any connection with the "horseless carriage," and created businesses that never did exist before the auto.

That is the kind of stimulus that we can bring all up and down the line, if we will get back on the beam by providi g a basis for competition in ideas as to the most fundamental of all knowledge, the heart—or nucleus—of the atom itself.

As to how important to industry (and therefore to us all) atomic discoveries might be, a genuine analogy is provided by the industrial development of chemistry and chemical reactions, recently described as "the premier industry of the United States."

Chemistry and chemical engineering rearrange atoms, and clusters of atoms called molecules, into patterns that are different from their patterns in their original state. A synthetic rubber tire, for example, is petroleum atoms rearranged by industry into "rubber." Cellophane, high-octane gasoline, nylon, plastics—these are products in which atoms and molecules have been shuffled and tossed around and rearranged. Burning coal or igniting gasoline are other examples of a chemical change in which there results a rearrangement of atoms.

But in no chemical change is the heart of the atom itself changed.

In this new field of atomic energy and atomic radiation, however, the atom itself is changed.

When you "split" an atom, the heart of the atom—the nucleus, the core—changes. In that process of changing, atom radiation results. Great heat is created. Not just hundreds and thousands of degrees (as when the atoms are rearranged in burning coal, for example) but heat in the hundreds of thousands and millions of degrees.

These things happen today. Not just in laboratories on a very small and experimental scale. This process of changing the heart of the atom is going on every day, around the clock, on a factory scale in several of this country's atomic plants.

In these Government-owned factories one substance or element is changed, by atomic particles or by radiation, into quite a different one. Uranium into plutonium is the best-known example. But in splitting atoms of uranium, entirely different elements, by the dozens, are created out of uranium—such as barium, lithium, aluminum and so on.

This is transmutation of the elements. It is what the ancient alchemists tried to do when they sought the way to "transmute" mercury into gold. We can do that too, today, in atomic machines, though of course there seems little point in doing it except as a stunt. Occasionally, though, we do change gold into mercury.

When the heart of the atom is changed in this way, radiation, or energy rays, are set off. Rays from radium and from X-ray machines are instances of radiation with which men in industry are familiar. For industrial use, radium is scarce; X-ray machines are ver costly. But just the waste, or byproducts, of a single month's operation of one of this country's atomic plants is the equivalent of tons of radium, and gives off far more radiation than all the X-ray machines in the country could produce in many years.

The technical and industrial uses to which intense beams and huge volumes of radiation can be put have not yet been carefully investigated; in fact it has barely been thought about seriously. Radiation does things to any material that is put in its path. It changes the structure and characteristics of common metals—iron, cobalt, steel, copper, zinc and so on. It changes the structure and nature of curious materials as yet little known to industry or to everyday life, such as those known as germanium and zirconium.

What has been learned thus far about what happens to industrial materials that are exposed to atomic radiation is chiefly what damage it does. Researchers are looking for metals that will contain radiation, or conduct or transfer the heat thereby created. Few materials can take it for these specialized uses. But this is an old story. More often than not, this is the negative process whereby new and useful things have been discovered. Effects that, to one man bent on a particular experiment, seem useless or harmful may, to another with a different goal in mind or no goal whatever or a livelier imagination, lay the foundation for a whole new edifice of technical knowledge and human welfare.

Just a few weeks ago at the University of California there occurred an illuminating and heartening example in the medical field of what I mean This appears to be a giant stride in the ability to detect hardening of the arteries—high among killers of men—years before any recognizable symptoms appear. This boon, if fully confirmed, is the wholly unexpected, wholly unplanned result of experiments that has as their purpose finding some way to combat the harmful and usually deadly effects of overdoses of radiation on human beings.

I confess I take little stock in the offhand way some people say atomic energy and radiation will probably never amount to much, in the sense of practical industrial use and daily living. "A fine bomb, yes, but not anything else of consequence; certainly not for 50 years." I recall that in 1901, after he and his brother had failed in their stubborn effort to fly, Wilbur Wright concluded that it would be a thousand years before man would fly; 7 years later he made a single flight of more than 77 miles. But Orville Wright's view of this early "failure" of the science of flying is worth repeating to the more dismal of today's atomic energy prophets. He said it was not that flight was impossible; it was just that he and his brother didn't yet know enough.

The possibilities of the industrial atom appear almost limitless. We do not know, for example, what chemical reactions in ordinary substances of industry may be caused by the kind of intense radiation we now have available to us for the first time in history. We cannot be sure, today, how we can make use of the fantastically high temperatures released by changing the heart of the atom. Will it ever be possible, as a result of atomic knowledge, to produce electricity directly—that is, without a boiler and turbine and generator? It doesn't now seem in the cards. But does anyone know enough to be sure?

By the application of temperature, pressure and catalysts modern chemists have rearranged the atoms of such common substances as sulfur, coal tar and chlorine, producing a string of more than 500,000 new compounds. Many of these materials have already found their application in industry. Who is there who can say that the process of changing the heart of the atom itself cannot produce comparable results?

The fabulous benefits that have flowed from chemistry would certainly never have been ours if there had been Government monopoly of the dissemination of the information, the materials with which to carry on the work and of the financing. Industrialists and research directors and investigators, viewing the harassing difficulties and frustrations in the atomic field now subject to Government monopoly, will choose other avenues of opportunity that are open to them, avenues across which there has not been thrown a monolithic roadblock. And America and Americans will be the losers. The time for the first industrial applications of atomic knowledge is overdue.

I have said that it is the absence of competition in ideas that is holding back a vigorous and spirited and full development of the industrial atom; that the individuals and private corporations engaged in this undertaking—the inner circle—are able, talented, intent upon making progress. I have said that the Atomic Energy Commission tried conscientiously to make the Soviet-type system we had unwittingly adopted work in an American atmosphere.

It is important to emphasize and to expand on these points.

No one can shrug off his deep concern about this dangerous development in our industrial life by saying that the trouble does not go very deep, that minor adjustments would make unnecessary the complete course reversal that I am now proposing. A hard look at this picture shows that this illness is not a surface chill; it is deep in our vital organs.

The atomic bomb was developed under Government monopoly; it was a great achievement. Many private corporations were hired by Gen. Leslie R. Groves and his Manhattan District organization to do particular assigned tasks. The Manhattan District wartime goal was a single and clearly defined one: to make an atomic bomb and make it in time to help win the war. That kind of governmental objective, under wartime incentives (and without political interference in technical decisions which total wartime secrecy provided) is appropriate for Government monopoly.

But when the civilian Atomic Energy Commission was created in August 1946, it was not given the single objective of developing and making atomic munitions. A year's congressional hearings had made it plain to the country and to Congress that far more than weapon-making is involved in atomic knowledge. The very first words of the McMahon Act providing for a civilian commission state this conclusion in these words, words of great sweep and promise:

"Research and experimentation in the field of nuclear chain reaction have attained the stage at which the release of atomic energy on a large scale is practical. The significance of the atomic bomb for military purposes is evident. The effect of the use of atomic energy for civilian purposes upon the social, economic, and political structures of today cannot now be determined. It is a field in which unknown factors are involved. Therefore, any legislation will necessarily be subject to revision from time to time. It is reasonable to anticipate, however, that tapping this new source of energy will cause profound changes in our present way of life. Accordingly, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the people of the United States that, subject at all times to the paramount objective of assuring the common defense and security, the development and utilization of atomic energy shall, so far as practicable, be directed toward improving the public welfare, increasing the standard of living, strengthening free competition in private enterprise, and promoting world peace."

But it takes more than mere words, however eloquent, in a statute that creates a Government monopoly to cancel out the contradiction between monopoly and our competitive enterprise system.

Under our free system the purpose of government and the purpose of industry are quite dissimilar. They ought to be kept that way, if we want to continue that free society. This is especially important in the field of industrial developments.

When government takes over a whole field of knowledge, and monopolizes it, as it has done under the McMahon Act, its purposes—as government—are not only "paramount," they tend to become exclusive. They tend to drive to lower and lower priority those purposes that are actually not the business of government, but of industry—that is, general industrial development.

It is of the deepest importance to us all that we face up to this inescapable fact:

atomic knowledge in the hands of government will be intensively and successfully developed only for military purposes. Here is a simple way to demonstrate that this is true. Suppose that, overnight, atomic energy lost its importance as a weapon, let us say because of some remarkable new discovery. Would it not be recognized, almost without debate, that the whole field of peacetime industrial development of this knowledge would then be the exclusive province of competitive private industry?

The danger that Government monopoly would choke industrial development was clear to me when I first became the Commission's Chairman. But as a practical matter, the only course for the Commission was to try by actual administration somehow to make monopoly work.

Accordingly, private corporations rather than Government employees were selected to do almost every bit of the actual work of production, process engineering, and so on. New companies were brought in and added to the list of contractors. The roster of firms engaged by the Commission to do portions of the work is a very impressive one, including, among others, such honored names of American industry as these: Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corp., the General Electric Co., Monsanto Chemical Co., the Kellex Corp., the Air Reduction Co., Inc., Western Electric Co., Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., Bendix Aviation Corp., Standard Oil Development Co., Westinghouse Electric Corp., Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., Carrier Corp., and Mallinckrodt Chemical Works.

Wide latitude and discretion were given these concerns in the management of their part of development and production work. (Later, in the Hickenlooper hearings and the resulting legislative "riders," Congress knocked this principle in the head.)

The Commission, at the very outset, launched an effort to broaden knowledge of what was at stake in the industrial atom. We tried, within the law, to increase the information and "know-how" at the disposal of industrial men, those outside the inner circle. This effort continues today. At the Commission's urgent invitation, able industrialists gave months of their time studying this problem of making monopoly work in a land of industrial competition.

What have been the results?

The effort to bring a large segment of the industrial minds of the country actively to bear on this whole new possibility failed. Most American business activities do not have and cannot have any access whatever to genuinely workable and hands-in-the-earth contact with the production of atomic materials or with the industrial atom's potentialities.

The act's process of declassifying (i. e., making nonsecret) information having industrial value has proved hopelessly academic and unworkable. It resembles nothing so much as trying to cut down the redwood tree of secrecy with a penknife: the tree grows faster than the whittler can cut.

As to production: Only one corporation in the country is making or is permitted to know how to make by the method now in use the basic atomic material known as uranium 235.

Only one industrial concern in the country is making, and only two know how to make, the basic atomic end product, plutonium.

As to intermediate "feed" materials, there is only one company making each of these materials; there is no intraindustry competition as to quality, price or (most important) basic improvement in process.

Quite aside from the monetary spur, there is in the atomic enterprise almost no chance for men in industry to have the satisfaction (often quite as important as the profit incentive) of trying to beat the other fellow's methods, his costs, his consumer acceptance.

The estimate of costs of the great new experimental machines for production of atomic power are very high; they are constantly rising, by increments of millions of dollars. Nothing is ever attempted on a small, modest, or limited scale.

There is not a dime of private investment in any of the experimental machines, no financial risk to the corporations doing the work, no cost to them if estimates continue to go zooming up while completion schedules stretch out longer and longer. There is no loss of prestige for mediocre work inasmuch as secrecy makes it difficult or impossible for other industry to judge the performance.

But the men and the corporations at work are excellent. The management personnel of the AEC rank very high. I would say that Carroll Wilson, general manager, is one of the very ablest industrial and technical executives of this generation, an opinion with which many industrial men would agree.

The people and corporations are good, but the results are not. They are not up to American par because the job is not being done the American way.

UNITED NATIONS RECOGNITION OF COMMUNIST CHINA—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRIDGES AND SENATOR KNOWLAND

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement that was issued jointly by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and myself relative to the question of the United Nations recognition of Communist China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is our firm belief that America wants peace with honor. Appeasement is surrender on the installment plan. We believe that our security and the cause of a free world of free men depend on vigorously resisting Soviet pressure in the United Nations on the question of seating the Communist regime in place of the Republic of China.

We handed Manchuria to Russia in the Yalta agreement and that launched the Red conquest in Asia. We abandoned the free peoples of Poland and Czechoslovakia when we acquiesced to rigged elections and that lower the iron curtain over eastern Europe.

What have these concessions gained us? Nothing. We have bought only more cold war tension and more terror. One by one, the countries of the world are falling under the Kremlin's dictatorship. Russia is preparing for war. The Soviet Union is spending more on armaments than all of the free world combined, including the United States.

If we concede on China, we will be asked to yield next on Indochina, Korea, India, Burma, Siam, the United States of Indonesia, and the Philippines. Do we wait until, one by one, all the non-Communist countries of Asia have gone under the hammer and sickle? Do we wait until we are completely isolated or, perhaps, we are asked to concede Hawaii or Alaska?

The new isolationists are those who betray this country's friends by sacrificing them to Soviet-sponsored international communism rather than give them our support. Eventually, if the process continues, we will be isolated, alone against a communized world.

The issue over seating Red China—which means expelling our wartime ally and longtime friend, Nationalist China, one of the United Nations' founding members—is a crucial test in total diplomacy. Secretary of State Dean Acheson has used that expression. Only the Soviet Union, however, has used total diplomacy. While we have wavered, the Kremlin has moved ruthlessly to grab what it wants.

Now Russia wants another vote in the Security Council. UN Secretary General Trygve Lie conveniently cooperates in a scheme to deliver it.

Lie says the Communists represent China's people. That is not true notwithstanding Soviet propaganda. The Communists do not represent China's people. China is the victim of a treacherous invasion, incited and directed from Moscow. Has Trygve Lie forgotten the quislings in his own Norway? Communist agents don't represent China any more than the Nazis represented Norway when they overran Mr. Lie's country.

The United States must not acquiesce in this move to seat Soviet China in the United Nations. To do so would be contrary to the principle of nonrecognition of conquests which Henry L. Stimson laid down when the Japanese conquered Manchuria in 1932. We stood by that principle when the quislings drove the government of which Trygve Lie was Foreign Minister out of Norway. We supported Mr. Lie's government when it had fled into exile and we helped put it back in power.

Do we quit now, drop total diplomacy and go back to Chamberlin appeasement diplomacy at a moment when the future peace of the United States is at stake? There is grave danger that the Soviet Union may destroy the United Nations by holding a gun at the heads of each free nation with a dictate "do it our way—or else."

Lie says the China issue is obstructing progress toward peace through the United Nations. This is camouflage. Russia is obstructing progress toward peace. There would be no issue if Russia accepted its obligations under the United Nations. But Russia refuses to abide by the UN Charter. Lie says, in effect, if Russia will not accept the rules of the UN, the rules must be changed. He adopts the same insiduous tactics as the Communists themselves and becomes at least their tool, if not their actual ally.

What Lie proposes is more than mere craven appeasement. It is surrender, abject capitulation. The only support Lie has a right to expect is from the Comintern—not from the United States or the other free nations. Russia wants to apply the police state to the UN. If we yielded to that we would be selling ourselves out and with no assurance, even at that price, that peace can be preserved.

On this issue, Russia has the United States backed to the wall. Any sign of weakness now would cost us more loss of prestige and further impair our leadership of the anti-Communist forces of the world.

This has been slyly calculated in Moscow. China is not an isolated issue. Her position in the United Nations is part of the whole world situation in which peace is so precariously balanced. It cannot be separated from the subjugation of eastern Europe to Soviet dictatorship. China's peril cannot be separated from the peril of other countries in Asia, Latin America, Europe, and the Near East from Russia's armies and Russia's international agents.

In his rebuke to Lie, Secretary Acheson has taken the realistic view that the impasse in the United Nations is the result of Soviet Union's unwarranted attempt to coerce the UN. This is good, as far as it goes.

But does it go far enough? Secretary Acheson repeatedly has said the United States will vote against seating Communist China. Will he now carry his convictions to a logical conclusion? Will he agree to help organize the free nations to resist Soviet blackmail? To use the veto, if necessary?

Russia has exercised the veto at least 40 times—including vetoes of applications for membership by Ireland, Austria, Finland, Italy, and other countries. Soviet China is another new applicant. Soviet China was created by Russia's imperialist aggression. It was created by conquest of the forces backed by the Kremlin. There is precedent for a veto of Soviet China's application. There also is urgent necessity for it.

We endorse the foreign-aid program for countries which stand with the United States for peace and freedom. It is only simple logic, however, that our wealth and our arms cannot be handed to powers which ultimately might use them against us. It is too dangerous. We are sure the American people agree that those countries which wither under the pressure of Soviet total diplomacy now are ultimate threats to the peace we are paying a very high price to preserve.

We, the undersigned, therefore declare this to be our policy:

1. We affirm Mr. Acheson's repudiation of the Lie pressure proposals for seating Soviet China in the United Nations.

2. In order to lend support to our Government and help strengthen its total diplomacy, we believe that we should consider carefully before giving further United States aid, economic or military, to any nation which betrays its democratic interests under pressure from the Soviet Union, its satellites or agents.

3. Unless Trygve Lie at once withdraws his proposals for seating Soviet China, we ask that the Government of the United States instruct its representatives to the United Nations to seek the selection of an impartial Secretary in place of the Soviet partisan incumbent. His efforts, if successful would open, through the UN, a side door for more Communist agents to enter this country. He has exceeded his authority. He has endangered both peace and the structure of the United Nations, causes he professes to advance.

4. Unless the Soviet Union ends its boycott of the United Nations and ceases its arbitrary and obstructionist tactics, we recommend that the United States use its veto power, if necessary, in the issue over China's representation. We deplore the necessity even to consider using the veto. However, the Soviet Union is attempting to subvert the UN into an instrument for its own imperialist ambitions. In the face of the Soviet's clear plan for conquest, there is no other alternative on this issue.

STYLES BRIDGES,
United States Senator (Republican of New Hampshire).
WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator (Republican of California).

VOTING PROCEDURE IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD, for the information of the Senate, a statement by the delegations of the four sponsoring governments on voting procedure in the Security Council, issued on June 7, 1945.

Mr. President, I desire particularly to call to the attention of the Members of the Senate the part of the statement indicated by the Roman numeral II, sections one and two, dealing with the question of whether action is subject to a veto. Subsection 1 reads:

In the opinion of the delegations of the sponsoring governments, the draft charter itself contains an indication of the application of the voting procedures to the various functions of the Council.

2. In this case, it will be unlikely that there will arise in the future any matters of great importance on which a decision will have to be made as to whether a procedural vote would apply. Should, however, such a matter arise, the decision regarding the preliminary question as to whether or not such a matter is procedural must be taken by a vote of seven members of the Security Council, including the concurring votes of the permanent members.

I submit, Mr. President, that this indicates that on the question of the seating of the Communist regime in China or the unseating of the Republic of China the veto of not only the Republic of China itself could apply against such action, but also the United States would be well within its rights to exercise a veto in that matter.

Mr. President, I merely wish to say in conclusion at this time, though I shall have more to say on the floor at a later date, that it seems to me the time is rapidly approaching, particularly in view of the indications that Mr. Trygve Lie is again making a trip to Europe in the interest of seating the Communist regime in the United Nations, and in view of the indication by the British Government today in the articles carried in the morning newspapers that they are now at work in trying to seat the Communist regime, that perhaps the thing the Senate and the House of Representatives should do with respect to the arms-implementation appropriation and the ECA appropriation, which are now before the Appropriations Committee, is to provide a 7 months' allocation of funds. The Congress of the United States will be back here in January of next year, and at that time we will have additional facts to go on as to whether the British Government and these other governments are going to seat the Communists in the United Nations. I shall be prepared to offer such an amendment in the Appropriations Committee so that we may have a review of the entire situation when we return as the Eighty-second Congress in January 1951.

I wish to thank the Senator from Washington for having yielded to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE DELEGATIONS OF THE FOUR SPONSORING GOVERNMENTS ON VOTING PROCEDURE IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL, JUNE 7, 1945

Specific questions covering the voting procedure in the Security Council have been submitted by a subcommittee of the conference committee on structure and procedures of the Security Council to the delegations of the four governments sponsoring the conference—the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the Republic of China. In dealing with these questions, the four delegations desire to make the following statement of their general attitude toward the whole question of unanimity of permanent members in decisions of the Security Council.

I

1. The Yalta voting formula recognizes that the Security Council in discharging its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and securty, will have two broad groups of functions. Under chapter VIII, the Council will have to make decisions which involve its taking direct measures in connection with settlement of disputes, adjustment of situations likely to lead to disputes, determination of threats to the peace, removal of threats to the peace, and suppression of breaches of the peace. It will also have to make decisions which do not involve the taking of such measures. The Yalta formula provides that the second of these two groups of decisions will be governed by a procedural vote—that is, the vote of any seven members. The first group of decisions will be governed by a qualified vote—that is, the vote of seven members, including the concurring votes of the five permanent members, subject to the proviso that in decisions under section A and a part of section C of chapter VIII parties to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

2. For example, under the Yalta formula a procedural vote will govern the decisions made under the entire section D of chapter VI. This means that the Council will, by a vote of any seven of its members, adopt or alter its rules of procedure; determine the method of selecting its president; organize itself in such a way as to be able to function continuously; select the times and places of its regular and special meetings; establish such bodies or agencies as it may deem necessary for the performance of its functions; invite a member of the organization not represented on the Council to participate in its discussions when that member's interests are specially affected; and invite any state when it is a party to a dispute being considered by the Council to participate in the discussion relating to that dispute.

3. Further, no individual member of the Council can alone prevent consideration and discussion by the Council of a dispute or situation brought to its attention under paragraph 2, section A, chapter VIII. Nor can parties to such dispute be prevented by these means from being heard by the Council. Likewise, the requirement for unanimity of the permanent members cannot prevent any member of the Council from reminding the members of the organization of their general obligations assumed under the charter as regards peaceful settlement of international disputes.

4. Beyond this point, decisions and actions by the Security Council may well have major political consequences and may even initiate a chain of events which might, in the end, require the Council under its responsibilities to invoke measures of enforcement under section B, chapter VIII. This chain of events begins when the Council decides to make an investigation, or determines that the time has come to call upon states to settle their differences, or makes recommendations to the parties. It is to such decisions and actions that unanimity of the permanent members applies, with the important proviso, referred to above, for abstention from voting by parties to a dispute.

5. To illustrate: In ordering an investigation, the Council has to consider whether the investigation—which may involve calling for reports, hearing witnesses, dispatching a commission of inquiry, or other means—might not further aggravate the situation. After investigation, the Council must determine whether the continuance of the situation or dispute would be likely to endanger international peace and security. If it so determines, the Council would be under obligation to take further steps. Similarly, the decision to make recommendations, even when all parties request it to do so, or to call upon parties to a dispute to fulfill their obligations under the Charter, might be the first step on a course of action from which the Security Council could withdraw only at the risk of failing to discharge its responsibilities.

6. In appraising the significance of the vote required to take such decisions or actions, it is useful to make comparison with the requirements of the League Covenant with reference to decisions of the League Council. Substantive decisions of the League of Nations Council could be taken only by the unanimous vote of all its members, whether permanent or not, with the exception of parties to a dispute under article XV of the League Covenant. Under article XI, under which most of the disputes brought before the League were dealt with and decisions to make investigations taken, the unanimity rule was invariably interpreted to include even the votes of the parties to a dispute.

7. The Yalta voting formula substitutes for the rule of complete unanimity of the League Council a system of qualified majority voting in the Security Council. Under this system non-permanent members of the Security Council individually would have no "veto." As regards the permanent members, there is no question under the Yalta formula of investing them with a new right, namely, the right to veto, a right which the permanent members of the League Council always had. The formula proposed for the taking of action in the Security Council by a majority of seven would make the operation of the Council less subject to obstruction than was the case under the League of Nations rule of complete unanimity.

8. It should also be remembered that under the Yalta formula the five major powers could not act by themselves, since even under the unanimity requirement any decisions of the Council would have to include the concurring votes of at least two of the non-permanent members. In other words, it would be possible for five non-permanent members as a group to exercise a veto. It is not to be assumed, however, that the permanent members, any more than the non-permanent member, would use their veto power willfully to obstruct the operation of the Council.

9. In view of the primary responsibilities of the permanent members, they could not be expected, in the present condition of the world, to assume the obligation to act in so serious a matter as the maintenance of international peace and security in consequence of a decision in which they had not concurred. Therefore, if a majority voting in the Security Council is to be made possible, the only practicable method is to provide, in respect of nonprocedural decisions, for unanimity of the permanent members plus the concurring votes of at least two of the non-permanent members.

10. For all these reasons, the four sponsoring Governments agreed on the Yalta formula and have presented it to this conference as essential if an international organization is to be created through which all peace-loving nations can effectively discharge their common responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security.

II

In the light of the considerations set forth in Part 1 of this statement, it is clear what the answers to the questions submitted by the subcommittee should be, with the exception of question 19. The answer to that question is as follows:

1. In the opinion of the delegations of the sponsoring governments, the draft charter itself contains an indication of the application of the voting procedures to the various functions of the Council.

2. In this case, it will be unlikely that there will arise in the future any matters of great importance on which a decision will have to be made as to whether a procedural vote would apply. Should, however, such a matter arise, the decision regarding the preliminary question as to whether or not such a matter is procedural must be taken by a vote of seven members of the Security Council, including the concurring votes of the permanent members.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON EXERCISE OF VETO IN SECURITY COUNCIL, MAY 22, 1945

(NOTE.—It is provided under ch. VI (C), par. 3, that in all questions under VIII (A) a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting. Therefore unless otherwise indicated the veto referred to in each question below is the veto of a permanent member who is not a party to a dispute.)

Under new paragraph 1 of chapter VIII (A), prepared by the sponsoring Governments:

"Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraphs 1–5 below, the Security Council should be empowered, if all the parties so request, to make recommendations to the parties to any dispute with a view to its settlement in accordance with the principles laid down in chapter II, paragraph 3."

(1) If the parties to a dispute request the Security Council to make recommendations with a view to its settlement, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to exercise its power to investigate the dispute for that purpose?

(2) If the Security Council has investigated a dispute under this paragraph, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to recommend to the parties certain terms, with a view to the settlement of the dispute?

Under present paragraph 1 of chapter VIII (A):

"1. The Security Council should be empowered to investigate any dispute, or any situation which may lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether its continuance is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security."

(3) If the attention of the Security Council is called to the existence of a dispute, or a situation which may give rise to a dispute, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to exercise its power to investigate the dispute or situation?

(4) If the Security Council has investigated the dispute, would the veto be applicable to a decision by the Security Council that the continuance of the dispute is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security?

Under present paragraph 3, chapter VIII (A):

"3. The parties to any dispute the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security should obligate themselves, first of all, to seek a solution by negotiation, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, or judicial settlement, or other peaceful means of their own choice. The Security Council should call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means."

(5) If the Security Council has decided that the continuance of a dispute is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to call upon the parties to settle their dispute by the means indicated in paragraph 3?

Under paragraph 4 of chapter VIII (A) as proposed to be amended by the sponsoring governments:

"4. If, nevertheless, parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in paragraph 3 above fail to settle it by the means indicated in the paragraph, they should obligate themselves to refer it to the Security Council. The Security Council should in each case decide whether or not it deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and, accordingly, whether the Security Council should deal with the dispute, and, if so, whether it should take action under paragraph 5 it shall decide whether to take action under paragraph 5 or whether itself to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate."

(6) If a dispute is referred to the Security Council by the parties under this paragraph, would the veto be applicable to a decision by the Security Council under the second sentence of this paragraph that it deems the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security?

(7) If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council under the second sentence of this paragraph to take action under paragraph 5?

(8) If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the particular dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council under the second sentence of this paragraph to recommend to the parties such terms of settlement as it considers appropriate?

Under paragraph 5 of chapter VIII (A):

"5. The Security Council should be empowered, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in paragraph 3 above, to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment."

(9) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council, at any stage of a dispute, to recommend to the parties appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment?

Under paragraph 6 of chapter VII (A):

"6. Justiciable disputes should normally be referred to the International Court of Justice. The Security Council should be empowered to refer to the Court, for advice, legal questions connected with other disputes."

(10) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council under the first sentence of this paragraph that a dispute is of a justiciable character?

(11) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council under the first sentence of this paragraph to refer a justiciable dispute to the International Court of Justice?

(12) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to deal with a justiciable dispute by some other means of adjustment?

(13) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council to refer to the International Court of Justice a legal question connected with a nonjusticiable dispute?

Under paragraph 1 of chapter VIII (B) as proposed by the four sponsoring governments:

"Section B: Determination of threats to the peace or acts of aggression and action with respect thereto. 1. Should the Security Council deem that a failure to settle a dispute in accordance with procedures indicated in paragraph 3 of section A, or in accordance with its recommendations made under paragraphs 4 or 5 of section A, constitutes a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security, it should take any measures necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Organization."

(14) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council that it deemed that a failure would constitute a threat to the maintenance of peace and security?

(15) Would the veto be applicable of the Security Council that it should take any measures necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security?

Under new paragraph 2 of chapter VIII (B) as proposed by the four sponsoring governments:

"2. In general, the Security Council should determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression, and should make recommendations or decide upon the measures set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 of this section to be taken to maintain or restore peace and security."

(16) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council that it determined the existence of any threat to the peace, etc.?

Under new paragraph proposed by the four sponsoring governments to be inserted between paragraphs 2 and 3 of chapter VIII (B):

"Before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures for the maintenance or restoration of peace and security in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2, the Security Council may call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it may deem necessary or desirable in order to prevent an aggravation of the situation. Such provisional measures should be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or positions of the parties concerned. Failure to comply with such provisional measures should be duly taken account of by the Security Council."

(17) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council that it may call upon the parties, etc.?

(18) Would the veto be applicable to a decision of the Security Council that failure to comply should be duly taken account of, etc.?

Under the second paragraph of chapter VI (C):

"Section C. Voting. 1. Each member of the Security Council should have one vote.

"2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters should be made by an affirmative vote of seven members."

(19) In case a decision has to be taken as to whether a certain point is a procedural matter is that preliminary question to be considered in itself as a procedural matter or is the veto applicable to such preliminary question?

Under the third paragraph of chapter VI (C):

"3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters should be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under chapter VIII, section A, and under the second sentence of paragraph 1 of chapter VIII, section C, a party to a dispute should abstain from voting."

(20) If a motion is moved in the Security Council on a matter, other than a matter of procedure, under the general words in paragraph 3, would the abstention from voting of any one of the permanent members of the Security Council have the same effect as a negative vote by that member in preventing the Security Council from reaching a decision on the matter?

(21) If one of the permanent members of the Security Council is a party to a dispute, and in conformity with the proviso to paragraph 3 has abstained from voting on a motion on a matter, other than a matter of procedure, would its mere abstention prevent the Security Council from reaching a decision on the matter?

(22) In case a decision has to be made under chapter VIII, section A, or under the second sentence of chapter VIII, section C, paragraph 1, will a permanent member of the Council be entitled to participate in a vote on the question whether that permanent member is itself a party to the dispute or not?

(23) In view of questions raised by several delegations, the Greek delegation would like to be informed whether, under chapter 10, paragraph 1, of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals as amended by the four governments, the recommendation of the Security Council to the Assembly in respect of the election of the Secretary-General and his deputies is subject to veto.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington wishes to associate himself with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and with other Senators in recommending that the Selective Service Act of 1948 be extended for a period of 3 years. This law was approved on June 24, 1948. It was to be effective for a period of 2 years, unless sooner terminated by the Congress. If the Congress does not direct otherwise, therefore, the statute will expire on Saturday, the 24th of this month. That date is almost here.

The committee report contains a rather complete outline of the main features of the 1948 act, so I shall not take the time to review them all in detail. There are two or three points, however, which I will discuss briefly, as I think we should have them clearly in mind, and the Nation ought to be conscious of them.

The law calls for the registration of all male persons 18 through 25 years of age. Those less than 18 are required to register as they reach that age. All told, over 10,000,000 men have so far been registered.

There actually have been no inductions from among this group for nearly 18 months. However, the law authorizes the induction of certain nonveteran, unmarried persons between the ages 19 through 25, provided the manpower strengths specifically authorized by the Congress cannot be met by enlistments. It is important to note, at this point, that this induction authority is in reality a very limited one, in that the law clearly specifies definite manpower ceilings. As a practical matter, there is a further congressional control, because manpower totals are in reality determined by the numbers actually appropriated for each year by the Congress.

Any inductions which might be made are for a period of 21 months. There are very liberal deferments and exemptions for persons who have dependents, who have had previous military service, who are attending high school or college, or who belong to the Reserves. These deferments and exemptions are, of course, far more liberal than could be supported in even a fairly limited mobilization. That is as it should be, because the present act was never intended as a mobilization proposition. It is—and we should always bear that in mind—a peacetime measure, designed and planned to give us a force big enough to deter aggression, and thus act as a preventive to a full-scale emergency; or, if one should come, to enable us to meet the initial shock with a force respectable enough to give us the time necessary to marshal our resources.

The present law also gives reemployment rights but no GI benefits, provides for the compulsory filling of orders for military supplies, and contains a number of features of lesser importance, all of which were considered in detail by the Senate 2 years ago, at which time the act was passed by an impressive majority.

As Senators will recall, early in 1948 the Senate Committee on Armed Services held an exhaustive series of hearings on the question of military manpower. During the long weeks of those hearings, our most respected and competent officials, both civilian and military, pointed out, with an impressive degree of unanimity, that in their best judgment the number of men on active duty in the Military Establishment was at a dangerously low level. Our forces were simply not big enough to meet the immediate demands of our national security, and to maintain our national position. Even today, none of us can forget how badly the international situation had deteriorated during 1946 and 1947; how dismally the hopes of mankind for a free and peaceful world were then being frustrated by the caprice, and the willfulness, and the increasingly ruthless arrogance and stubbornness and prevailing lack of a desire to cooperate, of the Soviet leaders.

But even so, the witnesses who appeared at those hearings back in 1948 did not contend that a war was immediately or about to break out, nor that enemy bombers were virtually overhead, nor that the Nation should be converted then, or tomorrow, or now, into an armed camp. What they said was simply that the number of men actually in our Armed Forces at that time was too small to meet our national commitments, too small to prevent the numerous critical situations which we were then facing from developing into major and serious and dangerous emergencies.

Furthermore, the existing military forces not only were too small at the moment, but they were decreasing at an alarming rate. In spite of what was, at that time, the largest and most successful recruiting program ever conducted by any nation in peacetime. We were simply unable to fill our ranks.

The answer to this increasingly dangerous situation was, first, to authorize an increase in our Armed Forces, and, second, to provide a limited form of selective service which would insure that the necessary strengths would not only be reached, but could, and would be, maintained.

It was against this background that the Selective Service Act of 1948 was recommended to the Senate by the Committee on Armed Services, and was overwhelmingly approved. We appear today to ask that the act be extended. I shall attempt to give the Senate our reasons for recommending this admittedly difficult course of national action.

The effects of the 1948 act are pretty well recognized by all who are familiar with the Military Establishment. Two years ago our combat units were not only inadequate in numbers and types, but even those which we did have were so depleted in strength as to be incapable of performing their missions. There was also a grave shortage in the noncombat, or service, troops which are so necessary to carry out the vital functions of logistic support. The Army, where the situation was by far the worst, was at the alarmingly low strength of 542,000, and was still losing men at the rate of several thousand each month.

In approving the 1948 act, the Congress directed that no inductions should be made for a period of 90 days, and that in the meantime the President should further intensify the enlistment program, in an effort to obviate the need for making any inductions at all. As a matter of fact, there was a full agreement—which agreement, I might add, has been fully and honestly kept—that the President would not use his induction authority unless it was absolutely necessary to do so, and would cease using it the moment the Armed Forces could maintain the strength which had been authorized, and appropriated for, by the Congress.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Uath?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly; I am pleased to yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the Senator inform us how many men were actually inducted under that measure?

Mr. CAIN. There have been inducted under the Selective Service Act of 1948, 30,170 men, almost all of whom have, since their induction, been retired, at their own request, to private life. I think it is a fact that of the 30,170 men who have been inducted since 1948, as a result of the passage of the Selective Service Act of 1948, only 200 are yet serving in the Army of the United States; and all of those 200 are serving at their own request.

Mr. WATKINS. Then I understand that it was possible to obtain the necessary numbers of men without having to draft more than approximately 30,000 men. Is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. For approximately 18 months we have had the Selective Service Act on our statute books, while inducting no men into the Armed Forces.

Mr. WATKINS. What is the present situation with respect to the Armed Forces? Do we now have in the Armed Forces enough men to take care of current needs?

Mr. CAIN. The Army is presently about 25,000 men under strength, in the sense that the Army has appropriations sufficient, as I understand, to pay the wages and salaries of 25,000 more men than are presently in the Army.

Mr. WATKINS. Would it be asking for classified material if I were to ask the Senator to state the total number of men now in the Armed Forces?

Mr. CAIN. By no means. Those figures are to be found on page 7 of the committee report. The Army has a present strength of 593,000 men; the Navy, a present strength of 427,000 men; and the Air Force, a present strength of 350,000 men.

Mr. WATKINS. Did I correctly understand the Senator from Washington to say that we now are short about 30,000?

Mr. CAIN. My best understanding is that we are now short approximately 25,000 men. We have financial authority to pay for approximately 25,000 more men than thus far have been taken into the Army.

Mr. President, immediately upon the passage of the Selective Service Act of 1948, the volume of volunteer enlistments in all services increased far beyond even the most optimistic estimates. It is to this portion of my statement that I would call the attention of the Senator from Utah, because I think this portion of it reflects on the very serious concern the Senator has over the need or the lack of need for continuing our Selective Service Act.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Let me say to the Senator from Washington that I do not wish to be understood in any way as opposing the extension of the Selective Service Act itself. However, I have some very serious questions with respect to placing in the hands of the Chief Executive the power to declare the act operative and the power to call men to the colors again without any act of Congress. That is the question I have in mind. I think it was raised by the House of Representatives, which disagreed with the version of the bill which has been reported to us by the Senate committee.

I hope the Senator will discuss that phase of the question before he resumes his seat.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is quite correct in stating that the positions assumed by the House of Representatives, on the one hand, and by the Senate committee, on the other hand, are completely dissimilar in respect to the power to be granted to the President to invoke the draft.

I shall attempt as best I can to give the Senate Armed Services Committee's view of the matter, and I shall welcome any questions the Senator from Utah may care to ask.

Mr. President, in the first months immediately following the passage of the 1948 Selective Service Act, more than a quarter of a million men over and above the total of those who had enlisted in a comparable period prior to the act, voluntarily enrolled in the armed services. Not only the active-duty forces, but the National Guard and the Organized Reserve, as well, benefited by the unprecedented program.

Inductions through selective service began in November of 1948, and continued for 3 months, at which time further calls were canceled. Slightly over 30,000 men were inducted into the Army; none into the Navy, and none into the Air Force. The Army inductions were necessary, because, even in spite of the heavy flow of enlistments, it was not possible to accomplish the initial build-up in strength at the rate demanded by the national interest and the Nation's security and as authorized by appropriations made available by the House of Representatives and by the Senate. All told, by January of 1949, the active-duty strength of the Army had been increased from 542,000 men to 711,000 men, although only about 30,000 of that total increase had been inducted. It was therefore possible to release every inductee who wished to leave the service and return to civilian life.

Mr. President, I should merely like to restate that it is my present understanding that only about 200 of the 30,000 men who were inducted are still in the Army, and they are there because it was their wish so to remain.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. At what stage were they released? Were they released immediately after induction, or were they released at the end of the term of service for which they were inducted?

Mr. CAIN. The inductions are normally for a 21-month period. However, in answer to the Senator's question, let me say that my understanding is that all of the approximately 30,000, less the 200, were released from the service at the end of a year's service, or 12 months of active duty.

Mr. WATKINS. They were not released immediately after induction?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Utah is quite correct in that instance.

Mr. President, registrations and classifications have continued in compliance with the law. There have been some 10,000,000 registrations, in all. These registrations will become invalid, however, if the law expires on Saturday night of this week or if the law is even permitted to lapse for a short period of time.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. CAIN. Gladly; I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Is it not true that we now have 10,000,000 men registered?

Mr. CAIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. WATKINS. And is it not true that 9,000,000 of them are classified? Have not the draft boards and other authorities in the Selective Service System been able to classify about 9,000,000 of the 10,000,000 who have been registered?

Mr. CAIN. I have been told that substantially all of the men who have registered have already been classified. If the number registered is 10,000,000, then approximately 10,000,000 have thus far been classified.

Mr. WATKINS. The question I have in mind is this: In the event the act is not extended, would we have the full benefit of those registrations and classifications, to pick up immediately, if we should enact another draft act?

Mr. CAIN. Upon expiration of the act on Saturday night of this week, every one of the 10,000,000 registrations would automatically become invalid.

Mr. WATKINS. They might become invalid, but, as a matter of fact, the information we have, including the names of the registrants, their addresses and the classifications into which they have been placed by action of the boards would all be available, would it not?

Mr. CAIN. I think that is entirely correct. Unless we should assume that such records as contain the classifications and registrations are to be destroyed, we should quite properly assume the information would be available in the future.

Mr. WATKINS. Would there be any idea that those cards and records would then be destroyed?

Mr. CAIN. I think there would be no such feeling.

Mr. WATKINS. So that whatever we have done in that respect to date would still be available under any new draft act or registration in the future, would it not?

Mr. CAIN. Whatever we have done would be available in the future, in the form of information. Men could not be called to the services unless the Congress passed the necessary legislation.

Mr. WATKINS. I understand that, but another selective-service system could refer to all these registrations and classifications, adopt them, and start from that point on, could it not?

Mr. CAIN. I think the Senator is entirely correct, but the classifications would be useless in a great number of instances.

Mr. President, in effect, the induction feature of the 1948 act is today on a sort of stand-by basis, but it can be again placed in operation, if the President should find that it is impossible to continue to maintain present strengths through voluntary enlistments. I am exceedingly pleased to have an opportunity to say that the armed services have used the Selective Service Act in complete good faith. They stopped making calls for induction the moment they were able to maintain themselves without those inductions. Events have borne out the wisdom of our having enacted this legislation 2 years ago, and I believe that they warrant its continuation. The spectacular success of the Berlin airlift—which, incidentally, began just 2 days after the law took effect in 1948—helped avert a show-down when this Nation was not ready for a show-down in Germany or anywhere else, and gave America time to build up the depleted ground force which we had been attempting to maintain in that area of Germany. Last Whitsunday, in Berlin, that force had grown to where it had become a power to be reckoned with, and, backed by our Nation's determination to stand its ground, helped to prevent the development of an emergency, the gravity of which is literally overwhelming even to contemplate. And had we been too weak in that area, had we not built up a force reasonably big enough to prevent that Communist emergency from ever developing, what a very futile and tragic gesture it would then have been for the Congress of the United States to meet and then solemnly declare that an emergency existed. What more convincing proof do we need that our present military posture is an effective one, which should not be weakened?

For the next few moments, Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to several important and basic changes which the Senate Committee on Armed Services recommends be made in the House version of the pending bill.

In the first place, we recommend that the present law be extended for three additional years, instead of only two. We feel that any policy which is as important to our national security as selective service should be relatively stable, without at the same time becoming a permanent peacetime fixture. The best-informed and most responsible leaders of the country today all urge the full 3-year extension. I think it ought more properly to be said that a great many well-informed and completely responsible leaders of America recommend this course of action. We feel that there is nothing in the world situation as it now exists which warrants disregarding their recommendation, and extending the law for only 2 years. Also, in our preoccupation with the international picture, we should not become unmindful of the thousands of volunteer workers who make up the local boards and the other vital parts of the selective-service machine, whose know-how, experience, prestige and morale are invaluable. The Selective Service System today has approximately 37,000 of these volunteer workers who give their services to the country without compensation. The System does its job with only 2,100 paid full-time positions. It gives us, in return for the ten and a half million dollars it costs, more real security per dollar than any other expenditure authorized by the Congress. It is not fair to this large army of volunteer workers to keep them on a sort of hand-to-mouth basis, as they are at the present time, unable to decide whether the Nation considers their efforts worth while or not.

In the second place, interested Members will note that the House bill adds to the existing law two new sections, Nos. 21 and 22, in the line-typed portion of the language.

The first of these proposed new sections freezes the induction authority of the President, and requires a declaration of an emergency by the Congress before inductions can be resumed.

We opposed that, Mr. President, as a committee, and, I think, unanimously, because we feel that it strikes at the fundamental purpose of the law. The law seeks to guarantee to the Nation an armed strength which is large enough to deter the aggressor's threat. A strength large enough to cope with situations as they are developed. We seek to cut off the Whitsunday riot in Berlin, rather than to assemble in this Senate Chamber after the situation has exploded in our faces, and ruefully go through the business of "declaring a national emergency." In the last analysis, this portion of the House version actually makes it necessary to declare an emergency in order to attempt to prevent or to avoid one.

The Armed Services Committee of the Senate has consistently avoided any war-scare tactics in dealing with this bill. We have never attempted, nor do we now attempt, to justify this measure on the thesis that we must mobilize, or that this very Capitol Building may be bombed at any moment, or that some other vague and frightening national catastrophe is actually upon us. We are simply trying to meet a very simple, clear-cut, realistic though regrettable situation. It is merely this:

Suppose for a moment that, in spite of all the recruiting effort possible, the present 25,000 shortage in the Army falls off another 25,000 by November 1; or that the Navy is not able to fill the 22,000 vacancies which presently exist in its ranks; or that the Air Force cannot get the 7,000 men it needs right today.

Let me make it perfectly plain, we are not crying "wolf." We feel confident, as confident, that is, as is consistent with not gambling with our security, that these figures can be met by voluntary enlistments. But we base our estimates on the clear premise that the present law is extended in its present form, and not watered down to what is virtually a sort of automatic census machine. The emergency provision in the House bill renders the act all but useless in meeting the problem it was designed to meet. For, if on November 1 the President finds that the armed forces are dangerously below the strengths actually appropriated for by the Congress, how could he suddenly ask the Congress to declare an emergency? What we are seeking to meet is not an emergency. It is simply a situation. A situation in which the President declares that it is necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strengths authorized, and appropriated for, by the Congress.

Furthermore, we disagree with the provisions of the House bill which cancel, except and until Congress declares an emergency, all short-term enlistments and prevents voluntary tours of duty by enlisted reservists. Those are important inducements, aimed to attract volunteers, and thereby cut down the need for inductions. We feel that it is completely illogical to suspend them; further, we feel that suspending them tends strongly to further complicate the entire situation. For how could the Congress declare an emergency existed which required inductions if, all during the period covered, these important volunteering procedures had been outlawed?

The House version contains another provision—a proposed section 22 to be added to the present law—which permits the President to order the National Guard and the other Reserve units into the Federal service in the event this section 21 emergency is declared.

This goes far beyond any authority which the committee ever contemplated should be included in a peacetime selective service bill. The calling of the civilian components into the Federal service is a prelude to war. It is one of the initial steps taken in a full mobilization. To call them from time to time in peacetime simply to augment the active-duty strength of the Regular forces is a radical departure from our traditional use of these non-Regular components. And it completely changes the concept of the 1948 act, which provides extensive deferments for veterans and married men.

The Reserve components contain thousands upon thousands of World War II veterans and large numbers of married men. To again call this group to the colors in peacetime simply because they are in the Reserve components would be a major breach of faith.

We, therefore, feel that this proposed section 22, which appears in the line-typed portion of the bill, is a wholly fallacious proposal. It is in reality a mobilization measure. The 1948 act was in no sense a mobilization measure, and it should not be converted into one. It was intended, as I have said again and again, as a measure which would give us a military force, actually in being, large enough, and well enough supported, give us a military posture which merits the respect of other nations and which would prevent the development of tensions into emergencies which might bring on war.

Finally, we recommend that the title of the bill be amended so as to show exactly what the bill does, and what the Senate intends that it should do—extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 for a period of 3 years, and in a form which will permit the President of the United States to use the act if it becomes necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in order to maintain the strength authorized by the Congress.

In conclusion, we recommend that the present law be extended, and for a period of 3 years. We recommend against the involved and cumbersome trigger provision which is contained in the House bill, and against the broad authority to order out the Reserves, which the House contemplates. For the last time, let me urge that we be consistent in our action. Our basic objective in passing the 1948 act was to build and maintain a larger, but still, according to present-day standards, relatively meager, peacetime military force. By so doing we hoped to further our other efforts toward world peace by preventing any one of the many critical situations and tensions from deteriorating into a war. But if such a war should come, we would have a force large enough to meet the initial impact, and we would have in actual operation a trained selective service system which would save us 4 months of vital mobilization time. In 1948 we begged that the Nation not gamble with its national security. We renew that plea today. And, above all, let us not lose our sense of direction, and set up some wholly unworkable machinery whereby we force ourselves to declare an emergency before we can move to prevent one. What we must do is to prevent Communist riots in Berlin, as we did. We must not ignore them. We must not allow them to grow until they explode into an emergency, concerning which the Congress would meet in solemn session, and declare—hours, weeks, or months after the damage had been done—that an emergency was upon us.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. In the Senator's view, would it be necessary for the President of the United States to declare an emergency to put into operation the draft act if it should be extended?

Mr. CAIN. No; it would be only necessary for him to declare that he could not get the necessary number of men.

Mr. WATKINS. My memory does not serve me very well with respect to the provisions of the present act. Does the act require the President to give good reasons for declaring an emergency before he calls it into operation again?

Mr. CAIN. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, in an effort to answer his question, to read section 20 of the present law——

Mr. WATKINS. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. CAIN. It reads as follows:

> This title shall become effective immediately; except that unless the President, or the Congress by concurrent resolution, declares a national emergency after the date of enactment of this act——

Mr. WATKINS. Is that the 1948 act?

Mr. CAIN. Yes. I read further:

> no person shall be inducted or ordered into active service without his consent under this title within 90 days after the date of its enactment.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, it seems to me the first part of the section answers the question. The President himself has to declare an emergency to exist; otherwise he cannot invoke the provisions of the act.

Mr. CAIN. The act under which we presently carry out the Selective Service System says that within the first 90 days of the enactment of the law in 1948 no person could be inducted into the services unless the President declared a national emergency. After the expiration of 90 days it was no longer necessary for the President to so declare.

Mr. WATKINS. Does not the Senator think that the provision with respect to the President's declaring an emergency before he could take further action was a good provision at the time it was adopted?

Mr. CAIN. In my opinion, there was a very good reason for the adoption of that provision.

Mr. WATKINS. Why should it be for only 90 days? Why should it not be necessary for the President to so declare after 90 days? Was there anything in the situation at that time which made it necessary for the Congress or the President to declare an emergency?

Mr. CAIN. For a good many months prior to the passage of the Selective Service Act of 1948 the armed services themselves had done an extremely good job, in the opinion of many of us, at least, through a recruiting program, which even so, was only reasonably successful. It was the desire of Congress to permit and to encourage the armed services to do an even better job. The adoption of section 20, therefore, handed to the armed services an additional 90 days during which they could attempt to get volunteers to enter the armed services. Despite the fine efforts of everyone concerned in the Nation's recruiting program, it turned out that the armed services were unable to secure the number of men which they were authorized to have by virtue of the appropriations made available to the services by the Congress.

Mr. WATKINS. During those 90 days they were able to get actually only 30,000 men, or a few more than that.

Mr. CAIN. Some 30,000 were inducted in some 16 months after the passage of the act. All the other several hundred thousand men were secured through voluntary sources.

Mr. WATKINS. It seems to me that the Senator is missing the point of the question. If it was a good provision that during the 90-day period it was necessary for the President or Congress to declare an emergency before the act could be invoked, why would it not be a good provision today? What was there in the situation then which required the President or Congress to declare an emergency which is not present in the situation today?

Mr. CAIN. I think there was involved in that situation the remaining hope that on a purely voluntary basis the Armed Services would be able to secure their manpower needs, as those needs had a ceiling placed upon them by the provisions set up in the Selective Service Act of 1948. It has turned out to the satisfaction of a good number of us who are charged with studying the question that without the presence of a selective service act, and because of our experience in the past—and this is one Senator's considered guess—it would be impossible or at least unlikely that the authorized strength of the armed services could be secured from those who volunteered.

Mr. WATKINS. I am not raising any question as to the necessity of having a selective service act. I am raising the question, as I have already pointed out, with respect to the power being placed in the hands of the President to declare the act operative and to begin inducting men into the services without further action by Congress. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that with the adoption of the Atlantic Pact we changed materially the situation of the United States with respect to the territory which we must or may be called upon to defend. As the Senator will recall, in the pact it is provided that an attack upon any one of the signatory parties to the pact is the same as an attack on the United States. It has been argued—and I think with a great deal of merit and force—that an attack on any one of those countries would bring us automatically into the war, even without the action of Congress. If that should happen, and the President had the additional power to bring into effect the draft act and to undertake to induct the boys of this land into the armed services, it would place in the hands of one man both the power to declare a state of war and to bring the men into the armed services without further action by the Congress. Our situation has radically changed between the time Congress passed this act and the present. I realize the act has been in effect since the ratification of the Atlantic Pact. However, this is the first time I have had occasion to raise questions with respect to the power to be placed in the hands of the Chief Executive of the United States.

If the situation today is as dangerous as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has said it is, namely, that anything could happen at any time, and it is necessary to have this power, then I think it is necessary for the Congress, which represents the people, to stay in session to meet that kind of contingency, rather than leave it to the Chief Executive to determine when we are to be at war, who is going to fight the war, and bring the young men of America into the armed services without further action by the representatives of the people.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington believes he can safely speak for the Senate Committee on Armed Services in welcoming such questions as have presently been raised by the Senator from Utah. If I understand the chief concern of the Senator from Utah, I think I should say three things. First, the Selective Service Act as it is presently on the books, and as it is intended to be extended, provides limits, or ceilings, beyond which the President of the United States is not authorized to induct men into the armed services. The Senate committee states, at page 6 of the committee report:

The following active duty strength ceilings (excluding 1-year enlistees) are imposed on the armed forces:

Army	837,000
Navy (including Marine Corps)	666,882
Air Force	502,000
Total	2,005,882

Whatever happens, without additional authorization from the Congress, the President of the United States would not be permitted to go beyond these limits to induct American young men into the services. That is the first thing I wished to point out.

Mr. WATKINS. How many hundred thousand is that figure above the present armed strength of this country, or above the ceiling which is already placed on that strength by the act?

Mr. CAIN. The figures which I have given to the Senator would be the ceilings beyond which the strength of the armed services could not go, and beyond which the President of the United States could not invoke his authority to induct American men into the services. As I indicated a few minutes ago, the figures differ substantially from the actual present strength of the armed services. I should like to restate the comparative figures for the purpose of the RECORD.

Mr. WATKINS. May I ask whether the figures are higher than the present figures? Are they much higher?

Mr. CAIN. They are considerably higher, sir. The present strength of the Army is 593,000, as opposed to a ceiling strength included in the Selective Service Act of 837,000.

The present strength of the Navy is 427,000, as opposed to an authorized ceiling strength of more than 200,000 in addition to that, or 666,882. The present strength of the Air Force is 350,000, as contrasted to a ceiling limit of 502,000. Now let us keep the record straight in this particular instance.

The second thing the Senator from Washington would like to offer for consideration by the Senator from Utah is that it is not possible, in a practical way, for the President of the United States to induct American men into the Armed Forces if the Congress of the United States has not appropriated money for their maintenance and care. It has been my own personal contention for a long time that anyone who is seriously concerned with the question of the size of our security force should first concern himself with what is done and what will or will not be done by the committees on appropriations of the Congress, rather than concern himself with a selective service system, presently effective or to be in effect in the future.

I think it should be stated that the Congress determines the strength of the armed services, first, through appropriating dollars; and, second, a selective service system serves only the purpose of providing the manpower sufficient to accommodate the dollars which have been appropriated by the appropriate committees and the Congress for the securing of x number of men in the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I have been summoned to a committee meeting, and must leave. I thank the Senator for his courtesy in yielding to me to answer my questions. I have to leave, and I am sorry.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator from Utah permit me to say that the Senate Armed Services Committee is most desirous of having the Senator from Utah understand the reasons for our recommending the pending measure, because we are hopeful of having his support? As he leaves for his committee meeting I wish he would take with him this thought, that the Selective Service Act we are discussing limits the authority of the President of the United States by establishing ceilings for the several services; and, secondly, the Congress of the United States can limit the authority of the President of the United States any day in the week it sees fit so to do by reducing what otherwise might be a larger appropriation. In part it is for those two basic reasons that we think it a perfectly reasonable and desirable thing to provide the President of the United States with authority to induct men into the armed services within the limits of the ceilings prescribed by the Congress, and within the limits of the dollars made available for such purposes to the President of the United States and his Armed Forces by the Congress of the United States. I think that is the substance of our logic on this question.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, a few minutes ago the Senator from Utah asked whether or not it was not true that if the law is terminated on Saturday of this week, June 24, the records, consisting of registrations and classifications, would not continue to be available for the future. The response of the Senator from Washington was that in one sense those records would be continuingly available, but I want the RECORD to show that the records of classifications automatically and constantly change. There is no permanent status for any man who registers under the Selective Service Act to maintain. He marries, he may become disabled, his classification within a period of 2 or 3 years is almost certain to change.

I would point out, for the interest of others, that about a million 19-year-olds move into the selective service registration and classification pool each year, and about the same number move out within the same period of time. Unless the classification records are kept, in my opinion, on a current and constantly revised basis, within a relatively short time they would, in a practical way, no longer be worth the paper they were written on.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield readily to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I notice that the Senate substitute extends the act for 3 years.

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. The House provision, I believe, is for a 2-year extension from the anniversary of the date when the bill became a law.

Mr. CAIN. I think 2 years from the date of its intended expiration, which is June 24.

Mr. WHERRY. That would be the anniversary date of the bill. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CAIN. I think the Senator from Nebraska is substantially correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Why was the extension made 3 years by the Senate committee, and only 2 years by the House?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington cannot answer the question concerning why the House provided for only a 2-year extension. It was the consensus of opinion within the Senate Armed Services Committee, on the testimony offered to that committee by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Bradley; by the Army Chief of Staff, General Collins; by the Director of Selective Service, General Hershey; and by the Secretary of our National Defense Establishment, Mr. Johnson, that it would be wise to extend the Draft Act for a period of 3 years because of the uncertainty of the day in which we live, and because there was no cogent reason for expecting that within a 3-year period all our national concerns and problems would be resolved.

Personally, as an individual member of the committee, I thought it wise to vote for an extension of 3 years. I thought it would be a favor, in a way, to the young men of America, to let them know that for a period of 3 years at least there would be a continuing selective-service law. I was in favor of the 3-year period in the hope that it might stimulate more volunteering on the part of American young men, making it less and less likely for the Nation to be required to invoke the law.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Would not the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Washington be met by extending the law for 2 years?

Mr. CAIN. It could be.

Mr. WHERRY. From the hearings I cannot see any justification for a 3-year extension. I appreciate the fact that we are living in uncertain times, and we have been, and were when the act was passed in the first place. Whether the times are more uncertain now than they have been is a matter of opinion. The President has said, apparently, that there is no emergency in sight, and that the people should not be afraid.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, has a different opinion. There seems to be a total state of confusion as to the need. Aside from all that, I cannot see any justification, on the basis of the record, for extension of the act for 3 years instead of for 2 years at the outside.

Mr. CAIN. On page 8 of the committee report I find this reference to the question just raised by the Senator from Nebraska, and I would call it to his attention for his consideration:

Subsection 17 (b) of this original Senate version provided for a 5-year expiration date. The basis of this committee provision was a feeling that policies which affect the national security so profoundly as selective service should be relatively stable, without at the same time becoming permanent fixtures. A 5-year authority seemed to provide a reasonable degree of continuity, especially in the light of events as they existed early in 1948, at which time the committee felt that the available evidence did not warrant a presumption that the then-existing tensions would be dissipated with any degree of rapidity. This 5-year provision of the Senate committee bill was changed by a Senate floor amendment to 2 years.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, and the arguments the Senator made respecting a 5-year expiration date could be made for a 3-year or 2-year expiration date.

Mr. CAIN. That is so.

Mr. WHERRY. The point I make is that we will have a new Congress every 2 years. Therefore, it seems to me the logical period of time to extend the act is for 2 years, rather than 3 or 5 years. Then each succeeding Congress could do as it pleased about extending the act. I wondered whether I had missed something in the RECORD, or whether I had failed to note some other justification for the 5-year period. I appreciate that the argument made for the 5-year period is based on the uncertainty of world conditions.

Mr. CAIN. In all frankness I should say to the Senator from Nebraska that the time limit of the bill has not been a major concern of the Senator from Washington. I do not in fact recall that I was present at the meeting when a thorough discussion of this question was had. My chief concern was with a reasonable extension of the Selective Service Act, and when I was advised that other members of the committee were recommending a 3-year extension, it seemed, all factors considered, to be a perfectly reasonable recommendation to me, and I gave my own vote to it.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of the fact that the countries signatory to the North Atlantic Pact have now had 1 year of military assistance and have been developed along the line suggested by the administration, is there as much need now for an extension of the draft as there was a year ago when the North Atlantic Treaty countries were just getting started, and when we were told that the North Atlantic Pact was being entered into so that the manpower could be produced on the other side and would not have to be produced here in the event of hostilities? Has the picture changed? Is it better or worse? What is the situation? What was the testimony in that regard?

Mr. CAIN. I do not think the Senator from Washington is the best qualified witness to respond to the question of the Senator from Nebraska as it relates to affairs on the other side of the ocean. I say that my own view is that there is a present and a well-established need in this country for the continuation of the Selective Service Act for the years which lie immediately ahead. Before we had our Selective Service Act—and this was only several short years ago—a good many of us were seriously concerned over how rapidly the services were losing personnel. We have increased the force of our military service in large part, it seems to me, because of the mere existence of a selective-service system which encouraged young men to volunteer for service who otherwise might not have been disposed to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has probably answered this inquiry, but how long has it been since men were inducted under the act?

Mr. CAIN. About 18 months ago, and of the 30,000 who were inducted prior to 18 months ago, all, with the exception of 200 who wished to remain in the service, have been released and returned to civilian life.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the purpose of the act is that in case any emergency should arise we would have the machinery ready to operate. If I understand the situation correctly, volunteering will continue probably on the same basis or even at a greater rate than in the past, and the chances are that others will never have to be called.

Mr. CAIN. A good many of us feel that if the act is extended, as is proposed, it will continue to be an inducement and incentive to young men to volunteer, so as to get their period of service to their country done and over with, who otherwise, in the absence of such a law, might not feel constrained to volunteer.

Mr. LUCAS. I concur wholeheartedly in what the Senator has said respecting the situation throughout the Nation. Yet I definitely feel that if we should—and I am sure the Senator will agree with me—let the act die, we might have to reenact it in 3 or 4 months, or perhaps 6 months' time, and then we would have to go through all the necessary steps, insofar as placing the machinery in operation is concerned, to have the boys registered again. It seems to me to be foolhardy and more or less absurd not to continue the act, because of the many contingencies which might be involved in the event we let the act die.

For instance, in the early part of the debate the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and I were talking about the 10,000,000 registrations which have now been made, and that if we were to let the act die and if we were faced with an emergency which made it necessary to place the act on the books again in a couple of months, or even a shorter time, those who have already registered would have to reregister, which would occasion confusion and chaos. It seems to me the Senate should pass the bill without any question at all, in the interest of orderly procedure, in the interest of national defense, and in the interest of what is the best thing for the country.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. While it may be absurd not to continue the Draft Act, as the majority leader said, yet I call attention to the fact that the House had an entirely different opinion apparently respecting how to proceed.

Mr. CAIN. The House did. Will the Senator permit me to say with reference to the contribution made a minute ago by the able senior Senator from Illinois that, if I understood him correctly, he said, "This is the way I, as an individual, look at this question." It happens that the Senator from Washington strongly shares the views expressed by the majority leader. That is not to say that others ought not to dissent from those views and have positive views of their own on the same question. It is true that there is a fundamental difference between the version of a continuing Selective Service Act as between the House and the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. The House takes the position that Congress should be the controlling agency rather than the President of the United States.

Mr. CAIN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. That is not so absurd, is it?

Mr. CAIN. In my opinion it is certainly a defensible position to take for those who believe in it. The Senator from Washington, who happens to be a member of the Armed Services Committee, thinks that circumstances which prevail require that we continue the necessary authority in the hands of the President.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The House bill contained a provision, did it not, to extend the Draft Act for a period of 2 years instead of 3 years?

Mr. CAIN. That is quite correct.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the point I was making earlier.

Mr. CAIN. Certainly, and I merely gave it as my individual opinion that 3 years was more adequate than 2; but I do not press the opinion strongly.

Mr. WHERRY. One more question in relation to the observations made by the Senator from Washington to the effect that continuing the Draft Act would induce boys to volunteer in the service. Have enlistments on a voluntary basis increased or decreased during the past 6 months as compared with the first year of the operation of the act?

Mr. CAIN. With the Senator's permission, I should like to ferret out the record regarding that matter and give the Senator a completely accurate answer to his question. All I can say now is that within a very few months following the passage of the Selective Service Act of 1948, enlistments began to increase in an amazing fashion.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. CAIN. Whether the full degree of that increase is continuing today, I am not qualified to say accurately. So I hope the Senator will permit me to obtain the correct answer to his very legitimate question.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the answer, if the Senator can furnish it for the RECORD. Of course, I am not a member of the Armed Services Committee, and that is why I am asking these questions.

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. The answers are not to be found in the printed hearings.

I am told that enlistments have fallen off. I should like to know whether there is a reason for that. Could it be for the reason that the draft is about to end, unless it is further extended by the Congress? In other words, are the inducements sufficient to keep the number of enlistments up to a satisfactory point? Is the pay sufficient?

Mr. CAIN. We shall provide the Senator with whatever the answer to that question actually is.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understood the debates when the act was passed, it was that if there were sufficient inducements in the way of pay and opportunities for training and advancement, there would be ample enlistments and there would be no need for the draft. I do not wish to repeat those arguments, but I wish to find out whether the Senator feels that enlistments would increase if the draft were ended or if the draft were continued. I should like to find out whether the Senator believes that under those inducements or under any inducements at all—if the pay were increased or if further opportunities were provided—sufficient numbers of men would be induced to make service in the Armed Forces their career.

Mr. CAIN. I can reply by saying that if the draft act is permitted to expire, none of the armed services will be able to maintain their present strength as a result of having volunteers enter the services. On the basis of my own experience, and from what history tells us, I am absolutely certain that is the case.

I think it is a distressing fact—but it should be stated, for I believe it to be true—that no nation in the history of the world has ever been able to maintain an adequate military force in the absence of a selective service system or of a conscription act of some kind. History tells us that, through the ages, people have not volunteered in sufficient numbers for military duty, unless there was imposed upon them some obligation, by direction or by indirection, so to do.

Perhaps I should say parenthetically that, if we could, we should induce enough men and women everywhere to voice their opposition to war openly, and then the end of war would be in prospect, for then we could not get enough men and women to fight. Many of us who today recommend an extension of the Selective Service Act, because we are faced with a reality and not a theory, are foremost among those who hope that some day there will be no need, in America or any other country, either for a Selective Service Act or for war itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield the floor?

Mr. CAIN. Yes, Mr. President; I yield the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in the early part of the afternoon, I addressed the Senate on the question of the possibility of reaching a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to this bill some time later.

It is now 20 minutes of 5. I think the issue has been debated all afternoon. If we could obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to have the Senate vote on the bill sometime tomorrow, I should certainly like to have that done.

I am wondering whether the minority leader or the Senator from Georgia could give me any indication as to whether we might be able to obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to vote sometime tomorrow afternoon.

I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to prolong this debate. However, some amendments are being peddled around to which some Senators on this side of the aisle are very much opposed. I do not see how we could agree, in the absence of an understanding that these amendments would be tabled or that they would not be adopted. Apparently the amendments are germane to the subject matter, although they are not directly related to the continuation of the Selective Service Act.

I have discussed that situation with several of my colleagues. In the absence of some understanding about those amendments, I would be very loath to agree to a time to vote.

I would be glad to agree to a time to vote on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois for himself and some of his colleagues.

However, as to a final vote, unless we have some protection against the amendments, to which I have alluded, which, although germane, are irrelevant to the subject-matter of the bill, I do not see how we could agree now upon a time when the Senate would vote on the bill.

If we can have assurance from the majority leader and any substantial number of Senators that the amendments will be tabled or will not be adopted to the bill, I shall be willing to arrive at some understanding.

However, in the absence of such assurance, I do not see how we can reach a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LUCAS. I wonder whether we can move on and can obtain a vote on the pending amendment. Then we can determine whether there are to be further amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. That course will be perfectly agreeable to me, Mr. President.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite satisfied that so far as the membership on this side of the aisle is concerned, there will be no objection to entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote sometime tomorrow, provided the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] can be assured that he will have ample time to make some remarks about the bill. He is the only Senator I know of at this time who would like to speak. He would like to be assured of having that much time—not in the time to be allotted under the unanimous-consent request, of course.

In other words, if we could enter into a unanimous-consent agreement for a vote to be had at, let us say, 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, with the time between 3 and 5 o'clock tomorrow to be divided between the proponents and the opponents, and if the Senator from Utah could be assured of having sufficient time to deliver his remarks—and his speech will not be too long—I would have no difficulty, so far as I am concerned, in regard to reaching a unanimous-consent agreement.

I realize that it is difficult to guarantee that any Senator will be recognized to speak at any particular time. However, the Senator from Utah would like very much not to have to deliver his speech tonight, for he has not finished preparing it.

I submit to the majority leader that we took up this measure only a few hours ago. Although I wish to cooperate in every way, and will do so, to bring this bill to an early vote, yet the Senator from Utah is asking for additional time in order to be able to get his remarks ready for delivery tomorrow.

I should be perfectly agreeable to entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote tomorrow at some time that would please the majority leader. I have suggested 5 o'clock, with a division of the time. If the time can be divided so that the Senator from Utah can be included, we can even agree on that. I want the majority leader to know that.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I announced earlier in the afternoon—in fact, I announced yesterday—that we would probably have a night session, if we could not get some sort of a unanimous-consent agreement. There is no reason, it seems to me, why we cannot finish the bill. The Senator from Utah, as I recall, was ready to speak earlier this afternoon. At least, someone told me he was. I have announced at least three times within the past week that this bill would be taken up following the disposition of the conference report, which was disposed of today. The Senator from Utah may be very busy in connection with other matters, and he no doubt should have more time. But, after all, Mr. President, this is an important piece of legislation. The only reason the Senator from Illinois even suggested that we might have a night session was because of the deadline which exists.

I say, Mr. President, in all seriousness, that there is a crisis so far as the Selective Service Act is concerned, and under no circumstances can the Senate get away from here until we either pass the pending bill or pass a joint resolution continuing the present law for the next 30 days. We have only until Saturday night to do that. As majority leader of the Senate, I cannot take the responsibility, and the Senate cannot take the responsibility, in my opinion, for letting the country down on an important question of this kind at this particular juncture in the affairs of the world. Senators, it seems to me, should realize the situation and look at the picture as it exists.

I know there is some difference between the House version of what ought to be done and the Senate version, with respect to delegation of power to the President, and with respect to retaining the power in the Congress. I did not mean to say a moment ago that that is an absurd position for any Senator to take. What I meant was that it is absurd to think that the Senate will not act, between now and midnight Saturday, on an important piece of legislation of this kind. That is the point I made a moment ago. I believe we shall act.

Mr. McFARLAND and Mr. WHERRY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield first to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to suggest that we might be able to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois at 7 o'clock this evening, and then try to get an agreement to convene at 11 o'clock tomorrow and to vote at 2 o'clock. That would give time, after the vote, to enable the Senator from Georgia to get the assurance he wants, and would give time for the Senator from Utah to make his speech tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. How many amendments to this bill are involved? I do not have that information on my desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are only two amendments involved. They are identical amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. There are but two amendments, and they are identical?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, it may be that a Senator may yet offer an amendment. Such a thing frequently occurs. I want to state to the majority leader that Senators on this side of the aisle are perfectly willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the pending measure at 5 o'clock tomorrow. The only request the junior Senator from Nebraska made was that the distinguished Senator from Utah be permitted to make his speech. That is not an unusual request. The Senator is not prepared to make his speech tonight. I should be glad to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement along the line suggested by the Senator from Arizona. I think that so far as this side is concerned, we are perfectly willing to vote on the so-called Russell amendment whenever the Senate desires to vote on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Or, we are perfectly willing to vote at 5 o'clock tomorrow night on the bill and all the amendments, including any amendment which may be offered. I should like to stipulate a division of the time, in order that the distinguished Senator from Utah may be included and may have time in which to make his speech.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in view of what the distinguished Senator from Georgia said a moment ago, it is impossible to obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 5 o'clock tomorrow on the bill and all the amendments thereto.

Mr. McFARLAND. Why not enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on this amendment at 7 o'clock this evening. We will have made that much progress. By that time, perhaps we can obtain unanimous consent to vote tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. I should be glad to vote at 7 o'clock, or even at 6 o'clock, upon this amendment, and then move a recess until tomorrow, to come back and finish the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. That is agreeable.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the only agreement it is possible to get at the present time. In view of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, no unanimous-consent agreement could be made. I made inquiry about the amendments, because I thought we might——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I want it to be perfectly clear, for I do not want the majority leader to be deceived, that there will be perhaps one or two other amendments offered to the bill, but I do not think they will require more than 10 or 15 minutes for debate.

Mr. LUCAS. I was under the impression that this was the only amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is the only amendment pending. I wanted the Senator, in arriving at his conclusion as to the course he would pursue, to be informed of all the facts I have in my possession. I think very likely there will be another amendment offered, but I am quite sure it will not require more than 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state for the RECORD that this is the only amendment which has been printed.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Chair made that perfectly clear, when he stated the two similar amendments were the only ones on the desk which had been printed. But I happen to know there is another amendment which undoubtedly will be offered. It will not delay the final vote on the bill more than 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, my reason for making the inquiry was that I thought perhaps, if there were one, two, or three amendments, we might obtain unanimous consent to vote on them, and no other amendments, and we could then probably get the agreement the Senator from Georgia was interested in. We cannot do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was quite clear to the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the pending amendment at 6 o'clock tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think that at least there should be some agreement as to the division of time. I do not mind saying that my remarks on this amendment, if we operate under a time limitation whereby I shall not be able to yield, should not require more than 25 or 30 minutes. But there may be other Senators who will want to speak on this matter. Under the rules, we are supposed to have a quorum call before we enter into the unanimous-consent agreement, are we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that that only applies to the final passage of a bill, not to a vote on an amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. So far as I am concerned, I might be willing to vote by 6 o'clock. But the Senator from South Carolina indicated he had a short speech he wanted to make on the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote upon the pending amendment not later than 6:30 this evening, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention, then, that after that amendment has been voted on the Senate shall recess until tomorrow?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. If we can get this amendment out of the way, I shall move to recess until 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. In order that we may get the matter straightened out, are we to vote on the Lucas amendment to strike out the Russell amendment? Is that the amendment we are to vote on? There are two such amendments. Have they been made one?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know whether they have been made one, but the amendments are identical.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest to the Senator that since there may be some Senators who would like to discuss the agreement, he suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant journal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hayden	Malone
Anderson	Hendrickson	Martin
Benton	Hickenlooper	Maybank
Brewster	Hill	Millikin
Bricker	Hoey	Mundt
Bridges	Holland	Murray
Butler	Humphrey	Myers
Byrd	Hunt	Neely
Cain	Ives	O'Mahoney
Chapman	Jenner	Robertson
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Connally	Johnson, Tex.	Saltonstall
Cordon	Kefauver	Schoeppel
Darby	Kem	Smith, Maine
Donnell	Kerr	Smith, N. J.
Douglas	Kilgore	Sparkman
Dworshak	Knowland	Stennis
Eastland	Lehman	Taft
Ecton	Lodge	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Lucas	Thye
Ferguson	McCarran	Tydings
Frear	McCarthy	Watkins
Fulbright	McClellan	Wherry
George	McFarland	Wiley
Gillette	McKellar	Williams
Green	McMahon	Withers
Gurney	Magnuson

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate for a few moments only on the pending amendment, upon which we have agreed to vote at not later than 6:30 o'clock tonight. This is an amendment which has been offered by myself, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senators from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON and Mr. BENTON], and I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] have offered an identical amendment.

I should like to speak briefly about the pending measure before I discuss the amendment. It seems to me that this is an extraordinary piece of sound legislation, with it the committee amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is eliminated.

I have attempted to advise the Senate and the country of the importance of acting upon the proposed legislation before midnight on June 23, which will be next Friday and I shall give some of the reasons which I am sure every Senator should take into serious consideration, in order to expedite a vote upon the measure and the amendments as soon as possible.

In the event that the Congress of the United States should permit the Selective Service Act to lapse, these are some of the things which would happen. First, 10,000,000 registrants would be void. In other words, even if the Selective Service Act lapses 1 minute after midnight on the 24th, all the registrations under the present Selective Service Act would be void, and the boys who have gone to their draft boards throughout the United States would be compelled once again to appear and register. I am certain that no Senator desires that in the event that he feels that a draft law of some kind should be continued on the statute books. Surely we do not want such confusion, chaos, and trouble.

In addition to that, the Presidential appointments of 37,000 unpaid local-board members and their employees, chosen upon the recommendations of the governors, would immediately terminate. In other words, the personnel machinery would be terminated, scattered to the four winds, and later if we were compelled to pass a Selective Service Act at any time hereafter, in an emergency, we would not have the advantage of this fine type of personnel machinery all set up and ready to go.

Third, the Presidential appointments of 54 area and State directors appointed upon the recommendations of the governors would also terminate immediately, and when those appointments were terminated by the lapsing of the act, it would mean that these area and State directors, who are familiar with what is going on in their particular regions or areas, would be out of office, and obviously we would not get experienced individuals to go along under a new Selective Service Act.

Mr. President, if the Selective Service law were to lapse a large portion of the aforementioned personnel would not be available for reappointment for personal and other reasons. This would mean that the Selective Service System, for the most part, would have to be reconstructed from the ground up.

Again in most communities office space is contributed without charge. This office space is in great demand, and with the termination of the Selective Service Act it would be devoted to other purposes.

These are facts and figures that my office has obtained from the office of the Selective Service in Washington, D. C., and I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of any of the statements I have made.

Mr. President, I lay this premise before the Senate of the United States to show the extreme importance of this measure to the country from the standpoint of the continuation of a sound and adequate national defense. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia has absolutely no place whatsoever in the legislation.

We have two versions of the legislation, one coming over from the House, which seeks to keep the control of Selective Service in the Congress of the United States, through a concurrent resolution if and when that becomes necessary. On the other hand, under the Senate version we seek to delegate that power to the President of the United States. From what I can hear there will be difficulty in conference probably in arriving at some solution one way or the other. We should not inject an amendment of this kind into an already difficult situation, as it seems to me, which will be pending when the matter comes before the conferees.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that the racial issue has no business in this bill. It seems to me the amendment dealing with that issue ought to be defeated without any question. The measure before us relates to national defense, and the question of racial discrimination through segregation should not, it seems to me, be presented here at this time.

The national safety and the security of the country stand above any and all amendments that may be offered along this line, or any other kind of amendment which might be germane but which is in reality irrelevant to what is before us at the present time.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Do I correctly understand that the law as it is now leaves the matter in a discretionary form with the military authorities as to whether there should be or should not be segregation in military units?

Mr. LUCAS. That is true. As I understand, the armed services themselves are doing a very creditable job with this very difficult question of segregation, and we should not in any wise, in my opinion, attempt to tie their hands with an amendment of this kind. I understand how difficult, how delicate the situation is. But progress is being made. In my opinion adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia would be a definite step backward. We cannot turn the clock back. We must make progress upon the question of civil rights through proper legislation and education.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Illinois, of course, is correct in stating that the existing law does not contain any provisions on this subject. But the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, has issued an order which changes the existing order and the composition of the armed services from what they have been since the birth of the Republic.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, that may be true.

I am not going to take any more time of the Senate upon this measure. I repeat what I said before, that this is a sound piece of legislation, that it ought to be passed; that the safety and the security and the defense of the country are involved in it. It is something that has been tried the last few years. It has been successful. No men have been inducted into the service during the last 18 months under this law, primarily because the law is causing the volunteer system really to work. It is the opinion of those who are members of the Armed Services Committee, and it has been repeated over and over again in the hearings and upon the floor, that once the law is permitted to lapse, it might be necessary that we induct men within a few months, due to the falling off of volunteering of men for the military services of the country.

Mr. President, I respectfully urge that Members of the Senate defeat the so-called Russell amendment——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois in his statement has said that he did not think the racial issue should be brought into selective-service legislation. I agree that it should not have been injected in the first instance. I am not bringing the racial issue into the selective-service extension. It is already here by virtue of the fact that, without the advice of military leaders who have had experience in commanding the Armed Forces and who have lived with the men in the camps and in the field and in actual combat, civilian authorities of the United States, by an Executive order, have injected the racial question into the Selective Service System and into the armed services.

Until 2 years ago, Mr. President, there was a policy of strict segregation in the military forces of the United States. The Armed Services Committee, in the consideration of the Draft Act of 1948, had before it some of those who were responsible at the Cabinet level for directing the policies affecting the composition of the Armed Forces as related to segregation. We were told that no drastic change was contemplated at that time. Within a few weeks after the passage of the bill, Executive orders were put into effect, and commissions composed of civilians were created, who overrode the views expressed by General Eisenhower before the committee as to the proper composition of the Armed Forces of the United States. These civilians claimed that the armed services were dragging their feet, and they insisted that the races should be integrated and brought together, from the squad level on without regard to the views of the men who are affected, at the time and in the manner indicated by a politically selected group of civilians, rather than as thought wise by the military profession.

The President's order said that it was his purpose to afford equality of treatment and of opportunity in the armed services. That is the purpose which is sought by the amendment which I proposed in the committee, and which the committee approved. The provisions of the amendment are so fair and so crystal clear that no Senator has made any direct attack upon it. The Senator from Illinois says that it has no place in this bill. The Senator from Massachusetts said that in his opinion it was unworkable. But no Senator has claimed that there is anything in the amendment that is unfair to one man in the armed services without regard to his race or to his creed or his color.

Mr. President, it is difficult to understand how so much confusion could arise about such a simple proposition. All the amendment undertakes to do is this: When a young man registers and subjects himself to the compulsion of the draft, or enlists, he has a right to say whether or not he chooses to serve in a unit that is composed only of members of his own race. It affords absolute equality to every man in the armed services without regard to his race or his creed. Some Senators who may think they are gaining credit with members of the Negro race by opposing this proposition might check with the rank and file. If many of them were given an opportunity to express their choice, I am sure they would express the choice to serve with members of their own race.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. The Senator from Georgia just mentioned testimony, I believe, given by General Eisenhower regarding this matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. What did General Eisenhower say regarding this proposal? Did he say it was workable or not workable?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, it has been proven workable for 80 years in the armed services. It is only when it runs contrary to the findings of the board or commission which was appointed and which has had no actual military experience that it is claimed it is unworkable. The policy of segregation has been in effect in the armed services for many years.

This amendment does not propose to destroy the new policy. It takes nothing away from the policy of integration. Every young man who goes into the service has a right to express a choice. If he expresses no choice, he is subject to integration under the new policy.

The old policy, which General Eisenhower said he thought was desirable, was to keep the men of the same race in units of a company or larger. General Eisenhower went into that matter in detail. I quote brief extracts from his statement:

> I personally have always stood since that time for organizing the Negro down to include units no larger than platoons. It does create certain social problems on a post because you always have men that do not like to mingle freely between the races, and therefore if you have a dance for your soldiers you have a problem. But I believe those things can be handled. They are not too difficult; particularly since we are going to have large posts, the social problem can be met without difficulty. I personally see no reason why he should not be amalgamated to that extent.

He went on to state that if we go further, here is the problem:

> In general, the Negro is less well educated than his brother citizen that is white, and if you make a complete amalgamation, what you are going to have is in every company the Negro is going to be relegated to the minor jobs, and he is never going to get his promotion to such grades as technical sergeant, master sergeant, and so on, because the competition is too tough.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. Does not the Senator think that if segregation were in existence in the Armed Forces, it would create more of an opportunity for the members of different creeds or races to rise to higher positions in the services? Would it not give an advantage in that respect? In this debate the members of the Negro race have been mentioned. Would not segregation in the Armed Forces give more of them an opportunity to become officers, an opportunity to strive to obtain the things they have been seeking?

Mr. RUSSELL. That was the effect of General Eisenhower's testimony, namely, that it was to their advantage to have separate units for the two races, that it enabled them to obtain posiions as noncommissioned officers and as commissioned officers—opporunities which they would not have under other circumstances.

Mr. FREAR. Does the able Senator from Georgia know of other high-ranking officers who concur in the opinion of General Eisenhower?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have a press statement quoting General Bradley, in which he stated that he did not favor the absolute abolition of segregation in the armed services, that the Army should not be used as an instrument of social reformation, but should be looked at from the standpoint of its efficiency as a military machine.

However, within a day or two after General Bradley made that statement, the President—who I do not think has had quite the military experience that General Bradley has had—issued the Executive order, which was in the teeth of General Bradley's advice as to what the Nation should do in order to have the most efficient military machine.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. FREAR. The Senator from Georgia did not state the date of the speech by General Bradley, I believe.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was in July 1948.

Mr. FREAR. The Executive order of the President was dated shortly after that, was it?

Mr. RUSSELL. As a matter of fact, I think it was issued a day of two before, because I have here another statement which says that General Bradley said he did not know about the President's Executive order when he made the statement. I should like to read this newspaper article:

> General Bradley, when he was interviewed at Fort Knox last week, didn't know the President had issued an Executive order on civil rights, so he spoke out for continued segregation. He hadn't seen newspapers, and reporters put questions to him without telling him what happened. His answer was according to standard Army policy—up to then.
>
> Now Bradley tells friends that nothing in Europe frightened him as badly—when he found out about it.

That statement is carried in the newspaper I have before me, and it indicates that the two were issued almost simultaneously, but that General Bradley did not know about the Executive order at the time when he made the statement.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, does the Senator have reason to believe that either General Eisenhower or General Bradley has changed his opinion about that matter since then?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no reason to believe so. I may say, however, to a man in the military service, who has been accustomed to military discipline over a long period of years, any statement from a man higher up is most persuasive; and that might be particularly so when there was an order from the Commander in Chief to change the policies of the Army. That does not absolve the Congress of its responsibilities.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. FREAR. I am sure the able Senator from Georgia is familiar with what is known as a conscientious objector, in relation to service in the Armed Forces. I wonder whether the Senator would mind at least enlightening me as to what difference there would be or what privilege a conscientious objector would have, as regards the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Delaware has brought out a point which, to my mind, is absolutely persuasive, or should be, to any open-minded person.

When it comes to the matter of the creed or the belief of a man, we wrote into the law a provision that he is not even to be compelled to serve in the Armed Forces under any circumstances. We respect his creed. Yet, in the name of equality, this amendment of the Senator from Illinois and the present policy proposes to strike down the inherent feeling in the hearts and minds of men that they prefer to live, serve, and, if need be, to face the enemy and to die in the company of their own kind.

The Senator from Delaware has put his finger upon the weak point in any argument in favor of striking this provision out of the bill. For the sake of a man's creed we give him exemption, but when he has a racial instinct, a preference to sleep and eat and die, if need be, with the members of his own race, with his own kind, there is an attempt to say that he cannot do so, because the President has issued an Executive order which would change the custom which has prevailed in the Army for 80 years.

I thank the Senator for bringing up that point. To my mind, he has made a great contribution to all the arguments as to why this amendment should be sustained.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator from Delaware for his splendid contribution.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Will the Senator read into the RECORD the President's Executive order, so that all who read the RECORD may see how extensive the order is and how mandatory it is, if it is mandatory?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have all the orders before me. The President issued a series of them. All of them are in the pamphlet which is before me and which I believe Senators have on their desks. They are included in the report by the President's committee, a civilian committee, composed of "General" Fahy, "General" Palmer, "General" Sengstacke, "General" Granger, and "General" Stevenson, who overrode the suggestions of the military. They consider the Executive order to mean that men shall be brought together in the most intimate relations of life on the squad level.

I may say, Mr. President, that there are no more intimate relations between men on this earth than the relations between boys who are taken from their homes and required to serve in the military forces, and to serve there on the squad level. They have to eat and sleep together. Such little recreation as they are able to enjoy, they have to take together. Under the harsh compulsions of military law, they are forced into the closest of associations from day to day. They have very few privileges. They do not have any wide circle of associations in which they can discuss the little things that are important to them—such as the letters they receive from home. In their hopes and plans and aspirations for the future, they have only the members of their own squad or their own platoon with whom they can discuss those matters.

That might sound trivial to the Members of this body, but it means everything to the 19-year-old and 20-year-old boys whom we are proposing to draft under the provisions of this bill. Certainly it is a very small right to extend to them, to allow them to express a preference in regard to whether they shall carry on that service at the unit level with the members of their own race.

As I have said, Mr. President, this amendment carries out the theory of the President of equality of treatment and opportunity in the armed services, because the amendment extends the same right to every man who serves in the armed forces. Let anyone point out where this amendment discriminates against a single American citizens on account of his race or his creed.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I believe I can point out definitely where it does.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well; let the Senator do so, if he can.

Mr. GILLETTE. I believe it does so, because of the exemption that is written into the amendment in the case of a race which comprises less than 1 percent of the 150,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is no new discrimination, because there has never been anything about that in the armed services.

Mr. GILLETTE. But the esteemed Senator asked to have pointed out to him a single instance where there was a discrimination against one member of a race.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the percentage should go down to fourteen one-hundredths of 1 percent, there may be——

Mr. GILLETTE. No; it is 1 percent.

Mr. RUSSELL. But it so happens that of those with less than 1 percent, the largest was fourteen one-hundredths of 1 percent.

Mr. GILLETTE. Is the Senator speaking of the Indian race?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am speaking of those of Japanese descent.

Mr. GILLETTE. Was that applicable to the Japanese?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Indian race has always been considered and carried along with the regular units of the Army.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes; but they are listed by the Census Bureau as a separate race, which the Senator has written into this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Perhaps the Senator is right about that. If he is, I should be glad to have adopted an amendment that would correct it, if there is any defect. I do not think there is. It does not alter the present system. Wherein does it discriminate, then, against them?

Mr. GILLETTE. Is the Senator addressing a question to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator just called attention to the close association of men in the military unit.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. I understand he said they should be authorized to have relationship with men of their own type or race.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. And then the Senator followed that with a question.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator challenged anyone to call attention to any men who were deprived of that under this amendment.

I called attention to the fact.

Mr. RUSSELL. They are not deprived of it.

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes; the members of the Indian race are.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; the Army can still do it, and the Army did it—one of the greatest fighting outfits that was in the Army in the last war were the Nisei combat teams. They were composed of those of Japanese ancestry who were born in this country. They were brought together by the Army and kept together through the whole war. There is nothing in the world in this amendment that prevents that. They wrote a glorious page in American history, with their courage. They never failed to take an objective that they were ordered to take. They constituted one of the great fighting outfits of the American Army, and they did not complain, either, because it was said they were segregated. They looked around and saw they had guns just like any other American soldier, they had a uniform just like any other soldier, they received the same mess as any other American soldier. They looked at the man at the side, and there was another Nisei, and that was good enough for them. They went ahead and they carried every objective that they were ordered to take.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment does not work to the injury or detriment of anyone. It is a true civil rights provision. It extends to every young man of whatever race the identical rights. If he is to be subjected to the compulsions of the law, this provision allows him the right to express a preference of association during that service. This amendment does not deny any citizen the right to serve in a mixed unit, if he so desires. If the registrant does not express an affirmative preference, he may be, and undoubtedly will be, assigned to mixed groups in accordance with the President's order. That is all that is involved in this amendment. It is fundamentally fair and American.

The enactment of this bill will mean that thousands of young American citizens will be compelled to forego the opportunities of civilian life for almost 2 years. During that time they will serve under military discipline and military law in the armed forces of their country. They are entitled to every right of the American citizen which is consistent and compatible with the maintenance of an efficient military establishment. They should not be treated as criminals who have been convicted of a felonious offense. They should be allowed every measure of autonomy or independence which is consistent with military efficiency. There is no conflict between this provision and the system which has obtained in our military services for 150 years and which has enabled us to emerge victoriously in every war in which this country has been engaged.

In some sections of our country there are people who for generations have traditionally conducted their daily lives according to a certain pattern. For years they have gone about the daily business of eating and sleeping and enjoying such leisure and recreation as they know in the company of persons of their own race. This is a custom in many parts of our country in the daily lives of not only white people but members of the Negro race. I realize that conditions are not the same in all parts of the country. Differences in customs and habits exist and are a part of the heritage of each community. These conditions are, of course, not completely static. Through the process of evolution changes are occurring. Some of these changes are wholesome and are to the benefit of all. But these changes take time. They must be based upon mutual understanding and good will. Their success depends upon voluntary cooperation. They cannot be forced, and efforts to coerce people by law will fail.

The armed services themselves have been making gradual advances over the years, but until the last 2 years this program was on a voluntary basis. In recent months the program of so-called integration has been greatly intensified. This has been distasteful to many young men in this country who ordinarily would look with favor upon service in the Army. It has brought about a reduction in enlistments on a voluntary basis and will result in a great diminution of voluntary enlistments in the months to come. Those who have preferred not to subject themselves to the so-called integration program are not reactionaries nor bigots. They are not hostile to any man because of his race or color. But they have become accustomed through years of tradition and heritage to living certain phases of their daily lives only among members of their own race. The present racial program now being so vigorously pursued in the armed services at the dictates of those with civilian background, and without extended military experience, is too extreme for many people, black as well as white. They are therefore avoiding experiences which are distasteful to them simply by declining to enlist.

This is sure to necessitate the invocation of forcible induction into the services of many thousands of young men, if this amendment is stricken from the bill. These men will be compelled by all of the overwhelming disciplinary power inherent in a military organization to take part in a social experiment which is fundamentally and irrevocably distasteful to them. I submit in all earnestness that this is grossly unfair. It could easily result in young men being court-martialed, dishonorably discharged, and losing their citizenship simply because they were forced to engage in practices which are not essential to the maintenance of a military organization, but to which they are fundamentally opposed. Such a development would be shocking and violative of every concept of fair play and justice.

This provision will grant a very modest privilege to men who are required to give a great deal to their country. It does this without depriving any other American citizen of any right, real or imaginary.

May I inquire how much time I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this provision will have no effect on the progress already made in the armed service in the field euphoniously labeled integration. It will not prevent this program from continuing and expanding on a voluntary basis. Many young men from various parts of the country have no feelings on the subject and would express no preference as to assignment. These men could be assigned without any restriction.

The provision is intended simply as a reasonable safeguard to those who do have strong feelings in the matter. I submit that it is not fair to use compulsions of military court martial to uproot sentiments which are part of the lives of men when there is no necessity for doing so, particularly when these men are taken from their homes or taken from the schools by the arbitrary power of the law.

Mr. President, this amendment provides a reasonable and an American way of meeting this situation. It will generate a better feeling and understanding among all the elements of our people. The individual soldier is a small and a peculiarly lonely part of a great machine. He must obey orders or suffer the consequences. Only the very young are now sought for service. The Army seeks to get those who are from 18 to 22 years of age for actual combat duty. In all good conscience I submit there is no reason to force numbers of fine, young, but inexperienced men into situations for which they are completely unprepared, where the basic customs of their lives, customs which have nothing to do with the essentials of military service, are suddenly changed by military edict. These men are entitled to and should be given the wholly reasonable privilege which this section allows.

Its fundamental fairness has never been challenged. Even its bitterest opponents have been unable to point out where it does any violence to the rights of any race for a member of another race to express this choice in his condition of military service.

Mr. President, I do not see why those who would prefer to have their sons serve in mixed units can in fairness object to extending this fundamentally fair provision to other American citizens.

As I have stated heretofore, I have never heard or read the testimony of anyone who had had practical experience in handling large bodies of troops under combat conditions or in living in camps under military conditions who has ever submitted any argument that this so-called integration program would increase the efficiency and fighting power of American armies.

Mr. President, the Army is now far below its authorized strength. As this program of compulsory integration proceeds apace, enlistments will continue to decline. I unhesitatingly predict that it will be necessary to resume the compulsory draft of men into the military service within a period of months if this provision is stricken from the bill. Why is it not better to allow freedom of choice to young men who are willing to enlist, rather than to set into motion all the machinery of the draft and reach down into the homes and schools of the Nation and draft boys into the service, particularly when many of them would be serving under conditions which would cause them to feel that they were being mistreated and imposed upon?

That kind of feeling is bound to affect adversely the morale and the will to fight of men who are in the armed services.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this amendment does not restore or compel the policy of segregation, although that inference has been created in the press throughout the country. It will allow the integration of units to proceed and will also allow young men the freedom of selection without imposing upon any citizen or denying a single right to anyone.

Why is this bill being pressed for passage? Why are we called upon to extend this arbitrary draft power which is so abhorent to the fundamental way of American life in time of peace? It is because we are told that our country is in danger of aggression from abroad. We are told it is necessary to build up our armed forces in order to defend this country against attack. If that be the reason, Mr. President, let us build up the armed forces of the United States without a policy of compulsion on the young men of this land by forcing them to serve as guinea pigs in any social experimentation such as is embraced in this integration program, if it be against their consent.

Mr. President, for the Congress to use this draft program as a basis to compel distasteful social association when it is unnecessary to do so, in order to carry out the views and political promises of certain individuals who may occupy high positions in American life, is a perversion of the police power of the state, and it is an unnecessary perversion of that power.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] desires to address himself to the question, and I yield my remaining 5 minutes to him.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the proposal before us at this time is not new. Two years ago the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and I offered an amendment on the floor for which we had unsuccessfully sought committee approval. At that time I was a member of the Armed Services Committee.

It is gratifying to have it before the Senate at this time supported by the Committee on Armed Services. The purpose and effect of the proposal is clear. It merely seeks to guarantee to any individual citizen brought into the services the right to serve in a military unit composed of members of his own race where he makes an affirmative declaration of his desire to do so. It does not deprive any other individual citizen of a single right, real or imaginary.

As was clearly pointed out in 1948—and it is equally true of the present proposal—the legislation would assure every citizen entering the armed services the privilege of serving with his own kind if at the time of registration or induction he expresses his desire to do so. It does not discriminate against any citizen or group of citizens. It does not deprive anyone of any right. It permits the serviceman to serve in units composed of mixed races if he so desires and is ordered to do so.

As I have said, the committee 2 years ago declined to approve the so-called Russell-Maybank amendment. Essentially the same provisions now come before the Senate with committee approval, and I hope the bill will be enacted.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator, of course, recognizes that the reason the committee did not approve it was because of the assurances we received from those in positions of high authority that they did not intend to prosecute this program.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is eminently correct. No one was more shocked than were the Senator from Georgia and myself when the orders came out, after the testimony of General Eisenhower, to which I shall now refer.

In 1948 General Eisenhower appeared before the committee and declared that nonsegregation would slow the progress and development of colored boys who had been put into mixed units—that their advancement to the grades of sergeant, technical sergeant, and master sergeant is almost impossible in the face of competition from the better-educated, better-trained, and more adaptable white boys in the same organizations. At that time General Eisenhower was in supreme command of the Army, and his views were military, not political.

Mr. President, this is a Nation of many races, but we must not forget that white people carved it out of the wilderness, white people conceived this Republic, white people fought the War of the Revolution, and in victory they gave to the world the greatest system of free government ever known to mankind.

The decent, self-respecting people of this country, regardless of the section in which they live, are getting more than sick of all this kowtowing to a minority group which holds the balance of power in a few large doubtful States.

The wars of this country have been won by white soldiers, and I defy any Member of this body to challenge this statement. The Army and Navy have wisely attempted to utilize the Negro soldiers in the positions which they are capable of filling. Certainly there are some Negro soldiers and some Negro units which have demonstrated effectiveness on the battlefield; but by and large, Negro soldiers have rendered their greatest service as cooks, drivers, maintenance men, mechanics, and such positions, for which they are well qualified.

I believe that Negro soldiers should be educated and entitled to a higher level of service in our Armed Forces. However, racial pride alone should make them want to train and fight with a unit of their own people, and in distinguishing themselves reflect due credit to their race. They should not be content to hitchhike on the accomplishments of white soldiers.

A vast majority of the white soldiers and the white sailors of this country, especially in the South, will refuse to associate with Negroes in their barracks and mess halls; and, more important, no decent, self-respecting Negro would want to be forced into the company of people who do not want him. This amendment gives these boys, both white and colored, an opportunity to serve in a segregated unit if they so desire.

The pending proposal does not undertake to tell the Army or the Navy what they shall do about segregation, but permits the serviceman himself to decide the question.

If the Army adopts a policy of forcing our white boys to serve in mongrelized units, it will stir up such racial strife as can never be overcome in a decade. The progress which has been made up until now will all go for naught. I predict that the Army will be faced with a deluge of courts martial such as has never been seen. I visualize a conscript army of bitter malcontents.

Those who are agitating the breaking down of our segregation laws may think they are playing smart politics, but they are destroying years of effort on our part to improve the economic and educational status of the Negro.

Time will not now permit me to tell the Senate what the South has done, and what it is doing, to make the Negro a more useful citizen. Our economic struggle in the South knows of no color line. Since the War Between the States we have been up against economic disadvantages imposed upon us, which have weighed heavily upon both the white and colored people of the South. To some degree we are winning our fight for economic parity with other States, and as we do, the economic level of all of our people will rise. When this is accomplished, we shall have new and better educational facilities for all of our people.

Increased economic and educational advantages are what the Negroes in the South need, and that is what the forward-thinking people of the South are seeking to provide. Yet our efforts are set back constantly by misguided campaigns to abrogate our segregation laws and customs. It is easy to see that the Negro of the South is being made the victim of political by-play aimed at winning the Negro vote in doubtful States.

Mr. President, if there was ever a proposal to safeguard and guarantee individual rights, this is it. This amendment is basic. It strikes right at the heart of a fundamental freedom—the freedom of a man to live and work with people of his own choosing. The amendment must be adopted in the interest of harmony in the ranks of our armed services. It must be adopted as a guaranty against social controls by Executive order in an effort to break down our customs and established codes. I sincerely hope that enough Senators will see the wisdom of this proposal and that it will be adopted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. As Members of the Senate undoubtedly know, throughout my life I have been heart and soul against discrimination of any kind. I am against discrimination in employment, education, and enjoyment of political civil rights. I know of no discrimination which is more inexcusable than discrimination in the armed services of our country, a service in which men are expected to assume equal responsibilities, and in which all men are expected and are compelled to assume equal risks of life and limb. I hope with all my heart, and strongly urge, that this amendment, which has been presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to eliminate the so-called Russell amendment, which is included in the bill, will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, first of all, as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, I wish to speak in support of an extension of the Selective Service Act for 3 years. In the troubled condition in which the world finds itself at the present time I believe this Nation must be prepared under any circumstances to meet whatever challenge may confront it in the future. Such a challenge may confront us at a time when the Congress of the United States is not in session. In the atomic age in which we live, and in an age of the atom and airplane, it is conceivable that the Congress of the United States could not assemble immediately upon a serious situation developing in the world. For that reason, although I had some reluctance at first, I am inclined to support the provision in the Senate bill which would permit the President of the United States to bring the law into operation, if the need should arise, without congressional resolution so to do.

I am opposed to the provision which was put into the bill by the committee at the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. I do not believe that it would be a practical, operating feature which could be administered with any success. I do not believe that it would be any more feasible than it would be to ask every individual soldier in which State he would like to serve or train. I think it would be confusing from the point of view of discipline in the Army. Under our constitutional system we have a Commander in Chief, who is the President of the United States. Regardless of who the President may be, or what his party affiliation may be, under the Constitution he is still the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He has prescribed certain regulations for the armed services. I think it would be most confusing if the Congress of the United States were to attempt to establish some other standards in legislation of this kind and freeze them.

Although I am expressing only my personal opinion, it is quite possible that the President of the United States has attempted too rapidly to achieve the result he is attempting to achieve. I am of the opinion that many of the desired results can be attained much better by a process of gradual education than by trying to force the issues too rapidly. The fact of the matter is that such regulations have been put into effect, and they are operating very well in the Air Force and in the Navy, according to the testimony, and I believe they are operating also in the Army. I do not believe that it is feasible or practical for this type of amendment to be written into law, and I think to do so would cause confusion in the armed services at a time when we dare not have confusion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, some question has been raised about the date of Saturday, the twenty-fourth of June. In discussing the matter just recently with the legislative counsel, Mr. Rice. I asked him if he would write out his version of the termination date of this act. He believes that under the general rules of statutory construction an act takes effect at 12:01 a. m. of the day it is signed unless the time it is signed is placed thereon. If, therefore, an act ceases to be effective by its terms after 1 year, and such act was signed on June 24, without the time of signing being placed thereon—and it was not placed on the Selective Service Act—such act ceases to be effective at midnight on June 23 next.

Mr. President, if that construction is correct—and I have great respect for Mr. Rice's opinion on these matters—instead of completing action on this bill by the twenty-fourth, we would have to complete it by Friday night, June 23. In other words, we would have to go to conference with the bill, the conferees would have to agree, and they would have to come back to the Senate and to the House with a measure of some kind. As I said a moment ago, if that cannot be done, it is absolutely necessary, and in fact indispensable, that a joint resolution, be passed so as not to let the Selective Service Act lapse. After we have concluded with the vote which we are about to take I shall move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, with the hope that we can finish consideration of the pending bill at an early hour tomorrow and procure a vote on it, in order to get it to conference.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Illinois will permit me to call up one matter which is not controversial.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield now to the Senator from Georgia if he desires to bring it up at this time, because no one else wishes to speak on the pending measure.

RELEASE OF CERTAIN POWERS OF APPOINTMENT IN THE CASE OF ESTATE AND GIFT TAXES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that Calendar No. 1851, House Joint Resolution 480, be laid before the Senate. I should like to make an explanation of it. This resolution also refers to an act which the Finance Committee believes necessary to be renewed for 1 year. The act expires on the twenty-third or twenty-fourth of this month. The joint resolution would simply extend the act for 1 year. It relates to the release of certain powers of appointment in the case of estate and gift taxes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that unless the act is extended it would terminate on the twenty-fourth of this month. Therefore an emergency exists and it is necessary to extend the legislation. May I ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia whether the only new provision in the bill is the year?

Mr. GEORGE. Absolutely; "1950" is stricken out, and "1951" is inserted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the joint resolution by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 480), extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Nebraska.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

